This committee has investigated some 20 or more unions which act as collective-bargaining agents for several million men and women employed in industries affecting interstate commerce.

From the time of its creation down to July 14, 1959, the committee held hearings on 262 days and heard the testimony of the 1,505 witnesses. The printed records of these hearings now cover approximately 20,000 pages. In addition to the testimony of these witnesses, the files of the committee contain hundreds of unprinted exhibits and tens of thousands of letters written by persons residing in all sections of the United States.

The testimony taken by the committee revealed malpractices in unions and labor-management relations which shocked the conscience of the Nation.

To be sure, the great majority of union officers did not countenance or tolerate these malpractices in the areas in which they had the power to act. Nevertheless, the testimony taken by the Senate rackets committee showed that such malpractices were sufficiently widespread in some segments of the union movement as to require congressional action to prevent or punish their continuance. After all, John Stuart Mill was right when he said, "Laws and institutions require to be adapted, not to good men, but to bad."

Since I had devoted so much of my energy and time to the work of the Senate Rackets Committee, it was inevitable that I should be deeply concerned with adoption by Congress of legislation adequate to deal with the malpractices revealed by our investigations.

Our investigations disclosed malpractices both in the internal affairs of unions and in the external relations of industry and unions. The Taft-Hartley Act, which was adopted in 1947, deals primarily with the external relations of industry and unions, and has been a subject of great controversy at all times since its enactment.

The testimony made it crystal clear that some or all of these things had occurred upon frequent occasions in the internal affairs of some of the unions investigated:

First. Union moneys in enormous amounts had been converted to their own use or that of their cronies by union officers whose duty it was to safeguard them.

Second. Union officers committing such raids upon union treasuries had destroyed union records to conceal their financial misdeeds from union members, income tax authorities, law enforcement officers, and investigating committees.

Third. Union members had been deprived of any real voice in the election of union officers or the management of union affairs by dictatorial activities of union officers, undemocratic regulations, wanton abuse of the trustee process, and even on occasion sheer terrorism.

Fourth. Persons convicted and sentenced to prison for armed robbery, burglary, extortion, and other infamous crimes had been placed in positions of authority over honest and law-abiding union members shortly after their release from prison and before they had "brought forth fruits meet for repentance."

Fifth. Union charters had been granted to known racketeers and their associates who had used them as devices to prey upon the public and helpless workers compelled to earn their bread in the sweat of their brows.

Sixth. Union officers and agents of employers had entered into conspiracies resulting in "sweetheart contracts" or other arrangements which constituted betrayal of the union members such officers were supposed to represent.

The testimony likewise made it crystal clear that there was a crying need for amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act to outlaw hot-cargo contracts, coercive picketing, and secondary boycotts, and to abolish the no man's land in labor law.

Despite the manifest need for legislation to correct abuses in both of these fields, I was convinced that Congress ought not to attempt to outlaw malpractices in the internal affairs of unions and to amend the Taft-Hartley Act in one operation or in a single piece of legislation. I took this position because I was convinced that a bill outlawing the six categories of malpractices in the internal affairs of unions would pass the Congress by a virtually unanimous vote if its provisions were restricted to that particular field and entirely divorced from all the controversy which had raged between industry and the unions in respect to the Taft-Hartley Act.

The so-called Kennedy-Ervin bill originally contained six titles. Titles 1 to 5 were well designed to outlaw the malpractices in the internal affairs of unions. They made union officers legally accountable for safeguarding union money, imposed criminal penalties upon union officers for willful misuse of union moneys or the willful destruction of union records, barred convicted felons from holding union offices until they had "brought forth fruits meet for repentance," prohibited union officers from arbitrarily using the trustee process and from conniving with management to the detriment of union members, and secured to dues-paying union members both the right and the power to select the officers and control the affairs of their unions. To be sure, title 6 of the Kennedy-Ervin bill, in its original form, contained several Taft-Hartley amendments which bore no relevancy to the other five titles of the bill.

When I agreed to cosponsor the Kennedy-Ervin bill, I did so upon my understanding that the bill was designed to deal primarily with the malpractices in the internal affairs of unions, and that a second and separate labor bill would be reported to deal with broad and controversial Taft-Hartley provisions.

As a consequence, I indulged the hope that I would be able to persuade the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, or the Senate itself, if that became necessary, to adopt an amendment deleting title 6 from the Kennedy-Ervin bill.

The Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, which considered the bill, rejected my recommendation to this effect. As a consequence, I offered an amendment on the Senate floor on April 21, 1959, to delete title 6 from the bill. The Senate rejected my amendment by a vote of 67 to 27. I found much consolation in the fact, however, that 6 of the 8 members of the Senate Rackets Committee recognized the wisdom of my proposal to separate the two fields of labor legislation and voted for my amendment.

After the Senate rejected my amendment and thus manifested its determination to deal with malpractices in the internal affairs of unions and amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act in a single piece of legislation, I voted for subsequent amendments to the so-called Kennedy-Ervin bill embodying the changes which the investigations of the Senate Rackets Committee had convinced me should be made in the Taft-Hartley Act.

To this end, I voted for Senator MCCLELLAN's amendment to abolish the no man's land in labor law by giving to State agencies or State courts jurisdiction of labor controversies in which the National Labor Relations Board refused to act; Senator MCCLELLAN's amendment to outlaw secondary boycotts; Senator PROUTY's amendment to restrict coercive organizational picketing; and Senator HOLLAND's amendment to give States the power to regulate strikes in public utilities.

In urging the adoption of Senator MCCLELLAN's amendment to abolish the no man's land in labor law, I made this statement on the Senate floor:

> Mr. President, we have a condition which is a stench in the nostrils of justice. It has been a stench in the nostrils of justice for years, and the Congress has met time after time and has done nothing to remedy it. This condition was brought about by Congress. Congress passed the Taft-Hartley Act and took jurisdiction over labor controversies from the States. After Congress set up the National Labor Relations Board, the courts said that since Congress had given jurisdiction over labor controversies, under the Taft-Hartley Act, to the National Labor Relations Board, the State courts could not exercise jurisdiction. As a result, we have observed people who had legal rights for which they could obtain no remedy. We have observed people suffer legal wrongs for which they could obtain no redress. I say it is a disgrace to any system of law for a person to have rights which cannot be remedied and wrongs which cannot be redressed.

In urging the adoption of Senator MCCLELLAN's amendment to outlaw secondary boycotts, I made this statement on the Senate floor:

> The investigations also show that in some instances the secondary boycott device has been abused with the result of absolutely wrecking and destroying the business of innocent persons who were not parties to the labor dispute and had no connection whatever with it. They have had their businesses destroyed, not because the unions had any complaint against them, but only because the unions wanted to practice indirect economic coercion upon certain other employers. Therefore, I say there is need for a clarification of the law affecting secondary boycotts; indeed, there is a crying need for such legislation. It is almost as great as the crying need for legislation in the field of labor reform.

The Senate rejected Senator MCCLELLAN's amendments to abolish the no man's land in labor law and outlaw secondary boycotts, and Senator HOLLAND'S amendment to permit States to regulate strikes in public utilities. It approved the Prouty amendment to restrict organizational picketing.

In urging the adoption of adequate legislation to regulate organizational picketing, I made this statement on the floor of the Senate:

> We have found that some unions have virtually ceased making bona fide efforts to persuade those who labor to join them. Instead of seeking by persuasion to induce workers to believe that their interests lie in joining them, these particular unions throw picket lines around plants and, in many cases, even hire persons who are not union members to walk in the picket lines. Their object is to force the managements of the plants being picketed to coerce their employees to join such unions, regardless of the wishes of such employees. According to my way of thinking, that is an interference with and a denial of the basic rights of those who work in the plants which are picketed. The investigations of the McClellan committee show a crying need for regulation of this organizational picketing.

When the so-called Kennedy-Ervin bill passed the Senate by a vote of 90 to 1, it contained provisions which dealt in an adequate manner with the malpractices in the internal affairs of unions. It did not deal adequately with coercive picketing, secondary boycotts, hot cargo contracts, and the no man's land in the field of labor law. However, it is well to remember that efforts to strengthen the bill in these particular respects had failed, and that the bill was the best bill then obtainable.

When the House adopted the so-called Landrum-Griffin bill as a substitute for the so-called Kennedy-Ervin bill, it modeled its provisions relating to malpractices in the internal affairs of unions upon the so-called Kennedy-Ervin bill, and added additional provisions dealing with organizational picketing, secondary boycotts, hot cargo contracts, and the no man's land in the field of labor law.

Since the Senate had passed one bill and the House had adopted another as a substitute for it, the seven Senators and seven Representatives who constituted the conference committee were afforded an opportunity to reconcile the differences between the two bills, and to recommend to Congress the adoption of a revised version containing the best features of both bills.

This the members of the conference committee have done in an admirable way. They have recommended to Congress the enactment of a bill which deals adequately with the malpractices in the internal affairs of unions as well as with coercive picketing, secondary boycotts, hot cargo contracts, and the no man's land in labor law.

I rejoice particularly in the fact that the members of the conference committee have dealt with the no man's land in labor law in adequate fashion by vesting in State agencies or State courts jurisdiction over controversies in which the National Labor Relations Board declines to act. When all is said, the most sacred obligation of government is that of administering justice.

In closing, I wish to observe that the chairman and the vice chairman of the conference committee, Senator JACK KENNEDY, of Massachusetts, and Representative GRAHAM BARDEN, of North Carolina, and their associates, merit the thanks of Congress and of the country for a necessary job well done.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, I shall support the conference report. That may prove to be of some interest in view of the fact that I was one of those who opposed the first McClellan bill of rights when it was proposed because I considered it offensive in certain aspects as a matter of law and that I was one of the very few members of my party who voted against the Taft-Hartley law when I was in the other body.

The reason I shall support the conference report is that I believe, on balance, it does certain of the things in the labor-management field which need urgently to be done and does not involve such dangers—if wisely administered—as to invalidate these constructive provisions.

Yet, the bill may do some things which may prove to be unwise or unduly repressive, indeed, punitive on unions. Some Senators have stated that they will be vigilant to see to it, if the law is not strong enough, using that expression in terms of greater restrictions to be put upon trade unions, that the law is strengthened. I feel that if the law proves to be repressive and punitive upon unions, I shall pledge myself, as one member of the committee and of the Senate, to be just as vigilant to seek to make certain that the unions are dealt with fairly.

I pay great tribute to the members of the McClellan committee, and to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], who have performed a national service in revealing the excesses and wrongs in labor-management matters imposed upon the public. I pay great tribute, which is deserved, to the members of the committee of conference under Senator KENNEDY'S chairmanship who have done such outstanding work. In paying tribute to the conference committee I wish to note particularly their fine cooperation in working out the problems of the apparel and clothing industries which are so important to my own State of New York. The recognition accorded to the integrated process of production in those industries as it involves the various groups participating in it illustrates clearly the fact that statesmanlike trade unionism is considered a benefit to our country and to its people and needs to be wisely and carefully safeguarded. The alternative to continuing present unionization practices throughout the integrated production process in those industries would have been chaos, the opening of new opportunities to sweatshops, racketeering, sweetheart contracts, and many of the various excesses and scandals which we are seeking to correct. I feel that my colleagues will regard this provision in the days ahead as a particularly constructive exercise of the legislative discretion.

Let us not forget that the trade union movement in the United States numbers over 16 million members. When we add up all those excesses and all the racketeering which takes place, they relate to a comparatively small number of leaders, as leadership totals in the trade union movement, and to a comparatively small proportion of the whole trade union movement itself.

And let us never forget that we are dealing also with the lives, fortunes, and economic future of millions upon millions of Americans. They, too, are entitled to our deep solicitude.

I think it was an extraordinary expression of statesmanship which dictated, with the complete accord of the Senate, that the Senate would not be rushed into blanket approval of the Landrum-Griffin bill as it came from the other body, notwithstanding the fact that all of us, including myself, had been inundated with mail upon the subject. But we used our heads—all of us—and sent the bill to conference. I think the conference report is a very much wiser bill than the bill which came from the House. I believe that labor can live with this bill. I believe it has certain strong points in the interest of the country. Points which are urgently needed in terms of the national interest and the people.

For example, I think the attention paid by Congress to internal democracy within unions, and incorporated in those sections which deal with the bill of rights, elections, and trusteeships, and the attention being paid by Congress to the need for the higher standards of fiduciary responsibility and for the highest type of public information, which are contained in the sections on reports, are of the greatest importance to the country and the trade union movement.

I think the philosophy which underlies the Governmental policy of the United States in terms of trade unions that they have been very important assets to the forward march of our standards of living and the productive processes in our country. They have helped make America great. I do not think any of those of us who have served in the Armed Forces can ever forget the services rendered by those who worked at the benches and at the lathes, and in those ways contributed of their very best for the benefit of all the people of the Nation in times of grave national peril.

Therefore, we who consider trade unionism an extremely important aspect of the life of the Nation believe that it needs to have built into the law, responsibility. Therefore, the bill calls for responsibility; and, at the same time, it permits of the exercise of economic power by trade unions; and it recognizes that trade unions and, in many cases, membership in them are indispensable to the economic life of the workingman. Certainly that is true when there are union shops in collective bargaining agreements.

What is disquieting about the pending measure are some of the provisions which have been referred to by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] in his most interesting speech—and certainly it was an interesting one—even if not all of us agree with everything he had to say.

I believe the bonding provisions in the pending measure may prove to be far more difficult actually to meet than can be determined at this time.

I also have very grave reservations about the no-man's land provisions, which place jurisdiction in the State courts and State agencies, many of which are without any State law or State procedure in labor relations matters on which to rely.

I also think the innovations by means of the restrictions of picketing—and we must never forget that picketing involves the constitutional rights of free speech and free association, as accepted activities of the trade unions—will require very careful scrutiny as our experience with them progresses.

Let us never forget that America is forever identified with the right of free speech as a part of our Constitution. By means of the pending measure, we are placing some restrictions on those rights. At first glance, those provisions of the bill may appear to be rather arbitrary—for example, when we try to state that as regards a particular employer who is handling the goods produced by another employer who may be involved in a labor dispute subject to a strike, picketing is prohibited, except for publicity; and that in the case of organizational picketing, there are restrictions which allow picketing but only if it has no embargo effects.

I understand clearly how some picketing may have been practiced in connection with racketeering. But, at the same time, I believe we have to post warning signals for the people of the country and for those who will administer this law, lest these provisions prove in practice to be repressive or punitive on responsible unions, even though they are not intended to work in that way.

Among the other good provisions of the bill are those in regard to economic strikers voting in representation elections, regarding which there has been contention for a long, long time; and the provisions in regard to qualifications for office; and those which bar criminals and subversives from holding office in unions; and the requirements against conflicts of interest of union officials.

In short, I would characterize this bill as a can-do bill for trade unions, rather than as a cannot-do bill for them. I believe that its advantages outweigh its disadvantages.

Hence, Mr. President, I shall support this measure.

But I would be less than true to my convictions and I would do less than my duty if I did not post some warning signals at a time when emotions are running high in terms of proper reaction to the disclosures of racketeering and dishonesty which have been shown so thoroughly and in so important a way by the McClellan committee and other groups in the Congress. I would post warning signals to the effect that we must take great care lest we go much farther than the national interest would justify, in dealing with trade unions.

Mr. President, I conclude by stating that I think it behooves all of us who are of my point of view—and we are likely to constitute a majority of those in this Chamber—who value highly the position of trade unions in our economy, and to wish them to be properly recognized in the assumption of their proper great responsibility, as time passes, with more and more honor and more and more dignity and more and more participation in every phase of the national scene, including the governmental phases. I think it especially incumbent upon us, as we support this measure, to assume real responsibility for checking on how it works in practice and to realize that we must assume our proper trusteeship, in order to see to it that this measure operates in a constructive, not an oppressive, way.

Based upon those considerations, Mr. President, I hope very much that the Senate and the House of Representatives, and, ultimately, the President will concur in this measure, which has been brought before us in deference to the very strong views of a great body of the American people.

Certainly, all of us must have a deep solicitude for the real meaning and the real importance of trade unions to the Nation, and also a true consciousness, as legislators, of our responsibilities to the over 16 million union workers, who, with their families, constitute approximately 64 million Americans, or a very substantial portion of the entire adult population of the country.

It is in that sense that I urge that we proceed—in giving proper consideration to the other side of the coin—in the spirit of responsibility which we must manifest as we pass this measure.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, on Monday, August 17, I fairly well expressed my viewpoint in regard to this matter. At that time I participated in the 2-hour debate in regard to establishing the necessary parliamentary safeguards, so the Senate would have the opportunity to vote for something stronger and better than the Kennedy-Ervin bill, and so that the labor reform measure the Congress would send to the White House would be more effective than the Kennedy-Ervin bill.

Mr. President, before the Senate votes on this measure, however, I think it should be noted that this bill is in strict harmony with our American concept of a system of checks and balances, because it tends to restore the proper balance in regard to certain areas of trade unionism and certain areas of the American economy, where that balance has been becoming more and more conspicuous by its absence.

In certain areas there has been an imbalance as between the small entrepreneur or the individual operator, when confronted with the strong force of a powerful labor organization seeking to impose upon him from without its notion of how his institution should be organized and how his operation should be conducted. At times Mr. President, labor-management relationships have been out of balance because the employers are too strong. At times the unions are too strong. Either way lack of appropriate balance is always bad.

However, I believe that close students of trade-union legislation and of the national economy at this time must reach the conclusion that the greatest lack of balance in the trade-union area of the country today is not the lack of balance between employer and employee, or not even the lack of balance which comes so startlingly and so strangely, and with such terrible consequences at times, between the little businessmen and the big unions, but that the most significant lack of balance is between the power of the individual union member and the power of the labor boss who has authority over that member's destiny and over his economic life. Union leaders have often grown too strong. The control exercised by dues-paying members over their own affairs has grown too weak.

This proposed legislation, as presently before us, goes a big step forward in restoring balance between the right of the trade union member and the right of the officer or the official who functions as the top bargaining agent of his union.

All legislation, I suspect, is an evolutionary process. We have had the present type of legislation before us now for well over a year. It is noticeable, and I think encouraging, that the effectiveness of proposed labor reform legislation has grown steadily in scope and in degree as we have continued to wrestle with the problems and as more and more Members of the Senate and of the House have familiarized themselves with the difficulties involved in the present situation.

The Kennedy-Ives bill of 1958, we now look back on, with almost universal agreement, as having been a boy sent out to do a man's job. I hear nobody suggesting that the Kennedy-Ives bill of 1958 would even approximate the degree of effectiveness required of legislation which should be significant enough to accomplish major reforms in this difficult area.

Then came the Kennedy-Ervin bill early in this session—a much better bill than the Kennedy-Ives bill of 1958, but still concededly inadequate to do the job confronting us in this country now. It also is now an almost forgotten exhibit of inadequacy.

There have been discussions within the last hour or two on the floor of the Senate respecting the series of amendments which were offered, some, first, to the Kennedy-Ives bill, and voted down—and there the record of the vote on the rollcall speaks clearly for itself—and then a series of amendments to the Kennedy-Ervin bill, and voted down again—and there again the record of the vote stands for the research scholars to weigh and analyze. Those rollcalls have historic significance.

The important thing is that those significant amendments to the Kennedy-Ives bill and to the Kennedy-Ervin bill which were voted down were restored to this labor reform measure on that momentous date in history, August 13, when, under the leadership of Representatives LANDRUM, GRIFFIN, BARDEN, and others, on a momentous rollcall vote of 229 to 201, the forces representing rank and file trade unionists in this country and the forces representing a desire for establishment of proper controls and proper reforms in the whole field of the trade union movement scored a majority vote of 28 votes for the Lan-drum-Griffin bill. It was there and then that the basic decision was made. America wanted and America was to get good, effective labor reform legislation.

That vote broke the back of labor bosses in America and gave rank and file union members and the general public the corrective legislation they need and desire. After that the outcome was never in doubt. Tonight, we simply reaffirm the historic victory for common decency.

In the main, as has been said before, what we have before us tonight is 90 percent Landrum-Griffin and 10 percent, perhaps, the results of the original Kennedy-Ervin bill, and, in both areas, modifications and revisions and reinterpretations made by the conferees.

I think it should also be made perfectly clear, Mr. President, that this is not punitive legislation. In no sense is it antilabor legislation. But it is very markedly preventive legislation—preventing, we hope, in the future the type of abuses which have brought injury and unhappiness to so many in the past. And it is very definitely antilabor boss legislation, because it takes from those who prefer to be labor bosses instead of responsible labor leaders the undue authority which they have been accumulating and redistributes it among the rank and file trade union members, where it rightfully belongs. This is what we mean when we have argued so long and so energetically for a bill of rights for the American working man and woman whose dues support the trade union movement.

I know the honest trade union leader who practices the proper precepts of democratic procedures never need fear this bill, and he should not condemn it; he should welcome it as congressional approbation of sound policies that he has practiced in his union.

It is true the dishonest labor leader, the fellow arrogantly seeking more power for himself, the man whose main mission in trade unionism seems to be to perpetuate himself in his plush job, the Dave Becks, the Jimmy Hoffas, the William Maloneys, the Barney Bakers, the Johnny Dios, and their ilk and their like, can well be wearing mourning after passage of this measure, because the heyday of their unlicensed operations will have passed. They will be facing up to proper enforcement, I hope, of the reform provisions protecting the rights of individual Americans, whether they belong to a trade union movement or whether they do not.

Mr. President, as vice chairman of the so-called Senate Labor Rackets Committee, headed so ably and diligently by Senator JOHN MCCLELLAN, of Arkansas, I wish to say, too, that it also gives me a great amount of satisfaction and genuine gratification to see the victory for the working men and women of America about to be won by the passage of this bill. I echo those expressions as made by Senator MCCLELLAN a few minutes ago.

After well over 30 months of effort in this field, as a member of the McClellan committee and now as its vice chairman, I know, from my individual experience, the difficulties, the time-consuming toil, the abusive criticism, at times, encountered by all the members serving on the committee. As we stated in our first interim report, certain types of effective labor reform legislation were essential if the problems the committee disclosed were not to be continued in America.

It is good to know that all of those suggestions contained in the interim report have been dealt with by the legislation which I believe we are about to adopt by perhaps the most overwhelming vote in American history ever accorded a controversial piece of legislation in the field of organized labor.

If my prediction is correct, and a new record vote is set, it seems to me that emphasis in itself should go far toward urging those charged with enforcement of this act to be sure that it is implemented as effectively, as thoroughly, and as completely as it is possible to do. And it should also serve as a warning to labor bossism that rank and file union members are going to be protected in their American rights by act of Congress.

I hope, Mr. President, that the trade union members of this country, the honest, hard-working, God-fearing, decent men and women who earn their living with their hands and with their skills, workers who belong to the trade unions, who pay dues, and take pride in their unions, will get a copy of the bill we are about to adopt tonight. I hope they will read it for themselves, Mr. President. I hope they will not be content to accept the slanted interpretations which some labor spokesmen and some elements of the labor press are presently placing upon this legislation—elements in labor whose chief motive seems to be to conceal from the workers the manner in which this bill protects and magnifies and guarantees their rights; elements in labor whose main objective seems to be to set up roadblocks against the efforts of the Senate and the House to provide controls against the arrogant use of power by certain labor bosses seeking to perpetuate, not only their authority, but their careers in office. Some labor leaders even go so far as to try to determine and dictate how their members should vote for public officials and to practice "taxation without representation" in this country once again by making them contribute to the support of causes and candidates they would prefer to oppose.

I think that the men and women belonging to American trade unionism are intelligent enough, capable enough, and realistic enough to realize, having read this act, that it can honestly be said the chief beneficiaries of the legislation we are going to enact tonight are the men and women paying dues in the trade union movement of America.

This is a bill of rights for them. It does deal with certain other phases of our economy. It does seek to provide balance in other areas. It does seek to provide certain powers and authority in the regulatory features of government to prevent abuses of power by labor unions or by labor union bosses. But, in the main, it provides for the working men and women certain elements that they need and that America needs to keep the trade union movement straight in this great Republic and to provide democratic procedures in some unions which now restrict or preclude them. It provides for a system of reporting, for a type of fiscal responsibility, and for fiduciary relationships between the fiscal officers of the union and the members. It provides for secret ballots. It sets up the beginnings, at least, of adequate requirements for an honest count of secret ballots, once the ballots have been cast.

I think in those areas the law should be tightened. I think in the areas of providing an effective secret ballot, providing adequate nominating machinery for selecting candidates for office within the union, providing a system of counting ballots once they are cast—for expanding the areas in which men and women who belong to unions shall be assured that they can enjoy the right of self-government in determining what the union does—this is far from perfect legislation. I hope it does not prove to be inadequate but I fear it might. In those areas it does recognize the desire and the intent of the Congress to provide control over the American trade union movement at the place where that control should rightfully be exercised, in the labor hall, through democratic processes, with secret votes and honest counts and appropriate procedures, so that those those who labor with their hands and who pay dues to the unions shall not be denied any of their American rights or privileges by the occasional dishonest or arrogant "boss" who gets control over their destiny.

I want to say two other things before we vote, Mr. President. The first is, as vice chairman of the McClellan committee I have frequently deplored the fact that virtually all of our efforts in the field of the trade union movement have been devoted to the unions which are bad and to the union leaders who are crooked or corrupt or arrogant or dictatorial. We have not had the occasion to spend much time with those fine American trade unions which are good, of which there are many, or to discuss labor problems with the fine trade union leaders who are honest, democratic, and considerate of the views, the needs and the desires of the rank and file members who belong to their unions. There are many such fine and commendable labor leaders.

We find ourselves in large part, I suppose, involved in a situation which causes the sorry reputation to be enjoyed by the better type of dogs in America. A good dog these days never gets his name in the newspapers. The only dog we read about is the poor, stupid hound so dumb he gets lost, so his owner advertises for him in the want ads. The good dogs, the smart dogs, the obedient dogs, the home-loving dogs do not get any publicity. Their names do not appear in the public press.

So it is true that the bad unions have gotten the publicity. I think it is lamentable if it is also true—as I am afraid it is—that many people in the country conclude the bad unions are the typical unions and the bad union leaders are the typical leaders. That is not true. Those are the exceptions. But legislation always has to be written to take care of the exceptional case. By and large people are law obeying. By and large people do not need the restrictive hand of Federal legislation. But in this area we have to legislate because there are bad unions, bad union practices, and bad union leaders who do not represent the majority of trade unionism, but whose existence and activities our committee investigation has clearly disclosed.

I regret that some good and decent trade union leaders on occasion pick up the cudgels to oppose effective legislation to deal with this sorry situation in the areas in which it exists.

I have one other point, Mr. President, and then I shall close.

Mr. President, I shall do all I can to make this hope come true. I hope that next January, at the end of the month, the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field will expire. Very few people recognize the committee by its proper name. It is known as the Senate Rackets Committee, if one accepts the newspaper "jargon"; or it is known as the McClellan committee, if one follows the Senate practice of identifying a committee by its chairman; but its proper name in the books is the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field. In any event, by any name, I hope the committee will expire at the end of its present extended life. But before it expires, Mr. President, I hope it will pass and approve some resolutions in the area in which it has labored so valiantly for so long. One of them I hope will be a resolution to set up some kind of continuing mechanism to maintain a surveillance over the reforms we hope to produce by our act in the U.S. Senate of voting to agree to this conference report.

I think the legislative Committee on Labor and Public Welfare also has a responsibility in this field. I hope and expect it will exercise it. I hope and expect that if the legislative committee discovers deficiencies in one area or another, new elements of imbalance, it will propose legislative correctives.

I hope, Mr. President, that also we may recommend from our committee approval of an amendment to the La Follette-Monroney Act, the Congressional Reorganization Act, to stake out plainly for all to see, beyond any peradventure of legalistic doubt, the jurisdiction of the Senate Committee on Government Operations and its Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations to have the right, the authority, and the responsibility to maintain diligent surveillance in the areas dealt with by this labor reform bill. I think it is most appropriate that we should do so, because two of the keys in determining whether this legislation will prove to be effective or not are the Department of Labor and the National Labor Relations Board. It is good that a committee charged with inspecting and examining the operations of Government bodies should exercise its responsibilities in those two areas in connection with the Landrum-Griffin bill, or the conference committee bill, or whatever name is finally given this legislation as we finally approve it.

I hope that after the select committee expires the interest and desire of the Congress to maintain continuing surveillance and continuing interest in the labor-management field will not expire. Our continued concern is essential.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will suspend until order is restored in the Senate. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from South Dakota may proceed.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I will say, as I conclude, this brings to the end of the trail a lot of effort by a lot of people in both Houses of the Congress. I want to join in salutations to those who have produced this constructive effort.

Certainly there should be a word of commendation to the President of the United States, who took the unusual step of appealing to the country on television at a crucial hour, that the House of Representatives be encouraged to vote for effective labor reform legislation. His appeal met with success.

I think we will all be happy when the legislation has been finalized, and I join in hoping that it will meet the problems it is designed to solve; that it will solve and cure and correct the evils it is designed to counteract.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I intend to vote for the conference report. I wish to pay my respects to the chairman of the conference committee, not only for his labors in the present situation, in which he presided as the spokesman for the conferees and as the chairman of the Senate conferees, but also for the labor-management reform bill which was originally sponsored by Senator KENNEDY and Senator ERVIN, and for the management of that bill on the floor of the Senate at the time it was passed.

This has been a very difficult period for those who sincerely believe in the legitimate rights of organized labor. I know that members of the conference committee have struggled with the Senate and House versions of the bill in order to reconcile the differences. Frankly, there are portions of the bill as agreed to in conference which I do not agree with. But we are required to legislate in this field, and therefore it seems to me we have little choice in the matter at this time. We have before us but one proposal, the result of 12 days of argument, deliberation, and compromise, by the conference committee, and its report will, I am sure, receive an overwhelming affirmative vote in this body.

It should be noted, however, that this bill goes beyond the area of labor-reform legislation. It makes fundamental changes in basic labor-management relations legislation as well; and these latter changes in basic law are going to make it more difficult for the American labor movement to protect the interests of working people and to carry on organization of the unorganized.

Mr. President, for a long time I have been hearing a great deal about what is wrong with labor. On June 24 of this year I addressed the Senate on the subject "What Is Right With American Labor?" What concerns me as we are about to adopt this conference report and have it become law with the President's signature—and I gather the President will change his pattern for a while and not veto this particular bill—is that the people of the country are likely to be led to believe that the great free trade labor movement in the United States is corrupt and is run by selfish and dishonest leaders.

It is true that there has been evidence of corruption, racketeering, and gangsterism, which would make anyone sick at his stomach, and which is unworthy of this country or its people, and surely unworthy of the traditions of the trade union movement of the Nation. To those who have so tainted the reputation of the labor movement, I say they have committed a dastardly disservice to the cause of working men and women, to those who work in the shops and factories and work hard to make a decent living. But those who have so betrayed their trust are but a small and discredited segment of labor. Let us keep that in mind.

There are more than 16 million Americans in organized labor. They are in my hometown, and in the hometown of every other Senator. They work on railroads. They work in the mines. They work in the forests. They work in the shops. They work in the retail stores. They work in our steel factories. They drive our trucks. These same people are members of PTA's, churches, civic associations, veterans groups, and fraternal lodges. They are good citizens. They are the backbone of our country in peace and in war.

To be sure, there are some in the labor movement who have abused their power. May I add there are some in industry as well who have abused their power. There are some in public life who have done likewise. It should not be assumed that the labor movement has an exclusive monopoly on original sin.

There is no room for corruption in labor, government, business, or any other segment of American life. It is the duty of this lawmaking body to perfect the law so that it is just, fair, and sufficiently strong to be able to bring to the bar of justice those who are guilty of wrongdoing. I admonish my colleagues, however, to remember that a man is not guilty merely because someone says he is. In this Nation a man is considered innocent until proven guilty. Let that fact be remembered as Khrushchev comes to this country. In his country, a person is guilty until he can prove his innocence, if he happens to run counter to the prevailing power. In America the law is entirely opposite. We believe in the principles of Anglo-Saxon law which proclaim that a man is innocent until he is proven guilty in a court of justice before a jury of his peers. Many times it takes a long while to prove guilt, but I would rather have the abuse of the length of time that it takes to prove guilt than one abuse of dictatorial power in leveling a charge of guilt against the innocent.

Mr. President, the labor movement in this country has done great good for the Nation. I remind my colleagues that the labor movement was the first to speak up for public education. The labor movement was among the first to speak up for social legislation. The social security laws would never have been placed on the statute books by the Congress if it had not been for the labor movement. Workmen's compensation laws, the 8-hour day, health protection for men and women in industry and child labor laws are the product of the labor movement. And it has played a dramatic role in lifting the standard of living for millions and millions of Americans who have never even belonged to a union or paid a dime in dues.

Free organized labor has been good for America, just as the independent banking system of America has been good for America and good for American enterprise; and I do not believe in condemning banking merely because a handful of bankers put their hands in the till to take money that is not theirs. I am not for a Government banking system owned and managed by the Government. I am not for a trade union system owned and managed by the Government. I do not believe in accusing a whole group or movement of guilt because of the crimes, mistakes, or sins of a few.

I believe I speak for this body tonight when I express these thoughts. I do not believe there are many Members of this body who do not believe labor has been good for America. I do not want this body to vote on the conference report without recalling some of the great men of labor who have brought honor and distinction to the American people and to working men and women all over the world.

I listed some of those men in my remarks of June 24. One can hardly reflect on American history without calling to mind great figures of the American labor movement such as Samuel Gompers.

And have we forgotten William Green? He was one of the great citizens of our country.

Let us remember Philip Murray, a great labor leader, a man of deep religious faith and conviction, a clean man who fought not only corruption, but communism. He had to fight it, not in the Senate Chamber, where we are well guarded and well protected, but in the mines and in the factories, against the toughest lot one could possibly encounter. And I hope we have not forgotten Van Bittner, Alexander Whitney, or Dan Tobin.

These are great Americans, and there are many more. They are a part of the history of our country. And we are blessed with many great and devoted contemporary labor leaders and statesmen as well. They serve America well both here at home and also abroad. All over the world the Communist Party is trying to worm its way into labor. They are trying to do it in Cuba tonight. They are trying to do it in Latin America. They are doing it in Asia and in Africa.

What names do Senators think stand out as the champions of the free trade union movement in those areas? I will tell my Senate colleagues. They are the names of George Meany, Walter Reuther, James Carey, David McDonald, Al Hayes, John Lewis, George Harrison, William Schnitzler, Joe Beirne, David Dubinsky, Jake Potofsky, William Doherty, and Emil Reive. Those are good names, of good men, representing the good causes of good people, and I could name so many, many more.

I ask my colleagues to remember that trade unions were organized to give the working people of the country an opportunity to be heard economically. They were organized because of the tremendous power of corporate wealth. They were organized so that working men and women could protect themselves in the economic marketplace.

The trade unions found that they had to be organized, not only for collective bargaining, but for political action as well. They needed a voice in the affairs of this Nation.

The Nation must be made to understand that the Congress of the United States, in seeking to do what it believes is right and just and necessary, still respects the men and women of this country who are at the bargaining table for better wages and better working conditions.

The leaders of organized labor have been cleaning their own house. I remind Members of this body of the ethical practices committee of the AFL–CIO, headed by Al Hayes, of the highly regarded Machinists Union. That body has already expelled from the AFL–CIO one-tenth of its membership, because they would not adhere to the high standards set by the ethical practices committee. Can any of my colleagues name any other organization which has cast out one-tenth of its membership for illicit conduct? I daresay no one can.

I do not say this to condemn other groups. It is merely to say that when people cast aspersions upon others, they should be sure that their own house is in order.

I find a great deal that is right about organized labor. I like what organized labor stands for in terms of minimum wages for the unorganized workers. I like what organized labor stands for in terms of workmen's compensation, whether a worker is a member of a union or not. I like the fact that representatives of organized labor come before the committees of Congress and testify in behalf of better housing, slum clearance, and urban renewal.

Let me say to the Presiding Officer (Mr. BYRD of West Virginia) that I like the fact that organized labor says it is not healthy when 4½ million people are without jobs, in the richest Nation of the world. And I like the fact that the leader of the West Virginia Federation of Labor, Miles Stanley, is a forthright spokesman for social justice; and I know that both Senators from that great State [Mr. BYRD and Mr. RANDOLPH] agree.

I like it when organized labor says, "If there are hungry people in Harlan County, Ky., let them be fed from the abundance of American agriculture."

The organized labor movement has a well-deserved reputation, not for selfish interest, but for public interest. Let me say to my friends and colleagues from rural areas that organized labor has been before the committees of Congress, through its representatives, to support agriculture, forestry practices, conservation measures, price supports, and farm credit. Why? Because it is good for America. Organized labor supports mutual security. It supports a strong national defense. George Meany, president of the AFL–CIO is a great patriot and a vigorous foe of Khrushchev and all that he represents.

Organized labor has cleaned its ranks of communism, which is the evil of all evils; and it has done it on its own initiative through its own leadership. In Tunisia and Morocco, and in country after country, the free trade union movement of the United States of America is spending literally hundreds of thousands of dollars to fight communism. The AFL–CIO is doing it by the will of its members.

Why do so few people congratulate organized labor for such activity? Why do we not hear of the great things it has done? For every dollar which some two-bit crook has been able to steal from working men and women, the AFL–CIO has spent $10,000 fighting communism abroad.

Why do we not read in the newspapers accounts of building trades unions rebuilding a home that has been destroyed by a tornado or a flood? Why do we not read about hospitals that have received large contributions from union treasuries? Why do we not read about the many gifts from unions which have gone for programs of medical research?

It seems to me it is time that the news was balanced. We should be told of the good, not only the bad. It is big news when a crook is found in the labor unions. But I also say that it should be big news and good news—mighty good news—when a little local union gives $10,000 to a university to establish a medical research chair.

It is good news when a local union, like one in my own city of Minneapolis contributes thousands of dollars every year for research in the field of polio and maintains a polio research chair at the University of Minnesota Medical School. This does not get headlines, but when some business agent gets drunk and is arrested, that is considered news.

I say to the union members, I know of no law that can protect you from mismanagement. There is only one way to protect democracy in government, in a union, or in any other institution. That means that the people had better take care of their business.

If only 10 percent of union members attend meetings—and that is a good average—we can expect abuse of power. If only 10 percent of American voters vote, our democratic way of life will be placed in jeopardy. What America needs for democracy is a great outpouring of the public will and public sovereignty, through the vote and active participation.

If union members really want unions which will be effective and will protect their interest, they had better get to the union meetings. In my community, unions which play an important role in Minnesota, are respected and respectable. There have been a handful of persons who have brought some disgrace to the good name of organized labor in Minnesota. But I can say to this body tonight that in Minnesota the AFL–CIO is considered to be one of the stanch and respected private institutions. Its members serve on our board of regents; they serve on hospital boards; they are members of and leaders in our churches of all faiths; they are leaders in fraternal and veteran organizations. They give a full measure of devotion and a full measure of service to the public good and the public welfare.

Mr. President, as we vote on this conference report, I wish that a resolution could be added to say to the great leaders of American labor who have kept the faith, and to the millions of workers who have done the job and who have supported their families, communities, and their Nation, to the millions of workers who gave their sons and daughters to their Nation—I wish we could say: "Well done, faithful servants." I wish we could say: "Thank you." Because as we punish the wicked, let us praise those who have been good. As we chastise those who have erred, let us thank those who have walked in the paths of righteousness and goodness. It seems to me that that is only right. It is in that spirit that I shall vote for the measure before us, with a bit of a heavy heart, but, I may say also, with a sense of appreciation and gratitude for the fact that I live in a country where organized labor does so much for so many, even beyond its own membership, and in the cause of freedom and democracy.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I assure the Senate that I shall take only a few minutes. There are five things I want to say. First, I join in the tribute and the salute to our distinguished colleague from Arkansas, JOHN MCCLELLAN. Probably no Senator in a long time has performed such sacrificial labor. Serving a single committee with a large staff, day after day, and being fairly immobilized so far as the demands of his constituents are concerned, having scarcely the time to look after the administrative chores of his office, and doing it willingly and gladly, day after day, is really a mark of dedicated sacrifice on the part of a public servant. Tonight I publicly salute JOHN MCCLELLAN, an old friend with whom I served in the House long ago, for the service he has rendered to the Senate, to Congress, to the country, and to its people.

The second thing I would say is that in every conference the question of personal and institutional pride almost invariably arises. I have sat in many conferences when, on occasion, our friends in the House would say, if we undertook to draw the line too finely, "We must go back with something." Or perhaps we may have said: "We must go back to the Senate with something." Often the Members of the House would say, "You are taking everything except our shirts." I see the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] looking at me so knowingly. He has been through that experience many times in conferences with the House.

A conference report like that is not a matter of personal pride. It is not a matter of institutional pride. It is not a matter of whose name appears. It is a question of whether or not the ultimate consumated labor is in the interest of the well-being of the country; and let the pride and the chips fall where they will. I think that was one of the happy things about the conference. On occasions when we were still conferring, the question arose: "What are we going to call the bill?"—as much as to say, "What kind of tag will go in it? What kind of name will go on it?" or "What combination of names will go on it?"

I think we have sublimated that pride pretty well, both institutionally as it regards the Senate and as it regards the individual Members, for when all is said and done it is a case of getting a fair and adequate bill.

I think of the little story about the two cows which looked up while grazing in a field. They saw a milk truck go by. In huge red letters on the tank were the words: "Pasteurized, homogenized, standardized." The one Jersey cow looked at the other and said: "Makes you feel sort of inadequate, doesn't it?" [Laughter.]

Our whole problem was to produce an adequate bill. I think we drafted an adequate bill. I think we wrote a fair bill. I think we wrote a bill which, in considerable measure, will meet the challenges which are on the horizon of the country today.

I would comment with respect to the observations of my esteemed, beloved friend from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] as he spoke on labor, that we consider labor a party in interest—not only labor, not only management, but the public, as well. How do we contrive a fair bill, which in its application will redound to the interest and well-being of the country, unless we keep all parties in line to make sure that they do not get out of proper emphasis.

Fifty-nine years ago, when Arthur Twining Hadley, if I remember correctly, was president of Yale University, he was asked to make a prediction of what would happen in America in the next 50 years to come. He was one of many on a panel in New York to whom that question was addressed. Among others were Samuel Gompers, the great labor leader; William Jennings Bryan, and Jay Gould. Each one had his own estimate of what was down the road for another 50 years. I thought Arthur Twining Hadley, in the light of hindsight, was the one who came up with the correct estimate.

He said, in effect, "As I survey the growing tensions and some divergencies in my country, I am afraid that in 50 years we shall come to a time when group interests may become so pronounced, when they may become so dominant and so articulate, in such effective and organized fashion, that they could very conceivably jeopardize the type of freedom which has been our inheritance as a result of the sacrifices of the generations who have gone before."

We have seen that prediction come to pass. We have seen how people crowded the corridors while the conference was taking place. I did not quarrel about that. There were labor attorneys and leaders. I am quite sure that business was represented. I am quite sure that commercial institutions and trade organizations were represented. That is their right. Under the right of petition, they can come here, because this is the Nation's Capitol. This is the people's Capitol, where they shall forever, within the aura of freedom, have the right to come and speak to their elected representatives.

So I thought of this clash of group interests. We had it in mind. What we tried to do was to draft an adequate bill, one which will serve not one group, not one interest, but all of the interests which are involved. That should add up, I think, to the well-being of 176 million people.

I add one thought; then I shall be through. I think this is on the constructive side. I think it will merit some attention on the part of the Senate. In the bill we have delegated larger powers to the regional directors of the National Labor Relations Board. We have amplified their powers so that, particularly in Federal-State relationships, which we refer to as no man's land, there can be more expeditious treatment of the cases over which either the States or the Federal Government would take jurisdiction. Thousands of cases have piled up. Today a regional director becomes an important instrumentality in this entire scheme. There were 22 of them. There are now 23. I think the last addition was for Dallas, Tex.

When we consider the power vested in a regional director, it becomes extremely important to make sure that, first of all, those who are selected for that responsibility are equal to it; and, second, it is not asking too much to request that the Senate, which has confirmatory power, take a look at the regional directors, and have a chance to interrogate them, in order to make sure that they are objective in their viewpoints and that their background is such that in connection with these rather delicate controversies, which involve management and labor in an infinite variety of disputes, and involve the whole human complex, they will be equal to that responsibility.

So I believe we could well afford to modify the law a little, so as to require that every regional director, who will have that power which will grow as time passes, should be designated, and then confirmation by the Senate should be required.

Probably no Member of the Senate has been without the experience of receiving from back home letters stating that a regional director has been biased in one way or another. There is a way to make sure that men of responsibility and of character are selected, and, while we are about it, to make sure that they are adequately compensated, so that we raise the level and the status of those jobs and give them the dignity and the meaning that are coequal with their power and their importance in the scheme of things.

Mr. President, with that, I conclude.

I give a final salute to my distinguished and gracious friend, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the chairman of the subcommittee, who has performed such distinguished service. I also give a final salute to my disguished friend, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER], who has gone over the country, early and late—and in the process has almost divested himself of human energy—talking to people and carrying the torch. He has indeed been a torchbearer in this field.

And I salute all the other members of the committee, because in view of the friction and tensions which were so manifest when this conference was in being, I think we can take a large measure of pride in the ultimate outcome.

So, Mr. President, I hope that tonight the conference report will receive the approval and the endorsement of an overwhelming vote in the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference in Warsaw, Poland.

I also announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is absent because of illness.

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to announce, for the information of the Senate, that there will be no more rollcalls this evening after we vote on the pending measure. We shall remain in session, in order to permit Senators to make insertions in the RECORD or brief statements.

We plan to have the Senate convene early tomorrow. A speech is scheduled for the first hour; then we shall have a morning hour of some 30 minutes' or perhaps an hour's duration.

Then we plan to proceed to the consideration of the bill extending Public Law 480, on which we have a unanimous-consent agreement which provides for 30 minutes on each amendment, to be divided equally, and 2 hours on the bill. Some 20-odd amendments have been filed at the desk. Assuming that each amendment is called up, the Senate will be in session until late tomorrow evening.

On Saturday, we plan to call the calendar, and to bring up by motion some measures which are important, but which we hope will not be too controversial.

On Monday, we expect to have ready the report on the roads bill—which passed the House today—after consideration of that bill by the Public Works Committee and the Finance Committee, and after they have acted.

In addition, we shall have, we hope, the bill raising the interest rate ceiling on E-bonds and H-bonds, as reported from the Finance Committee.

I expect those measures to be under consideration in the Senate on Monday and Tuesday, for such time as may be necessary.

I expect them to be followed by the mutual security appropriation bill.

That is about as far as we can project the plans.

I have asked the minority leader what appeared to be the wishes of the minority, insofar as sessions on Saturday and on Monday are concerned, and whether they offer any hope, that we could adjourn sine die at an early date.

I am glad to inform the Senate that most of the Members of the minority and a very substantial majority of the Members of the majority desire to have the Senate work on Saturday and on Monday.

I know of approximately 6 or 8 Senators who have made other plans, and who will be quite inconvenienced by having the Senate meet on Saturday and on Monday; but approximately 50 Senators on this side of the aisle and approximately 30 Senators on the other side of the aisle are anxious to be here on Saturday and on Monday.

Therefore, in view of the expressed desires of Senators and in view of the fact that we have a very heavy backlog of proposed legislation yet to be acted on—including the road bill and the bill raising the interest-rate ceiling on E-bonds and H-bonds and the mutual security appropriation bill and other bills, I believe we should make our plans to be here on Saturday and to be here on Monday.

I wish to accommodate at all times the convenience of a majority of Senators. But since they have indicated their desire to work during those days, I believe we can expect that we shall have the road bill, and the bill raising the interest-rate ceiling on E-bonds and H-bonds, and, in the early part of the week, to be followed by the mutual security appropriation bill.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I did not hear the Senator from Texas say anything about a schedule for consideration of the civil rights bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Oh, I say "civil rights" three or four times every day! I have no schedule on Monday or Tuesday for civil rights legislation, I will say to the Senator from New York; but I will be here to hear him speak on the subject.

Mr. JAVITS. Very well.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE ACT OF 1959—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 51)

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1555) to provide for the reporting and disclosure of certain financial transactions and administrative practices of labor organizations and employers, to prevent abuses in the administration of trusteeships by labor organizations, to provide standards with respect to the election of officers of labor organizations, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered; and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference in Warsaw, Poland.

I also announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is absent because of illness.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] would each vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland, and, if present and voting, would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 95, nays 2, as follows:

NOT VOTING—3

Case, S. Dak. Church O'Mahoney

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement I have prepared on the conference report which the Senate just adopted may appear in the RECORD following adoption of the conference report.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BUSH

I was delighted to vote today for a strong, effective labor union-management reform bill which will help to protect rank-and-file union members and the public at large from the shocking abuses of power so dramatically exposed by the McClellan committee.

The weaknesses of the so-called Kennedy-Ervin bill have been largely corrected by acceptance of the essential provisions of the Landrum-Griffin bill dealing with "blackmail" picketing, secondary boycotts and the jurisdictional gap in labor-management relations. The conference bill appears to include the best parts of both the Landrum-Griffin and the Senate bills.

Experience with the labor bill has demonstrated that an outraged and aroused public opinion can overcome the strongest threats and pressures exerted by powerful union bosses, as typified by the abusive letter sent to Members of Congress by James B. Carey. Contrary to Mr. Carey's arrogant assumptions, the strongest demand for an effective bill, judging from the hundreds of letters I received, came from working men and women, including many union members. Passage of the bill represents a victory for democracy in action.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I wish to pay particular tribute and appreciation to Professor Cox, of Harvard Law School, who worked on this matter for 2½ years without any compensation, and also to Sam Merrick and Stewart McClure, of the committee staff. We are especially indebted to our counsel, Ralph Dungan, who has played a most important and responsible role in the formulation of this legislation.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I am glad the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts undertook to pay a compliment to the staff. I wish to pay a compliment to the minority staff as well. They are Trojans in every sense of the word, working early and late, willing to work around the clock, undertaking the difficult job of providing the language in which to clothe the ideas that we agreed upon in that conference. We salute every member on the staff for a job well done.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in view of the action just taken by the Senate, I think it is appropriate that the Senate meet this year on Labor Day. On that day I shall have the pleasure of reading to the Senate Perlman's three-volume work on the history of the American labor movement. I think that would be the most fitting way to honor labor on Labor Day in the Senate of the United States.

EXTENSION OF AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1748) to extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954—UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unanimous-consent agreement entered into with regard to the extension of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 not be effective until the Senate has concluded morning business tomorrow and until the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] has concluded his address tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 9 A.M.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it stand in recess until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the Senate convenes tomorrow there be the usual morning hour for the transaction of routine business—the introduction of bills, presentation of petitions and memorials, and so on—and that statements in connection therewith be limited to 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR MANSFIELD AT CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of morning business tomorrow the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] be recognized for 45 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND SPAIN

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, there has recently been an exchange of letters between the President of the United States and General Franco, Chief of the State of Spain. They are of particular interest in that they are further evidence of the close and productive relationship between our two countries.

I ask unanimous consent that these letters be printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Allow me, first of all, to thank you for your sacrifices and efforts to assist our Western World and to lead it along the path of peace and understanding and in particular for the aid and benefits that Spain is receiving from the United States under your administration.

There are many people who do not fully realize that in the present circumstances, lack of action, inertia and an exclusively defensive attitude would lead, in no time, to defeat, and that in today's situation, all contacts are useful which seek to unveil the immediate aims of our opponents. As for the general and permanent aim of universal domination held by the Soviets, I know, that such a great soldier and strategist as you yourself are, always keeps it clearly in mind. For this reason, I reject the view of those who, forgetting your personal record, are fearful of the consequences of your meeting with Khrushchev.

When the late lamented Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, visited us, we reached full agreement on our assessment of the general situation and on the needs of the hour. I have not doubt that the same identity of views will be reached at the forthcoming meetings of our Foreign Minister and Your Excellency and with your Secretary of State.

Your Excellency is well aware that Western superiority based as it is, on the industrial power of the United States and its ability to adapt it to the needs of war, could be weakened, should the Soviet Union develop fully all its industrial potential and Western Europe fails to reinforce its unity and its state of preparedness. The nations of our continent, as you well know, easily tend to disunite. I consider your presence here, your prestige, most useful in forging unity.

I cherish the hope, my dear General, that whenever the international situation permits, you and Mrs. Eisenhower, will in the course of one of your journeys, visit our country.

With confidence in and sincere best wishes for the success of your great mission, I offer you, the assurance of my consideration and friendship.

FRANCISCO FRANCO.

DEAR GENERAL FRANCO: Thank you for your cordial letter of August 24, 1959, delivered to me by your Foreign Minister, Mr. Fernando Maria Castiella, when he called on me in London on August 31.

I am of course pleased to know that you think well of the planned exchange of visits between Mr. Khrushchev and myself and that you clearly understand the basic thought that I have in mind in this connection.

I appreciate also your reference to the aid which we have extended to Spain in order to help our Spanish friends to assume certain responsibilities in defense of the West.

The agreements signed between our two countries in 1953 have produced good results for both of us. I am happy to have this opportunity to express to you my appreciation of the spirit of cooperation with which you have worked with us on the construction and operation of our joint bases. They are an important element in the common defense.

I should like also to congratulate you on the bold new economic program already auspiciously begun and on your membership in the OEEC. This constitutes another important link in forging the European unity to which you refer.

Your gracious invitation to Mrs. Eisenhower and me to visit your beautiful country so full of artistic treasures and historic landmarks is greatly appreciated. I hope that someday we shall have the opportunity to enjoy the friendly Spanish hospitality about which we have heard so much.

In the meantime, dear General, please accept my renewed thanks for your best wishes which are fully reciprocated.

Sincerely,

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

AWARD FOR SHIP SAFETY TO AMERICAN EXPORT LINES

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, in view of the outstanding achievements of the American Export Lines in their extensive operations, I think it worthy of the attention of the U.S. Senate to be advised of the award recently made on the basis of the exceptional record of the company in ship safety during the last year.

Adm. John M. Will, president of the lines, and who has had a distinguished career in the U.S. service, terminating in his role as commander of MSTS, accepted the award with acting Capt. Lief J. Christenson.

The steamship Independence, one of the company's outstanding ships, was winner in the passenger ship class for the annual award, and it is significant that an American Export ship has achieved this record for the last 2 consecutive years.

Ralph E. Casey, president of the American Merchant Marine Institute, presented the citation and referred to the liner's distinction as the "mercy ship of the high seas." Fourteen months ago the Independence, in command of Capt. Hugh L. Switzer, won widespread acclaim in responding to a call in the Atlantic for aid from an Italian freighter transporting a seriously ill seaman. On that occasion, Captain Switzer changed his course and in darkness and heavy weather sent over a lifeboat to convey the ill man to the Independence's hospital for treatment. As President Casey observed, the Independence has had numerous similar exploits in the past 8 years and, deservedly, the American Export Lines is receiving the plaudits of an appreciative public. Because of the uniformly splendid service rendered by the lines and the high standards of efficiency which have characterized their operations, I desire to add our appreciation for the exemplary operations which have brought their officers and employees general approval.

NEGROES DO NOT WANT FORCED INTEGRATION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I have told the Senate on many occasions that there is little or no sentiment in the South for forced mixing of the races except by the few Communists we have, militant NAACP members, and race agitators. I have also told the Senate that at the present time there is ample evidence to show that race agitation is the number one goal of the Communist Party in the United States today. This fact has been mentioned by FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover in his book, "Masters of Deceit." In fact, he devotes an entire chapter to the subject of Communist exploitation of minority groups. The more recent book on communism by the Overstreets entitled "What Everyone Should Know About Communism" also discusses this particular goal of the Communist Party. The Communists realize that racial agitation is the ripest field for exploitation in our country today, especially in view of the 1954 Supreme Court decision on desegregation. In fact, international Communist Party policymakers hailed the 1954 decision as the first real break for the party in its drive to foment racial conflict in the United States.

Mr. President, on September 2, 1959, there was published in the Charleston, S.C., News and Courier an Associated Press dispatch from Birmingham, Ala., which reported that a large group of Negroes had wired President Eisenhower on Tuesday that most southern Negroes do not want forced integration. The group asked the President to sponsor a poll of southern Negroes to prove the validity of their point.

This is further evidence, Mr. President, that there is little or no sentiment in the South for forced mixing of the races, except—as I have said—by the few Communists we have in the South, some militant NAACP members, and a few other race agitators.

I ask unanimous consent that this Associated Press article from the News and Courier be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEGROES DON'T WANT FORCED INTEGRATION

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—A Negro group wired President Eisenhower Tuesday that most southern Negroes don't want forced integration. And the group asked for a Government-sponsored poll of southern Negroes to prove the point.

The statement and the request were included in a 350-word telegram sent to Eisenhower by the Southern Negro Improvement Association of Alabama.

Samuel H. Moore of Birmingham, president of the group, said it has more than 5,000 members in Alabama.

Moore told the President:

"I assure you that both races in the South are unalterably opposed to the integration of races in public schools.

"Racial hate and racial prejudice that was dead is now reconstructed. Threat of forceful integration has created fear and hate in many of our former white friends."

Moore said he put these questions to the President:

"Since this is free America, why not put your racial policy upon voluntary action of the citizens, not forceful compulsion? Why not have the Government take a poll of the majority of the southern Negroes?"

Moore said that such a poll should be confined to southern Negroes because "our northern Negro brothers do not live in the South and therefore do not understand our southern bicultural society."

He urged the President "not to use force to integrate the schools and deny our race a major symbol of our progress—all-Negro schools."

Moore said, "for lasting and enduring advancement of our race our progress must be achieved with good will from the white people among which we must live."

TRANSACTION OF ADDITIONAL ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

ADDITIONAL BILLS INTRODUCED

Additional bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FREAR:

S. 2642. A bill to express the intent of the Congress with reference to the regulation of banking; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. KUCHEL, and Mr. MCNAMARA):

S. 2643. A bill to amend section 8(b)(4) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

(See the remarks of Mr. KENNEDY when he introduced the above bill, which appear under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BUTLER:

S. 2644. A bill for the relief of Capt. Elliott B. Roberts, U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey:

S. 2645. A bill to authorize the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to undertake a cooperative worldwide study of the problem of radioactive fallout and other types of radiation hazard and of their effect upon the lives and health of people everywhere, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

(See the remarks of Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey when he introduced the above bill, which appear under a separate heading.)

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 8(b)(4) OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA], I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to amend section 8(b)(4) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended. I ask unanimous consent that the bill lie on the desk until September 9, 1959, so as to afford other Senators an opportunity to cosponsor it if they so desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will lie on the desk, as requested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The bill (S. 2643) to amend section 8(b)(4) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, introduced by Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. KUCHEL, and Mr. MCNAMARA), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

STUDY OF PROBLEM OF RADIOACTIVE FALLOUT AND OTHER TYPES OF RADIATION HAZARD

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. Mr. President, many in this Chamber were proud this year to support a bill which would create an international center for research against disease. This health for peace bill was a striking attempt to mobilize medical knowledge to a greater degree of cooperation than has been possible until now.

Today I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill intended to achieve much the same kind of official cooperation among nations, but for another purpose: the study of the effects of fallout from nuclear weapons tests.

Within the past few weeks, we have detected a new peak of interest about fallout. We have seen other peaks of interest in the years since we began our first peacetime atomic tests. Many citizens have asked questions. They want to know exactly what fallout will mean to them and their children. They have asked, but the answers have not always been forthcoming.

Just this week, the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy published its conclusions from 4 days of hearings, May 5 through 8, on the fallout question. They answered some of our questions, but even in this—one of the most significant discussions yet of the radiation hazard—the members of the committee were frank to say that there are many questions for which there are still no answers. Four days of even the most excellent hearings cannot give us all the information we want. The report, however, intensifies public attention on a problem which for too long has remained the child of speculation.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the New York Times story of August 24 on the issuance of the report of the Joint Committee.

Some of the basic findings of the committee are disturbing to committee members and others who have felt that we must know more about fallout.

As the committee report said:

> The 1959 hearings also served to focus attention on new points of controversy such as the so-called hot spot problem, and the importance of short-lived isotopes in fallout occurring far away from test sites. Perhaps most important, the question was raised of how to evaluate measured levels of fallout in the environment and in man in terms of some sort of measuring standard or criterion. Central to the lack of understanding on the last point were differences of opinion with regard to interpretation and application of the so-called maximum permissible dose (MPD) of radiation, from internal or external sources, and the so-called maximum permissible concentration (MPC) of radioactive materials in the body, in air, or in water.

The committee also has told us that radioactive materials do not circle the earth for 5 to 10 years, as had been assumed before the hearings. We now have testimony indicating that a more accurate estimate might be 1 to 5 years. Since radioactive materials are continually radiating, and therefore decreasing in potency, the longer the material remains in the atmosphere, the less dangerous it will be when it falls to the earth. The shorter time period means that what might be called a buffer time period has been substantially reduced. The shorter duration in the atmosphere also increases the significance of some of the short-lived isotopes which had previously been considered comparatively unimportant.

Several of the more than 30 scientist witnesses had other interesting, if disturbing, things to say. Approximately two-thirds of the radioactive wastes settle in the Northern Hemisphere. The hot spots, or concentrations of fallout on a relatively small area, can be made hot by rainstorms which carry the fallout down.

The committee report does not stand alone as a statement of uneasiness. We have heard many warnings in this Chamber. Mr. Edward Gamarekian, of the Washington Post, has written many articles within past months indicating potential or existing dangers from testing and from civilian use of atomic energy. The Saturday Evening Post, issue of August 29, asks, "Are we endangering the lives of our children's children?—A complete report on fallout, the silent killer."

One paragraph in the article sums up, I think, some of the confusion which now exists. The author, Steven M. Spencer, writes:

> The citizen is more bewildered by reading on one day a warning headline: "Atom Rate Called Perilous," and on the following morning a reassuring one: "Study Minimizes Fallout Danger." Both appeared in the same newspaper, the trustworthy New York Times, and both were accurate accounts of testimony at hearings on fallout from nuclear weapons tests, held last May by the Radiation Subcommittee of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy.

The need is clear, I think, for a more concentrated effort at official year-round fact gathering. The subcommittee's report states that the Atomic Energy Commission has accelerated its efforts in fallout research, but it also says that the AEC has not received the high administrative level support it must have.

The subcommittee adds this statement:

> No other mechanism presently exists within the Federal Government for such a systematic compilation of material on fallout for the information of the public.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] has already introduced bill S. 1628, which would give the U.S. Public Health Service authority to conduct the kind of program envisioned in the subcommittee report, "one which would conduct a systematic compilation of material on fallout."

The bill I introduce today is clear evidence that I owe much to the creative and sound proposal of the Senator from Alabama.

The bill proposes, Mr. President, that the United States through its chief civilian authority in the field of health, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, after proper study and consultation with the Department of State and other bodies, approach, through the Secretary of State, the other nations of the world and invite them to participate in an international project to, first, accumulate and disseminate reliable data on actual atomic fallout and other sources of radiation; second, promote accelerated research by all governments and agencies into the precise health effects of radiation and the means for curbing it; and, third, disseminate to the medical and health professions and the peoples of the world, through all available means of communication, the results of these studies and this research as it is developed.

I would further propose that the Surgeon General, through the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, be requested to report to the appropriate committee of the Senate within 90 days after enactment of the authorizing legislation on the plans of the Surgeon General and his staff for undertaking this project.

I need not emphasize to this body, I am sure, the enormous increment in good will which would come to the United States from such a project. More important would be the very real contribution which I am sure it would make toward helping to resolve unresolved questions about the effects of fallout—this dark and insidious menace of our age.

Let us remember that the development of the atomic age came about through the individual contribution of scientists from all parts of the world. Distinguished scientists from many, many countres worked together to harness atomic energy. How much more important it is that the thinking, the research, the experiments of scientists from all over the world be coordinated into a single effort to ascertain the dangers inherent in radioactive fallout and the means for curbing these dangers. How right it is that the United States, whose every motivation is for peace and the improved well-being of people everywhere, should take the initiative in securing this vital coordination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the newspaper article will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2645) to authorize the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to undertake a cooperative worldwide study of the problem of radioactive fallout and other types of radiation hazard and of their effect upon the lives and health of people everywhere, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The newspaper article presented by Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey is as follows:

TEXT OF INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF A CONGRESSIONAL REPORT ON FALLOUT HEARINGS

(WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Following are the introduction and summary from a report on "Fallout From Nuclear Weapons Tests" issued today by the Congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy:)

I. INTRODUCTION

The Special Subcommittee on Radiation of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy held public hearings from May 5 to May 8, 1959, on fallout from nuclear weapons testing. It was the intent of these hearings to bring up to date the scientific information developed by the subcommittee in its 1957 hearings, including consideration of new matters; to examine alternative weapons-testing policies from the standpoint of the resulting fallout; and to learn what is being done by various Federal agencies and their contractors in the fields of research and monitoring surveillance on worldwide fallout.

To accomplish these purposes the subject matter was restricted to problems of fallout associated with nuclear weapons tests, with the implications of all-out nuclear war being reserved for separate hearings in June.

A panel of technical advisers consisting of qualified scientists both inside and outside the Government was invited to assist the committee in preparing for the hearings.

With the help of the panel a detailed technical outline for the hearings was developed and some 30 expert witnesses were invited to testify.

These witnesses were requested to present significant developments which have occurred in their particular fields of competence since the 1957 hearings. Statements for the record were also solicited from other scientists, including some who testified in the 1957 hearings but did not participate in the oral testimony in 1959.

The subcommittee utilized the technique of asking each expert witness to summarize data pertaining to a given aspect of the problem. The committee also utilized groups of witnesses in roundtable discussions, as it did in the 1957 hearings, to discuss major points and implications of new data.

A volume of material comparable in scope to that of the 1957 hearings has resulted, attesting both to the rapidly growing amount of information related to this subject and its dissemination. The committee notes, in this regard, that no other mechanism presently exists within the Federal Government for such a systematic compilation of material on fallout for the information of the public.

KEY POINTS CONSIDERED

In bringing the 1957 hearings up to date the committee considered certain key points, as listed in the committee's 1957 summary analysis. These included:

Origin of fallout; distribution of fallout; biological effects of radiation; tolerance limits; effects of past tests, and effects of future tests.

The committee also considered certain major unresolved questions as listed in the 1957 summary-analysis. These included:

The existence of clean (versus dirty) weapons;

The degree of nonuniformity of the distribution of global fallout;

The extent of natural discrimination exhibited by plants and animals against hazardous isotopes as strontium 90;

The existence of a so-called threshold for somatic (nongenetic) effect of low-level radiation;

The threshold question as regards genetic effects, and

The distinction between absolute numbers of persons affected by fallout versus percentage of the world population.

The 1959 hearings served to demonstrate that firmer support can now be found for some statements of conclusion that were at best tentative in 1957. These concern, for example, such topics as the degree of nonuniformity of worldwide fallout distribution. Similarly, the 1959 hearings demonstrated that greater assurance seems to exist over problems, considered unresolved 2 years ago, such as the so-called discrimination factor for strontium versus calcium in plant and animal metabolism.[1]

But the 1959 hearings also served to focus attention on new points of controversy such as the so-called hot spot problem, and the importance of short-lived isotopes in fallout occurring far away from test sites. Perhaps most important, the question was raised of how to evaluate measured levels of fallout in the environment and in man in terms of some sort of measuring standard or criterion. Central to the lack of understanding on the last point were differences of opinion with regard to interpretation and application of the so-called maximum permissible dose (MPD) of radiation, from internal or external sources, and the so-called maximum permissible concentration (MPC) of radioactive materials in the body, in air, or in water.[2]

DATA DECLASSIFIED

A significant achievement of the hearing was the declassification of important new information on the weapons test programs which have been conducted by the United States, Great Britain, and the U.S.S.R. Included in this information, which was made public for the first to the present time in testing time in these hearings, was a table showing both the total yield and the fission yields detonated by all countries up to the present time in testing nuclear weapons. Also declassified was important new information about the content increase in the spring of 1959 in the northern latitudes. Testimony indicated that such an increase may be the result of seasonal fluctuations and/or southward movement of polar air masses, coinciding with radioactive material in the stratosphere which has become available since 1957 by means of new direct measurement techniques.

Finally, it is worth noting that the meetings of two expert groups, both held just before the hearings began, helped to reconcile differences in interpreting available data. These are the meetings of the National Academy of Sciences Subcommittee on Meteorology and discussions by a special seminar group assembled at the request of the Joint Committee to consider the implications of future testing. As a result of these meetings and other scientific deliberations during the 2 years since the committee's 1957 hearings, the testimony at the 1959 hearings tended to emphasize similarities rather than differences in opinion. For this reason, the hearings were more successful in bringing out points on which there is now general agreement than was true in 1957. Major unresolved questions still remain and require clearer delineation if we are to deal with them effectively. Of particular concern, in this regard, are questions involving technical implications on policy.

II. SUMMARY

In summary, the major points emerging from the hearings are presented in the following paragraphs.

Origin of fallout

Information developed at the hearings shows that if the test programs of all countries are considered together, the total nuclear yield resulting from these tests has increased markedly since 1954. Of the total 90–92 megatons[3] fission yield equivalent released to date, 40 megatons was produced in 1957–58. The bulk of this was detonated during 1958 in the U.S. Hardtack series and the U.S.S.R. October series. Large portions of the radioactive products produced in this latest series have gone into worldwide fallout due to detonations of large-yield weapons at high altitudes.

As in 1957, testimony at the 1959 hearings indicated that stronium 90 and cesium 137[4] are still considered to present the greatest hazard in worldwide fallout (fallout away from testing sites). But short-lived isotopes, such as strontium 89, iodine 131, barium 140, zirconium 95, and others, were described by several witnesses as worthy of more consideration or even potentially equal in hazard to strontium 90 and cesium 137. Similarly, long-lived carbon 14 was described as a potential long-term hazard from nuclear weapons tests.

Distribution of fallout

The nonuniform distribution of fallout material in the effects (i.e., effects on future generations) resulting from a given dose of radiation may, contrary to the general belief in 1957, have a definite relationship to the rate at which the dose is delivered. The implication of this evidence is that the effectiveness of a given dose of radiation is removed from the troposphere by local rainfall.

[1] "Discrimination" is a mechanism by which plants and animals exhibit a preference for certain elements thus screening out some of the radioactive material passed along to man. The concept is applied to elements, such as strontium and calcium, that are similar but not identical in metabolic behavior.

[2] Maximum permissible concentration (MPC) is a recommended value of quantity of radioactive substance per units of tissue, air or water, also relating to exposure of individuals or groups to radiation under various specified conditions.

MPD and MPC are related to one another in principle but are not always readily interchangeable. The conditions for which MPD and MPC are best defined are for occupational exposure.

[3] A 1-megaton bomb has the same explosive energy release as 1 million tons of TNT. The Hiroshima bomb yield was estimated at 20,000 tons of TNT, or 20 kilotons.

[4] Strontium 90 emits beta particles which have relatively low energy but which achieve a destructive effect in bone, which strontium 90 seeks in a manner similar to calcium. Cesium 137 emits both beta particles and gamma irradiation. This isotope is taken up throughout the body and presents a hazard particularly to reproductive cells.

But the relationship of these hotspot areas to worldwide fallout, if any, remains unclear.

Uptake of radioactive isotopes from fallout

The content of strontium 90 and cesium 137 in food has risen since 1957, even more rapidly than the total fallout. Temporarily high levels have been found in various parts of the country suggesting that under certain conditions strontium 90 may be taken up directly without going through the soil. Therefore, a consistent degree of discrimination (i.e., the selective reduction of strontium 90 in relation to calcium) from the ground to man cannot be expected.

Biological effects of radiation

Evidence was presented at the hearings suggesting that a given dose of radiation is less at low-dose rates than at high-dose rates, even for genetic consequences.

The biological significance of low levels of radioactivity is still largely unknown. No resolution was reached on whether or not a threshold level of radiation exposure exists below which effects such as cancer and leukemia do not result.

Hotspots and their significance

The term "hot spot" is used to refer to local areas, geographically speaking, where environmental contamination levels are considered to be higher than average levels in intensity than it has received in the past, particularly in forecasting the effects of future tests.

Significance of carbon 14

Information provided for the hearings suggests that radioactive carbon 14 from past weapons tests could constitute a genetic hazard to the world's population. The magnitude of this hazard has been estimated to be comparable to, and in some estimates in excess of, the genetic hazard from other fallout isotopes. One of the principal problems in making these estimates is how to assess the hazard of a dose which may be comparable in magnitude to that from cesium 137 and other genetically hazardous fallout isotopes but which occurs over a much longer time period (the equivalent of 8,000 years compared with 40 years or so). Here again, a problem was presented for which available information appears to be inadequate. Greater emphasis should be given to means by which this problem may be properly evaluated.

Inclusive years:	Total fission yield [1]
1945–51	60
1952–54	500
1957–58	21,000

[1] A value of 50 percent has been arbitrarily selected for the fission to total yield ratio for all Soviet thermonuclear tests. As indicated in the tables, 50 percent is about the average fission to total yield ratio for all United States/United Kingdom nuclear tests.

Maximum permissible dose and maximum permissible concentration

It was generally agreed that in considering acceptable exposure limits in the context of worldwide environmental contamination from fallout, the best assumption that can be made at present concerning the relationship of biological effect to radiation dose is to assume that any dose, however small, produces some biological effect and that this effect is harmful. The testimony made it clear that much difficulty now exists in evaluating the hazards of environmental contamination from worldwide fallout.

The estimated mean residence time [5] of material in the stratosphere is now taken as from 1 to 5 years, compared to the 5 to 10 years estimated in 1957. The shortest residence time (about a year) can be expected for debris from the 1958 U.S.S.R. tests in the Arctic.

The rate of deposition of strontium 90 showed an increase in the 1958 U.S.S.R. tests in the Arctic. The existence of localized hotspot areas was recognized, resulting among other things from uneven distribution of radioactive debris. * * * That such hotspot areas exist was not disputed; yet one of the ambiguities in the hearings testimony was the fact that no completely satisfactory definition was presented of what a hotspot is, how the limits of such an area are defined, and what the problems involved really are. [6]

Some testimony suggested that higher radiation levels in limited areas do not, any more than other nonuniformities, increase the overall hazard of fallout to the world's population. This contention is based on the argument that the total hazard is related to the total dose of radiation received by an entire population, and is not related to geographic distribution. It is evident, however, that more data and greater consideration of how to evaluate the data are needed before a satisfactory answer to this problem can be worked out.

Significance of short-lived isotopes

According to the testimony, recent fallout samples have concentrations of short-lived isotopes which are equal to and in many cases higher than those of the longer-lived isotopes such as strontium 90 and cesium 137. Due to their relatively rapid decay, the total radiation dose they deliver is ordinarily only a small fraction of that delivered by the longer-lived isotopes. However, the short-lived isotopes may be acquiring more significance than previously thought in view of the fact that fall-out from the stratosphere has proven to be faster than estimated earlier, together with the possibility of selective concentration in some particular organ of the body (i.e., radioactive iodine in the thyroid). The question apparently merits greater attention * * * permissible concentration," which were developed for occupational exposures to individuals under controlled conditions. [7]

Even if concepts developed for industrial application were clearly transferable, the testimony suggested confusion over such points as to how to apply existing maximum permissible concentrations for water to food in the fallout situation, how to handle diets (what time period to consider when "averaging"), and how to allow for the possible presence of other isotopes than the one being considered.

Further evidence of confusion concerning hazards evaluating in the testimony presented was given by the use, on the one hand, of industrially oriented exposure recommendations discussed above and by the use, on the other hand, of comparisons with natural background radiation levels. [8] At present, it appears that each controversial situation involving fallout exposure is evaluated on an ad hoc basis, but with little understanding or agreement on how the evaluation is to be done.

Alternative pattern of testing

Testimony at the hearings indicated that—

Underground tests can be conducted with relatively small weapons, without contaminating the atmosphere with radioactivity. Great practical difficulties exist for testing large or megaton weapons underground.

Outer space tests can be conducted under conditions—among which are distance and yield of the device—which will reduce atmospheric contamination to an as yet unknown degree. To obtain test data, there exist practical problems of instrumentation which would require further tests in space to resolve.

Environmental testing is necessary to establish effects of nuclear weapons on military targets, equipment, radiation levels, etc.

Past weapons tests will reach its maximum value in the period 1962–65. The predicted U.S. average value of 6 strontium units (S.U.) is slightly higher than for average Western populations (5 S.U.) and lower than the average for Eastern peoples (10 S.U.). Thus for testing already conducted man's exposure to fall-out radiation is and will be relatively small compared to the "normal background" radiation or the standard recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP).

Assuming successive cycles of testing over the next two generations or less, following the same pattern as the past 5 years, the predicted average concentration in bone will be about 48 strontium units.

TABLE 3.—United States, United Kingdom, and Soviet nuclear events

[Field in kilotons]

Inclusive years	Fission yield [1]			Total yield
	Air-burst	Ground surface burst	Water surface burst	Air-burst	Surface burst
1945–51	190	500	20	190	570
1952–54	1,000	15,000	22,000	1,000	59,000
1955–56	5,600	1,500	6,000	11,000	17,000
1957–58	31,000	4,400	4,600	57,000	28,000

[1] A value of 50 percent has been arbitrarily selected for the fission to total yield ratio for all Soviet thermonuclear tests. As indicated in the tables, 50 percent is about the average fission to total yield ratio for all United States/United Kingdom nuclear tests.

[5] The mean residence time is the half residence time divided by 0.7. The half residence time is the time required for the amount of material in the stratosphere to be reduced by 50 percent. These concepts are analogous to the mean life and half life for radioactive decay.

[6] Prior to the hearings, the Joint Committee sent a letter to AEC, dated April 7, 1959, requesting information on the hot spot problem. The outline of the hearings also specified that AEC should present detailed testimony on the problem. Following the hearings, the committee requested additional information from the AEC in letters dated May 18, 1959, and June 17, 1959. The material referred to, together with the AEC responses, is contained in the printed hearings.

[7] The standard recommended by the International Commission for Radiological Protection (ICRP) for occupational exposure of individual industrial workers corresponds to 2,000 strontium units, whereas the ICRP recommends a value corresponding to 67 strontium units as a standard for application to the general population. (Strontium units are used as a measure of body levels of strontium 90. One strontium unit is equal to one micro-microcurie, i.e., one-millionth of a millionth of a curie, of strontium 90 per gram of calcium. A curie corresponds to the radioactivity of a gram of radium.) In the summary-analysis of the 1957 hearings it was noted that 100 strontium units was at that time the recommended standard for maximum permissible concentration of strontium 90 in man for a population, "subject to a number of serious questions and limitations."

[8] "Background" radiation comes mostly from naturally existing radioactive materials and from cosmic rays emitted from outer space. It is estimated that in an average 70-year lifetime a man will receive 7 to 10 roentgens from such background radiation.

Government program and organization

While the AEC has accelerated its efforts in fallout research in the past 2 years, particularly in sampling and analysis, the fallout program as a whole apparently has not received the high administrative level support it needs to give it the necessary impetus. Increased dollar outlays for facility and operating expenses have been useful but further improvements in the program, its administration and its organization, are required. These should include adequate staffing in the AEC Biology and Medicine Division to meet the broad requirements of an expanding program. Better coordination by the AEC of fallout information is essential. Adequate radiation standards must be developed in cooperation with the various Federal, State, and private agencies.

The Public Health Service, which has been conducting a survey of radioactive fallout debris in milk, operates a research labortory in Cincinnati and has a newly created staff in Washington. However, expenditures and numbers of personnel remain small.

With regard to the fallout program, increased emphasis should be placed on the hotspot problem, declassification and periodic publication of useful information, development, and application of exposure standards, and better coordination among Government agencies in determining, controlling, and evaluating environmental hazards.

In implementing an effective program, the first job is to define clearly what the real problems are and then assign responsibilities for meeting these problems. In the process, care should be taken not to interfere with existing programs which are making major contributions to knowledge in the fallout field.

EXTENSION OF AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954—AMENDMENTS

Mr. AIKEN submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (S. 1748) to extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY ACTS OF 1956 AND 1958, TO MAKE CERTAIN ADJUSTMENTS IN HIGHWAY PROGRAM—AMENDMENTS

Mr. GORE submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 8678) to amend the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958 to make certain adjustments in the Federal-aid highway program, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954, RELATING TO REFUND OF CERTAIN TAXES—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILL

Under authority of the order of the Senate of August 27, 1959, the names of Senators MURRAY, MOSS, MORSE, CLARK, LAUSCHE, HART, YOUNG of Ohio, AIKEN, PROUTY, MANSFIELD, RANDOLPH, and NEUBERGER were added as additional cosponsors of the bill (S. 2604) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for refund to States of certain taxes on distilled spirits and wine destroyed by fire, casualty, or act of God, introduced by Mr. MUSKIE on August 27, 1959.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, September 3, 1959, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 539. An act for the relief of Mrs. Joyce Lee Freeman;

S. 669. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain lands to the Bethel Baptist Church, of Henderson, Tenn.;

S. 696. An act for the relief of Mrs. Annie Voisin Whitley;

S. 1071. An act for the relief of Nettie Korn and Manfred Korn;

S. 1298. An act for the relief of Concetta Meglio Meglio;

S. 1392. An act for the relief of Isabel M. Menz;

S. 1557. An act for the relief of Allen Howard Pilgrim, Cheryl Ann Pilgrim, Robb Alexander Pilgrim, and Jocelyn Marie Pilgrim;

S. 1650. An act for the relief of Edmund A. Hannay;

S. 1667. An act for the relief of the widow of Col. Claud C. Smith;

S. 1792. An act for the relief of Lilia Alvarez Szabo;

S. 1915. An act for the relief of Chung Ching Wei;

S. 1921. An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the United Spanish War Veterans, Inc., in the District of Columbia;

S. 1958. An act to amend section 12 of the act of March 5, 1915, to clarify types of arrestment prohibited with respect to wages of U.S. seamen;

S. 2021. An act for the relief of Irene Milios;

S. 2027. An act for the relief of William James Harkins and Thomas Lloyd Harkins;

S. 2050. An act for the relief of Leokadia Jomboski;

S. 2081. An act for the relief of Yadwiga Boczar;

S. 2102. An act for the relief of Irene Wladyslawa Burda; and

S. 2238. An act for the relief of Kenzo Hachtmann, a minor.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, a copy of the final report by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, to be officially filed September 8, came to my attention this afternoon.

This report, all marked up in confidential red ink indicating it should not be released until next Tuesday, is one of the most devastating, unconstitutional documents I have ever seen.

It is an attempt by some of the Commissioners to set up a junior Supreme Court which would specialize in integration matters, or, if we please, to promote forced integration upon people all over the United States.

Frankly, from my brief reading of the report, it appears that a majority of the Commission could agree on nothing. The most who agreed on anything were three members. In my opinion it is a hodgepodge of conflicting views, statements and comments with no majority view of any single thing.

It is obvious to me that this report only further convinces me that the Commission should be decommissioned as provided by law.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not wish to yield until I finish.

Mr. HENNINGS. I simply wondered how long the Senator's speech was going to be.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It will take only 6 or 8 minutes.

Mr. HENNINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I opposed the Commission from its inception and I shall continue to oppose any attempt to extend its life. The report of the Commission pries into the core and heart of the right of States, local communities, and cities to manage their own systems of education, housing, voting, laws, programs, and all sorts of policies, including what I would call the intimate details of living.

Mr. President, the only thing with which I agree in the report is a statement by Commissioner John S. Battle, former Governor of Virginia, who wrote into the report:

> I must strongly disagree with the nature and tenor of this report. In my judgment it is not an impartial, factual statement, such as I believe to have been the intent of Congress, but rather, in large part, an argument in advocacy of preconceived ideas in the field of race relations.

Mr. President, in my opinion, most of these preconceived ideas are prointegration and profederalization.

In my opinion, the Commission should be forced to die within 60 days of the filing of this report, as required by law.

Mr. President, among some of the things advocated by this report, although not by a majority of the Commissioners, are the following:

A recommendation to substitute Federal voting registrars for local registrars.

A recommendation that Federal voting registrars determine who is eligible to vote under State laws and determine registration lists for local registration officials. Anyone who knows anything about the law knows that would be contrary to the Constitution of the United States.

A recommendation which, in my opinion, would allow criminals, incompetents, and others deprived of voting rights by State laws for almost any reason, to vote.

Also, among many other recommendations, two of which would allow a Presidential or Executive order to automatically outlaw segregation in any Federal housing and to permit the U.S. Education Commissioner to withhold Federal aid from all schools and colleges that do not integrate.

Mr. President, I fully understand the Civil Rights Commission intended for this report to not be made available to the public or to Congress until September 8. However, in view of the fact that the Congress—especially the Senate—may be asked to consider legislation to extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission, I believe the Senate should know of this report.

It is for this reason that I have discussed it on the floor of the Senate. I felt it was my duty to make known to the public this document before the Senate and Congress are asked to extend the life of the Commission, because the members of both Houses should know the contents of this report, which reflects highly conflicting and controversial matter of great importance.

Some Members may think, in the absence of this report, that it would be an innocent satisfying gesture to strong civil rights advocates to permit legislation which would extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission to pass the Senate. However, in the knowledge of what this report contains, some Members may not think well of extending the Commission's life. I personally think extending the life of the Commission could be highly dangerous and damaging to the Nation.

I think, in all fairness, the Congress of the United States should not pass upon the matter of extending the life of the Civil Rights Commission without first having the advantage of studying in detail the matters which will be in the report. We shall have an opportunity to study that report in the future.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, I desire to make only a very brief statement.

We cannot have, in this growing Nation, two classes of citizens. I recognize the problem which faces Senators from the South in their home States. However, I am thoroughly convinced that it is in the best interest of the United States of America not to have two classes of citizens.

Senators from the South are fine gentlemen. They represent precisely what the citizens of their States ask them to represent.

I had not intended to make any remarks tonight about this subject. However, the United States of America is a first class power, a fact which we cannot deny; and equality of our citizens will be achieved, in time.

Senators have been exceedingly courteous to me, and every Senator from the South has been more than courteous to me.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will my good friend from Missouri yield to me so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. HENNINGS. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to state that the absence of a quorum has been suggested, and the roll is being called.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

RECESS TO 9 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 9 o'clock and 35 minutes p.m.) the Senate recessed, under the order previously entered, until tomorrow, Friday, September 4, 1959, at 9 o'clock a.m.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate September 3 (legislative day of August 31), 1959:

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

William A. M. Burden, of New York, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Belgium, vice John Clifford Folger.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1959

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Nahum 1: 7: The Lord is good and a stronghold in the day of trouble.

Almighty God, whose paternal goodness is unfailingly kind and merciful, we beseech Thee that this may be a day of helpful living and useful labor.

Give integrity of purpose and fidelity in every trust to the Members of this legislative body as they engage in the business of statecraft.

Grant that in the administration of public affairs they may acknowledge their dependence upon divine guidance and seek to render a service to our country and all mankind that will be worthy and well pleasing unto Thee.

May we never allow ourselves to be enticed from the path of truth and righteousness and may Thy everlasting arms be our shield and shelter, keeping us secure and steadfast in all Thy ways.

In Christ's name we offer our prayer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. McGown, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 6. An act for the conveyance of certain real property of the United States to Sophronia Smiley Delaney and her sons.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2424) entitled "An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934 in order to provide that the equal-time provisions with respect to candidates for public office shall not apply to news and other similar programs."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2524) entitled "An act relating to the power of the States to impose net income taxes on income derived from interstate commerce and establishing a Commission on State Taxation of Interstate Commerce and Interstate and Intergovernmental Taxation Problems."

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION APPROPRIATION BILL, 1960

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H.R. 8575) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes, may have until midnight tonight to file a report on said bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tonight to file certain privileged reports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

PROJECT ALERT—THE LUBBOCK PLAN

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, communism continues to be a great threat to the security of our country and the world. As Americans, we need to have the best possible understanding of what the threat of communism is, and we need to make sure that we are doing all in our power to make democracy work effectively.

The people of Lubbock, Tex., whom I have the honor to represent in Congress, formed a citizens committee early this year for the purpose of conducting a campaign for the revitalization of our American national character and repudiation of international communism. This campaign, Project Alert, was successfully executed in the spring of this year.

The inspiration for the program at Lubbock was provided by Rear Adm. Walter G. Schindler, an outstanding naval leader, commandant of the Eighth Naval District; but the success of the program in Lubbock was due, to use a Navy term, to an all-out effort by "all hands."

A printed report of the Lubbock plan for Project Alert has been published by the Navy League of the United States as a public service. I commend it to you for serious consideration.

Lubbock, Tex., has shown the way to a nationwide program which could strengthen tremendously our country and contribute to the solution of world problems.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST MARTIN POPPER

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Un-American Activities, I submit a privileged report—House Report No. 1135.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST MARTIN POPPER

The Committee on Un-American Activities, as created and authorized by the House of Representatives through the enactment of Public Law 601, section 121, subsection (q)(2) of the 79th Congress, and under House Resolution 7 of the 86th Congress, caused to be issued a subpena to Martin Popper. The said subpena directed Martin Popper to be and appear before the said Committee on Un-American Activities, or a duly authorized subcommittee thereof, at the hour of 10 a.m., on Tuesday, April 21, 1959, at their committee room, 226, Washington, D.C., and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee, and not to depart without leave of said committee. The subpena served upon the said Martin Popper is set forth in words and figures, as follows:

"UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
"CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

"To MARTIN POPPER, Greeting:

"Pursuant to lawful authority you are hereby commanded to be and appear before the Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives of the United States, or a duly appointed subcommittee thereof, on Tuesday, April 21, 1959, at 10 o'clock, a.m., at their committee room, 226, Washington, D.C., then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee, and not to depart without leave of said committee.

"Hereof fail not, as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties in such cases made and provided.

"To U.S. marshal, to serve and return.

"Given under my hand this 26th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1959.

"FRANCIS E. WALTER,
"Chairman."

The said subpena was duly served as appears by the return made thereon by the U.S. marshal who was duly authorized to serve the said subpena. The return of the service by the said U.S. marshal being endorsed thereon, is set forth in words and figures as follows:

"Received this writ at New York, N.Y., on March 27, 1959, and on March 31, 1959, at 635 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y., I served it on the within-named Martin Popper by leaving a copy thereof or a subpena ticket with him.

"THOMAS J. LUNNEY,
"By HARRY J. CARITO,
"Deputy U.S. Marshal, SDNY."

On April 16, 1959, at the request of counsel for Martin Popper, the committee postponed his appearance and sent the following telegram addressed to Martin Popper, 635 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y.:

"Under continuing authority of subpena served upon you, your appearance before Committee on Un-American Activities is hereby postponed from April 21 to April 24, 1959, 10 a.m.

"FRANCIS E. WALTER,
"Chairman."

On April 24, 1959, counsel for Martin Popper again, for personal reasons, requested postponement of the appearance of Martin Popper as a witness, which postponement was telephonically agreed to, and counsel was advised that the new date for the appearance of his client was May 1, 1959.

On April 27, 1959, counsel for Martin Popper again requested postponement of the appearance of his client, and was telephonically advised that the appearance of his client was postponed from May 1 to May 14, 1959.

On May 13, 1959, the following telegram was sent to Martin Popper, 635 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y.

"Under continuing authority of subpena served upon you, your appearance before Committee on Un-American Activities is hereby postponed from May 14 to June 5, 1959, 10 a.m.

"FRANCIS E. WALTER,
"Chairman."

The said Martin Popper, pursuant to the said subpena, and the telegrams continuing his appearance, and in compliance therewith, appeared before a subcommittee of the Committee on Un-American Activities on June 5, 1959, to give such testimony as required under and by virtue of Public Law 601, section 121, subsection (q)(2) of the 79th Congress, and under House Resolution 7 of the 86th Congress. The said Martin Popper having appeared as a witness and having been asked the questions, namely:

"The purpose of this hearing, Mr. Popper, is to determine among other things, whether or not the Secretary of State should be given authority, by legislation, to require passport applicants to furnish information of the nature called for in these three questions. I would therefore, like to ask you if at the time your executed your application for a passport you were a member of the Communist Party?

"At the time you made this application for passport, were you a member of the Communist Party?

"Were you a member of the Communist Party at the time of your attendance at that convention in Paris?

"Were you a member of the Communist Party at the time you made that speech?

"Mr. Popper, there was a witness before this committee in December 1955 by the name of Mr. Mortimer Riemer. Mr. Riemer had been a member of the Communist Party of New York. He was a lawyer. He advised this committee of the circumstances relating to his becoming a member of the Communist Party and the reasons for his getting out of the Communist Party. He was the first secretary of the National Lawyers' Guild.

"He gave this committee considerable information regarding the organization, the initial organization, of the National Lawyers' Guild.

"I asked him to describe the Communist Party group to which he was first assigned. He said it was a group composed exclusively of lawyers in New York City. He identified some of those.

"In one statement he identified Martin Popper, Alex Racobin, and Harry Sacher as members of that group with him.

"Was he correct in identifying you as a member of that group of the Communist Party?"

which questions were pertinent to the subject under inquiry, refused to answer said questions, and as a result of said Martin Popper's refusal to answer the aforesaid questions your committee was prevented from receiving testimony and information concerning a matter committed to said committee in accordance with the terms of the subpena served upon said Martin Popper.

The record of the proceedings before the subcommittee on June 5, 1959, is set forth in fact as follows:

FRIDAY, JUNE 5, 1959

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES,
Washington, D.C.

Public hearings

The subcommittee of the Committee on Un-American Activities met, pursuant to notice, at 10 a.m., in the caucus room, Old House Office Building, Hon. MORGAN M. MOULDER (chairman of the subcommittee) presiding.

Subcommittee members present: Representatives MORGAN M. MOULDER, of Missouri; CLYDE DOYLE, of California; and AUGUST E. JOHANSEN, of Michigan.

Committee member also present: EDWIN E. WILLIS, of Louisiana.

Staff members present: Frank S. Tavenner, Jr., counsel, and Donald T. Appell, investigator.

Mr. MOULDER. The committee will be in order.

Today we resume the hearings which were begun on April 21, 1959, on the general subject of passport security.

In opening the hearings on that date an extensive statement was made on the scope of inquiry and the subject matter with which we expected to deal. At that time it was pointed out that because of the vast scope of the subject matter and the great number of witnesses who could be subpenaed we expected only to sample types and patterns of cases.

Immediately after the Kent-Briehl decision by the Supreme Court on June 16, 1958, the Passport Office of the Department of State was flooded with applications for passports by persons who were known to be Communists. Within the first 4 months following the Supreme Court decision, the State Department granted passports to approximately 600 persons who have records of activity in support of the international Communist movement. The persons granted passports include individuals trained in Moscow, individuals who have been involved in Communist espionage activity, individuals who have performed Communist functions in countries other than the United States, and Communist Party members, both concealed and open, who owe an undying allegiance to the international Communist conspiracy.

Communists, like termites, nest underground and concentrate their attack on the vital segments of the edifice which they are undermining. It is essential that Communists, like termites, travel from their nesting place to vital areas. In the case of the international Communist conspiracy, international travel of couriers, spies, and propagandists is essential.

In the Kent-Briehl case the Secretary of State denied two applications for passports on the ground that the applicants were Communists. This action of the Secretary of State was sustained by both the appropriate Federal District Court and the U.S. Court of Appeals.

The Supreme Court of the United States, however, in a 5 to 4 decision, reversed the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals on the ground that the Secretary of State did not have the authority to deny passports to citizens because of "their beliefs and associations"; in other words, the majority of the Supreme Court took the position that a Communist is only a person entertaining certain beliefs and associations. How long will it be before certain circles in this Government recognize the plain simple fact that communism is communism, and that Communists are Communists?

The reports and hearings of the Committee on Un-American Activities demonstrate to the point of monotony the fact that communism is a world conspiracy of force, violence, intrigue, and subversion and that by every definition a Communist is a participant in this conspiracy. Unless we recognize this elemental truth, we have little hope of ultimate survival in the the face of this awful force which is extinguishing freedom everywhere.

The committee resolution adopted January 23, 1959, authorizing this hearing, is as follows:

"Be it resolved, That hearings by the Committee on Un-American Activities or a subcommittee thereof, to be held in Washington, D.C., and at such other place or places as the chairman may indicate, on such date or dates as the chairman may determine, be authorized and approved, including the conduct of investigations deemed reasonably necessary by the staff in preparation therefor, relating to the following:

"1. The advisability of reporting favorably to the House for enactment amendments to section 215 of the Immigration and Nationality Act as contained in title IV—Immigration and Passport Security, of H.R. 2232, introduced on January 12, 1959, and referred by the House of Representatives to the Committee on Un-American Activities for its consideration.

"2. The advisability of recommending legislation expressing the will and intent of Congress spelled out in direct and positive form, granting authority to the Secretary of State to issue, withhold, or limit passports for international travel of adherents to the Communist Party, and the granting of specific statutory authority to the Secretary of State to issue substantive regulations in the passport field, as set forth in the Annual Report of the Committee on Un-American Activities for the year 1956.

"3. The development of factual information which may be of assistance to the committee and to Congress for use in their consideration of the legislative proposals enumerated, or amendments thereto.

"4. The execution by the administrative agencies concerned of all laws and regulations, within the jurisdiction of this committee, relating to the granting of passports.

"Be it further resolved, That the hearings may include any other matter within the jurisdiction of the committee which it, or any subcommittee thereof appointed to conduct this hearing may designate."

The order of appointment of this subcommittee is as follows:

"JUNE 4, 1959.

"To Mr. RICHARD ARENS, Staff Director, House Committee on Un-American Activities:

"Pursuant to the provisions of the law and the rules of this committee, I hereby appoint a subcommittee of the Committee on Un-American Activities, consisting of Representative MORGAN M. MOULDER, as Chairman, and Representatives CLYDE DOYLE and AUGUST E. JOHANSEN, as associate members, to conduct hearings in Washington, D.C., Friday, June 5, 1959, at 10 a.m., on subjects under investigation by the committee and take such testimony on said day or succeeding days, as it may deem necessary.

"Please make this action a matter of committee record.

"If any member indicates his inability to serve, please notify me.

"Given under my hand this 4th day of June 1959.

"FRANCIS E. WALTER,
"Chairman, Committee on Un-American Activities."

You may proceed, Mr. Tavenner.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Martin Popper, please.

Mr. MOULDER. You do solemnly swear that the testimony which you are about to give before this subcommittee of the Committee on Un-American Activities will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. POPPER. I do.

TESTIMONY OF MARTIN POPPER, ACCOMPANIED BY COUNSEL, LEONARD B. BOUDIN

Mr. TAVENNER. State your name, please, sir.

Mr. POPPER. Martin Popper.

Mr. TAVENNER. And your present address?

Mr. POPPER. 322 Central Park West, New York.

Mr. TAVENNER. Will counsel accompanying the witness identify himself for the record?

Mr. BOUDIN. Leonard B. Boudin, 25 Broad Street, New York City 4, N.Y.

Mr. TAVENNER. When and where were you born, Mr. Popper?

Mr. POPPER. I was born in New York City, February 7, 1909.

May I be permitted, Mr. Chairman, to make a very brief statement on jurisdiction? It will take no more than 2 minutes.

Mr. MOULDER. Has a copy of it been filed?

Mr. POPPER. It is not a statement of the kind that you have in mind. It is merely a statement directed to the legal and constitutional jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, it would seem that a matter relating to jurisdiction would be a matter for the courts, and not for this committee.

Mr. MOULDER. I think that is true.

Does the committee so rule?

Of course, you have that point reserved, as stated by the counsel.

Mr. POPPER. I have in mind, and I will not argue the point, that it will take about 1 minute, and I think would help the committee in understanding the basis of my testimony. I think it will aid the committee rather than hinder it. As I say, it takes about 1 minute.

Mr. MOULDER. Would you hand the statement to counsel?

Mr. POPPER. It is in my own handwriting. I have no idea whether he can read it. Actually, Mr. Tavenner, as you know, I have no desire to——

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest this: It has been our policy that if any statement is desired to be made, that it be furnished to the committee counsel for our files. I would suggest that it be done in that fashion. Or, in answer to questions that will come, he might make that part of his answer. I don't think we should depart from our policy.

Mr. MOULDER. The committee so rules.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Popper, will you briefly outline your educational training?

Mr. POPPER. Yes. I attended the public schools in the city of New York, and high school. I attended the College of the City of New York.

Mr. TAVENNER. When did you attend the College of the City of New York?

Mr. POPPER. Around the year of 1926, for a short time thereafter, then entered law school, the Brooklyn Law School. I was admitted to the bar in 1931.

Mr. TAVENNER. Will you outline your occupational background?

Mr. POPPER. Well, I have been a lawyer ever since my admission to the bar. I practiced law for a while and then became secretary of the National Lawyers Guild.

Mr. TAVENNER. During what period of time.

Mr. POPPER. I think approximately from 1940 to 1947. Thereafter, I practiced law again, and I am doing it now.

Mr. TAVENNER. Did you precede Mr. Robert J. Silberstein?

Mr. POPPER. As secretary of the guild?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. POPPER. Yes.

Mr TAVENNER. Did you serve in the Armed Forces of the United States?

Mr. POPPER. No.

Mr. TAVENNER. Did you hold any position in the Government during the period of the war, World War II?

Mr. POPPER. No.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Popper, I hand you a photostatic copy of an application for U.S. passport, purportedly executed by you on August 26, 1958, and ask if this is a copy of the application which you executed.

(Document handed to the witness.)

Mr. POPPER. Yes, that would seem to be a photostaic copy of my application.

Mr. TAVENNER. Thank you.

I desire to offer a copy of the application in evidence and ask that it be marked "Popper Exhibit No. 1."

Mr. MOULDER. The exhibit will be admited in evidence and marked "Popper Exhibit No. 1."

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Popper, there appears on the page where your photograph is, and under your photograph, three questions, which are as follows:

"Are you now a member of the Communist Party? (Write "yes" or "no.")

"Have you ever been a member of the Communist Party? (Write "yes" or "no.")

"If ever a member, state period of membership from — to —."

Will you examine that, please?

(Document handed to the witness.)

Mr. TAVENNER. That is right under your photograph.

Do you observe any answer was given to any one of those three questions?

Mr. POPPER. No; there was no answer given to any of the questions.

Mr. TAVENNER. Why did you not answer those questions?

Mr. POPPER. Because it had been decided by the Supreme Court the State Department had no authority or power to ask the questions.

Mr. TAVENNER. The purpose of this hearing, Mr. Popper, is to determine, among other things, whether or not the Secretary of State should be given authority, by legislation, to require passport applicants to furnish information of the nature called for in these three questions.

I would, therefore, like to ask you if at the time your executed your application for a passport you were a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. POPPER. I respectfully decline to answer that question, Mr. Tavenner, on the following grounds: I understand the Supreme Court's decision in the Watkins case to mean that this committee's authorizing resolution is so vague that to compel testimony under it would violate the due process clause of the Federal Constitution and that the jurisdiction which the commitee has assumed is so limitless that its inquiries into the area of speech, press, or political belief and association abridges the freedoms guaranteed by the first amendment.

Furthermore, the subject matter of this investigation is equally limitless and, therefore, violates these same constitutional guarantees.

I add that to the extent it is ascertainable, to the extent that the subject matter of this inquiry is ascertainable, this committee is not authorized by Congress to conduct it.

Therefore, I respectfully contend that the committee has no authority to conduct this investigation.

I also decline to answer the question because I do not believe it is pertinent.

Mr. TAVENNER. You object, then, on the ground of pertinency, as well as the ground of jurisdiction?

Mr. POPPER. Yes, on all of the grounds which I have just stated.

Mr. MOULDER. Do you claim the protection provided for in the Constitution by the fifth amendment?

Mr. POPPER. I am not—I assume you are talking about the privilege against self-incrimination?

Mr. MOULDER. Yes.

Mr. POPPER. I am not claiming the privilege against self-incrimination.

Mr. MOULDER. You decline to answer it for the reasons of your challenge to the jurisdiction and pertinency of the question?

Mr. POPPER. Well, I stated that I declined to answer it on the grounds that I challenge the jurisdiction of the committee, based upon the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court; that I believe the question is violative of my first amendment rights; and that I believe that the subject matter of the inquiry is unlawful; that I believe that the subject matter of the inquiry is outside of the power of this committee to conduct; and that the question is not pertinent.

Mr. MOULDER. The committee does not accept that as a valid reason for refusing to answer the question. The witness is directed to answer the question.

Mr. POPPER. I respectfully decline.

Mr. TAVENNER. I think, Mr. Chairman, in light of the fact that the witness has objected also on the ground of pertinency, that under the provisions of the Watkins case it would be necessary that pertinency be explained to the witness.

Mr. MOULDER. Yes. Proceed.

Mr. TAVENNER. May I say——

Mr. DOYLE. May I at that point state, however, that I think the Watkins case makes it clear that there is more than one way in which a witness can know the pertinency of a question. I submit that the opening statement read by our chairman shows very clearly to this witness the pertinency of the question. That is one way. That is one way under the Watkins case in which the witness can be informed.

He is already informed as to the pertinency under the Watkins decision. I do not object to counsel of the committee going further than that, if he wants to, but I submit that this witness has already been informed as to the pertinency and that the raising of the question of pertinency here, is after he has already been informed. He was informed of the pertinency of this line of questions before he took the oath.

Mr. MOULDER. I will add to that this point: You did hear the statement read by me, did you not, which I read into the record?

Mr. POPPER. Yes.

Mr. DOYLE. He was right here.

Mr. POPPER. I don't want to engage in too lengthy legal dissertation, Mr. Chairman or Congressman DOYLE.

I think you know that for—I say I think you know, if I may address you, respectfully, Congressman DOYLE—that for more than 15 years before the courts of the United States, and I think Mr. Tavenner does, too, and as a practicing lawyer before this committee and otherwise, I have earnestly pleaded that this committee did not have the authority to compel testimony regarding a person's political affiliation. That, it seems to me, after all of these years in which many people have suffered anguish, economic hardship, and so forth, has finally been dealt with by the highest court.

Mr. MOULDER. Now let us proceed.

Mr. POPPER. I merely say that, therefore, my position is one predicated upon my understanding of the meaning of the Court's decision.

Mr. MOULDER. Counsel will proceed.

Mr. TAVENNER. You have specifically relied upon an objection as to pertinency. I think it obvious that the opening statement made by the chairman should be a sufficient explanation of pertinency.

But in order that there be no doubt as to our purpose of complying with the decision of the Supreme Court in the Watkins case, I would like to make some further explanation, which I think should make it unquestionably clear.

The subject of the hearing is passport security. H.R. 2232, referred to this committee, contains certain amendments to the Immigration and Nationality Act entitled "Immigration and Passport Security Act." Chapter 2 deals with passport security, and chapter 3 with passport review procedure.

This bill was offered in an effort to stop the gap in Federal law resulting from the decisions of the Supreme Court in Kent-Briehl v. Dulles, and Dayton v. Dulles.

Another subject of the hearing is to maintain a surveillance over the administration and operations of all laws and regulations within the jurisdiction of this committee relating to the security phrase of the granting of passports.

The question propounded to you is pertinent to the subject in that it relates directly to information which the State Department, under its regulations, was required to obtain in considering passport applications prior to the rendering of the decision in the cases mentioned, and which regulations the committee is now considering should be given statutory effect.

The reasoning of the committee in propounding the question is to demonstrate the gap in Federal security laws, should you in fact have been a member of the Communist Party at the time of the granting of your application for passport, and to give this committee and Congress information as to the problems now confronting the State Department in the passport field, for the purpose of determining the need and urgency of remedial legislation.

Mr. TAVENNER. Now, may I ask that the witness be directed to answer?

Mr. BOUDIN. May I ask if the committee will hear counsel's explanation as to why Mr. Tavenner's response does not adequately show the witness and his counsel the pertinency of the question?

Mr. MOULDER. Counsel understands the question. You have the authority to advise your client and confer with him. Do you wish to have a conference with him before I direct him to answer?

Mr. POPPER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUDIN. May I note an exception to the chairman's ruling, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. MOULDER. The record will show whatever you said.

Mr. BOUDIN. Thank you.

Mr. MOULDER. The witness is directed to answer the question.

Mr. POPPER. I respectfully decline, and state that Mr. Tavenner's analysis and explanation does not, in my opinion, meet the test of pertinency laid down by the Supreme Court. That test is one which requires, in the first place, jurisdictional pertinency. Since it has determined, in my opinion, that the authorizing resolution of this committee is so vague and limitless, it is not possible that this question should meet the test of jurisdictional pertinency, since it is not possible under those circumstances to frame a question which would be pertinent even in a statutory sense.

Therefore—and I would also say that the subject matter of the inquiry as outlined by the chairman today and previously is, itself, so broad, so limitless, that it is not possible to frame a question, and this question specifically is not framed to meet the test of pertinency, particularly since it is in the area of association, which means, specifically, that it cannot be pertinent when the area of investigation is so completely limitless.

Mr. TAVENNER. So you are taking the position that this committee cannot ask any pertinent question because it does not have jurisdiction. That, in essence, is the position you are taking, is it not?

Mr. POPPER. No, I am not conceding that. I have given you my reasons in relation to this specific question.

I would add that the question, in my opinion, has no possible valid legislative purpose.

Mr. MOULDER. We want the record to clearly show that the committee does not accept your response to the question.

Mr. DOYLE. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, and I ask the chairman to again instruct the witness to answer the questions in view of his legal dissertation, as well as in the capacity of a very able witness, since he was previously instructed.

Then there would be no question but that he understands that he is instructed in spite of all his objections.

Mr. MOULDER. I agree. I think the record clearly shows that.

We want to impress upon you that the committee does not accept your answer or response to the question. You are directed to answer. Do you still refuse to answer?

Mr. POPPER. I do, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOULDER. Mr. JOHANSEN, have you a question?

Mr. JOHANSEN. No.

Mr. MOULDER. Proceed, Mr. Tavenner.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Popper, I hand you a photostatic copy of a passport application purportedly executed by you on March 11, 1946.

Will you examine it, please, and state whether or not you signed that application?

(The document was handed to the witness.)

Mr. MOULDER. The record should show that the witness and counsel are making close inspection of the document referred to by counsel.

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. POPPER. Yes, this would seem to be an accurate photostatic copy of my application.

Mr. TAVENNER. I offer the document in evidence and ask that it be marked "Popper Exhibit No. 2."

Mr. MOULDER. It will be so marked.

(Document marked "Popper Exhibit No. 2" and retained in committee files.)

Mr. TAVENNER. Was a passport issued to you, Mr. Popper, pursuant to this application?

Mr. POPPER. It was.

Mr. TAVENNER. It is noted that the application states the purpose of travel as being to Germany; official, War Department.

Will you explain that, please?

Mr. POPPER. Yes, of course.

Mr. Justice Jackson, who was then the chief prosecutor for the United States at the Nuremberg trials, invited two representatives of the National Lawyers Guild and two representatives of the American Bar Association to come to Nuremberg to observe the Nuremberg trial as members of the bar and to report their observations to the bar. I was one of the four, pursuant to that, who accepted the invitation and went.

Mr. MOULDER. What was the date of that, Mr. Tavenner?

Mr. TAVENNER. The date was March 11, 1946.

How long did you remain in Germany? Let me put the question this way: How long were you abroad in traveling under this passport?

Mr. POPPER. Of course, I can't remember exactly, but I think it must have been approximately 6 to 8 weeks.

Mr. TAVENNER. What was your position with the National Lawyers Guild at the time that you engaged in this travel?

Mr. POPPER. I was secretary of the National Lawyers Guild.

Mr. TAVENNER. At the time you made this application for passport, were you a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. POPPER. I decline to answer that question for the reasons already stated.

Mr. MOULDER. You are again directed to answer.

Mr. POPPER. I respectfully decline.

Mr. MOULDER. Then may I ask this question: While you were over there under this passport, did you confer with Communist Party leaders in any foreign country?

Mr. POPPER. Well, I am taking the position that questions regarding political belief, opinion, association, assembly are outside the purview of this committee, and consistent with that I will decline to answer this question on the same grounds.

Mr. TAVENNER. Congress has determined, and has found in its findings of fact in connection with the passage of numerous bills, including the Internal Security Act of 1950, the Communist Control Act of 1954, that the Communist Party is a conspiracy.

You are speaking of membership in the Communist Party as involving only beliefs and opinions. The committee, of course, adopts the view of Congress that membership in the Communist Party is not membership in a political organization in the sense that we understand political organizations in this country, and the courts also have so held.

Will you tell us when you arrived in Germany?

Mr. POPPER. I arrived in Germany shortly after I obtained the passport. I can't tell you exactly when. But I suspect it must have been in March of that year. Isn't that when the application was made?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes, March 1946.

Mr. POPPER. I think it must have been during the month of March.

Mr. TAVENNER. After your arrival in Germany, did you receive an invitation from the Soviet delegation at Nuremberg to visit the Soviet Union as a representative of the National Lawyers Guild?

Mr. POPPER. I received an invitation from one of the distinguished lawyers who was a member of the Soviet legal delegation to go to the Soviet Union and to talk to the lawyers there about my observations of the Nuremberg trial.

I then went to Mr. Justice Jackson, told him I had received this invitation, and asked him his opinion as to whether I should go. It was his opinion that I ought to go, talk to the Soviet lawyers, those who I would see, about my observations at Nuremberg, and requested that I come back to Nuremberg to tell him about my experiences in the Soviet Union.

And I did accept the invitation and did go.

Mr. TAVENNER. How long had you observed the conduct of the trials prior to your departure for the Soviet Union?

Mr. POPPER. I think I was there for about 2 weeks.

Mr. TAVENNER. Was it known by the members of the Soviet delegation who extended the invitation to you that you had been a member of the Communist Party of the United States, or affiliated with it?

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. POPPER. I am afraid that that is merely another form of the same question in which you are attempting to establish my political affiliations, and I decline to answer on the same grounds as before. The form of the question does not in any way affect the substance of the question.

Mr. MOULDER. You are again directed to answer.

Mr. POPPER. I respectfully decline.

Mr. MOULDER. May I add to the question propounded by counsel? Did you advise with Communist Party leaders, or advise and inform them of the Communist Party movement in this country?

Mr. POPPER. Well, as I say, any questions relating to discussions I may have had with anyone regarding political issues is merely another form of the same question.

I respectfully decline to answer that question or questions of a similar kind.

Mr. TAVENNER. While in the Soviet Union, did you discuss the formation of the International Association of Democratic Lawyers and the role which the National Lawyers Guild was expected to play in that organization?

Mr. POPPER. I think that question is too broad in the sense that I could not have discussed an organization not yet in being. I did discuss with lawyers in the Soviet Union the question of the value of, or the possible value of, the formation of an organization of lawyers dedicated to the support of the principles of the United Nations and, generally, in support of the principles of the Nuremberg charter.

Mr. TAVENNER. In September of 1956, did you apply for an additional U.S. passport for the purpose of representing the National Lawyers Guild at the International Congress of Lawyers held in Paris, France?

Mr. POPPER. No; but that is merely, I think, an error on your part that you didn't mean.

It could not have been 1956. I think you mean 1946.

Mr. TAVENNER. It is 1946.

Mr. POPPER. That is right. I did apply—for an additional passport?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. POPPER. I can't remember that, whether I applied again for another passport or whether I still had my passport. I just don't remember that.

Mr. MOULDER. May I inquire?

The second document that you referred to in the testimony which was submitted to the witness for his examination, it should be admitted in evidence in the record at the proper place after it was presented to the witness.

Mr. TAVENNER. It was admitted.

Mr. BOUDIN. It was exhibit 2, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TAVENNER. It was admitted as exhibit 2.

Mr. MOULDER. Well, it should have been marked as "Exhibit No. 2" and received after it was submitted to the witness.

Mr. TAVENNER. I hand you a photostatic copy of an application for passport purportedly signed by you on September 26, 1946, and ask you whether or not that is the passport to which you refer.

(Document was handed to the witness.)

Mr. POPPER. Yes; that would seem to be an accurate photostatic copy.

Mr. TAVENNER. I desire to offer the application in evidence and ask that it be marked "Popper Exhibit No. 3."

Mr. MOULDER. The document referred to by counsel will be marked "Popper Exhibit No. 3" and admitted in evidence, made a part of the record.

(Document marked "Popper Exhibit No. 3" and retained in committee files.)

Mr. TAVENNER. Did you attend the meeting of the International Congress of Lawyers, in Paris?

Mr. POPPER. I did attend a meeting of lawyers. I cannot remember what the title of the conference was. But at any rate I did attend a meeting.

Mr. TAVENNER. Did you attend it as a representative of the National Lawyers Guild?

Mr. POPPER. Yes.

Mr. TAVENNER. What position did you hold in the guild at that time?

Mr. POPPER. I was secretary of the guild.

Mr. TAVENNER. Will you give us the names of other delegates from the National Lawyers Guild who attended the conference with you?

Mr. POPPER. No. I think that question is not pertinent. As a matter of fact, it would seem to me to indicate the validity of what the court said, that this sort of question has for its purpose nothing but exposure. It has no legislative purpose whatsoever. It is not pertinent. And, of course, all the other objections which I previously stated I also use in my defense in connection with this question.

Mr. TAVENNER. Were you a member of the Communist Party at the time of your attendance at that convention in Paris?

Mr. POPPER. I decline to answer that question upon the same grounds.

Mr. MOULDER. The committee reiterates our position in that we don't accept the answer. We make it clear that the witness should answer the question.

Mr. BOUDIN. The committee does understand the reference to the term of "the same grounds," does it not, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. MOULDER. I understand that. But we want also to have the record show that we are not accepting his responses to the questions.

Mr. TAVENNER. In July 1948, did you apply for a renewal of your passport application for the purpose of attending a conference of the International Association of Democratic Lawyers?

(Document was handed to the witness.)

Mr. TAVENNER. I have handed you a photostatic copy of such a renewal application.

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. POPPER. That seems to be an accurate photostatic copy.

Mr. TAVENNER. I desire to offer the document in evidence and ask that it be marked "Popper Exhibit No. 4."

Mr. MOULDER. The document referred to by counsel and examined by the witness will be marked "Popper Exhibit No. 4" and admitted in evidence.

(Document marked "Popper Exhibit No. 4" and retained in committee files.)

Mr. TAVENNER. Did you attend a conference of the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, in Prague, Czechoslovakia, on September 6, 1948, traveling under the renewal of your passport?

Mr. POPPER. Yes. I can't remember the precise date, but I assume that you are correct in it because you have some information. At any rate, I did attend the conference.

Mr. TAVENNER. Were you a member of the Communist Party at the time that you were in attendance at this convention or conference?

Mr. POPPER. I decline to answer the question upon the same grounds.

Mr. TAVENNER. During a session of the conference, did you address the convention on the subject of indictments of the first-string Communist leaders in the United States, at which time you warned that "indictment of Communist leaders presages the beginning of the end of the constitutional form of government in America"?

Mr. POPPER. Well I don't recall that phrase, Mr. Tavenner. Actually, it doesn't sound like a formulation which I would make. Let me try to answer it fully, though the essence of my concern for the ill effects of that prosecution are stated correctly.

I will say this: I made a speech at that congress dealing with the general subject of the state of civil liberties in the United States. At that particular time—as a matter of fact, it was a sort of a historical and constitutional analysis of the first amendment rights as guaranteed by our Constitution; and since I did feel then, as I do feel now, that the Smith Act and the prosecutions under the Smith Act were very basic violations of first amendment rights and that, unless successfully challenged, they would endanger our constitutional scheme, I certainly included that belief in this analysis in the speech that I made.

Mr. TAVENNER. May I refresh your recollection by handing for your examination an article taken from the Daily Worker of September 9, 1948, page 2, entitled, "Europeans May Visit Trial of CP [Communist Party] Leaders," in which a proposal is alleged to have been made by you.

I have bracketed the language which I quoted in my question to you.

Mr. TAVENNER. Will you examine that, please, and state whether or not you were correctly quoted in the matter appearing in quotations in that article?

Mr. POPPER. I think I have already answered that. I cannot possibly be responsible for a quotation in any newspaper. I say that my recollection of that speech that I made is what I told you a few moments ago.

Mr. TAVENNER. That does not suffice to refresh your recollection as to the language that you used?

Mr. POPPER. How could it possibly, Mr. Tavenner?

Mr. TAVENNER. Well, it may refresh your recollection, and I am asking you if it does.

Mr. POPPER. I am trying to answer your question as directly as I can. I cannot possibly remember the words or the phrases that I used in any speech as long ago as that. I did make a critical evaluation of the Smith Act and of the prosecutions under the Smith Act. I said to you I felt then, and I feel now, that the Smith Act is violative of our Bill of Rights and that I think it has served to endanger the freedoms of the American people. I said that in some form then and I would say it now.

Mr. TAVENNER. I desire to offer——

Mr. DOYLE. May I ask the witness a question which I think is pertinent in view of the discussion?

Does the quotation allegedly assigned to you in this newspaper article which you have just seen substantially represent any part of what you said?

Mr. POPPER. I would say that what it does represent is the fact that I was opposed to the enactment of the Smith Act, and I believed that it violates the first amendment guarantees.

Mr. MOULDER. This document referred to by counsel is a reprint from the Daily Worker of September 9, 1948. It will be marked "Popper Exhibit No. 5."

(Document marked "Popper Exhibit No. 5" and retained in committee files.)

Mr. MOULDER. The witness has read this article and examined it carefully.

As I understand you, Mr. Popper, you say that in essence this is a correct quotation or, in effect, it is a correct quotation?

Mr. POPPER. No; I haven't said that at all. I don't want to be responsible for a quotation which is a newspaper quotation. I can't possibly do that.

I am not quibbling with the committee. I told you what I feel about the Smith Act. I told you that I made a speech, part of which was devoted to my evaluation, as a lawyer, of the violations which, in my opinion, are caused by the Smith Act; why I believe it is a very bad law. That is as much as I can say.

Mr. MOULDER. In other words, it was a speech in criticism of the Smith Act and the prosecution of the Communists, American Communist leaders referred to in this article? It was a criticism of the Smith Act and a criticism of the prosecution of the Communist Party leaders referred to in this article under the Smith Act?

Mr. POPPER. That is correct. But I would say that the speech dealt with that subject in a larger context, in terms of my understanding of the meaning of the first amendment to the Constitution and how it was the cornerstone of our constitutional scheme.

Mr. BOUDIN. Would you excuse me a moment? I wish to consult.

Mr. MOULDER. Since there have been so many questions asked about it, exhibit 5 will be admitted into evidence and made a part of the record.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Popper, at the time you made this speech at the conference of the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, you were a delegate to that conference from the Lawyers Guild and you were secretary of the Lawyers Guild, of the National Lawyers Guild. Did that represent the views or the action of the National Lawyers Guild at that time?

Mr. POPPER. In the first place, I am not certain that I was any longer secretary of the guild at that time. I may have been, but I am not sure. I was there, however, as a representative of the guild. The speech which I made was my own speech.

As I recall it, the National Lawyers Guild had been critical of the prosecutions under the Smith Act and had appeared as amicus curiae in some of the Smith Act cases before the courts. However, the speech was my own.

Mr. TAVENNER. Were you a member of the Communist Party at the time you made that speech?

Mr. POPPER. I decline to answer for the reasons already stated. I should like to add the fact that there are questions which I am answering in no way is intended to constitute a waiver of my fundamental objections to the authority of the committee.

Mr. TAVENNER. And it is a fact that the committee does not waive its position in refusing to accept as a valid excuse for refusal to answer the statements made by the witness?

Mr. MOULDER. That is correct. That is the position taken by the committee on all the questions which he has refused to answer, and the same direction is given.

Mr. JOHANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a matter of interest which should be underscored in the record that there is no invocation of this protest against the matter of the association in a great many areas, the National Lawyers Guild and a great many others, but it is only in connection with the Communist Party, apparently, that the invocation occurs.

Mr. MOULDER. That is an observation made by Mr. JOHANSEN.

Mr. POPPER. May I have the opportunity to respond to the observation?

Mr. MOULDER. Yes.

Mr. POPPER. In the first place, I deem it important to emphasize, as indeed the Supreme Court has emphasized, that probably the most fundamental right of association is the right of political association, political affiliation. As a matter of fact, that is really the heart of the fundamental meaning of the rights guaranteed to the people in influencing the course of the policies of our Government.

Mr. MOULDER. In that connection, may I ask you, do you consider the Communist Party or the international Communist Party a movement in the light of political affiliation as we so consider it here in America, as we consider political association?

Mr. POPPER. I would only say this, that I believe that any inquiry or investigation into a person's membership in the Communist Party falls within the same constitutional guarantees as his membership in any other political party. That is generally the constitutional position which I take.

I believe that that is the direction which the Court has taken, and I believe, as a matter of fact, that the determination of that question is probably at the center of the great concern which I and many others have had over these many years regarding the unlawful character of these inquiries.

Mr. DOYLE. May I inquire? You say the direction which the Court has taken. Do you know of any decision by our high courts which holds that the Communist Party is a political party?

Mr. POPPER. Well, yes, there are such decisions.

Mr. DOYLE. My recollection is that our courts have very uniformly held that the Communist Party in this country is not a political party in the sense of the experience of the American people. It is anything but. They have generally held that it is a conspiracy.

Have you any decision to the contrary?

Mr. POPPER. Yes. I don't think that you state the law correctly.

Mr. DOYLE. I am not undertaking to state it verbatim.

Mr. POPPER. As a matter of fact, in the very area of passports, the Supreme Court in the Kent-Brielh case has said the following, and it is a short quote directly in response to what you are asking:

"We deal with beliefs, with associations, with ideological matters. We must remember that we are dealing here with citizens who have neither been accused of crimes nor found guilty. They are being denied their freedom of movement solely because of their refusal to be subjected to inquiry into their beliefs and associations. They do not seek to escape the law nor to violate it. They may or may not be Communists. But assuming they are, the only law which Congress has passed expressly curtailing the movement of Communists across our borders has not yet become effective."

Let me add to that that the Congress itself, in the Internal Security Act, has quite specifically stated that membership in the Communist Party, per se, even officership in the Communist Party, per se, is not violative of criminal law.

So you see this issue—which I think has been very largely misunderstood and which I believe lies at the very heart of the problems we are confronted with here today, and have been for many years, and which I set forth with what I hope you believe, and I think you do, with earnestness and sincerity—is one that, in my opinion, requires the kind of solution which I have indicated it does by the nature of my objection.

Mr. DOYLE. I think you referred to a decision by a 5 to 4 vote?

Mr. POPPER. Yes.

Mr. DOYLE. Am I in error?

Mr. POPPER. No, you are quite correct.

Mr. TAVENNER. The portion that you read of the decision does not squarely go to the question that you have raised. But I notice that you failed to refer to Justice Jackson's decision in the Douds case, in which he specifically held that the Communist Party is not a political organization within the meaning and sense as we know it in this country. And neither have you referred to Justice Prettyman's decision in which he said that he was willing to go along with Congress in its findings as to the nature of the conspiracy in which the Communists are involved.

Mr. POPPER. Of course, the opinion you speak of was not the opinion of the Court, in the first place. But since then there have been so many decisions, including most recently the Yates decision, by the Court, the decision on passport cases, the Watkins decision relating to congressional investigations, that I think that your statement is not accurate as a matter of law.

Mr. MOULDER. Lest we get into too many arguments concerning the decisions of the Supreme Court and differences of opinion about the law, you have refused to give us any answers to questions concerning your activity while over in Europe in connection with your passport. It is possible that you may have some information about your conferences and discussions with Soviet party leaders, as well as Soviet officials, while abroad concerning the Communist Party activities in this country, its objectives in connection with the international Communist movement.

You have refused to answer questions which counsel was attempting to lead up to concerning that subject and that matter, I should say.

Mr. POPPER. I would only comment that it is not correct to say that I have refused to answer questions regarding my trips abroad.

Mr. JOHANSEN. Let the record show that the chairman did not say that.

Mr. POPPER. I beg your pardon. I understood the chairman did say that, but I am perfectly willing——

Mr. MOULDER. I will ask you this question: While you were overseas, did you have conferences with any Soviet officials while in Russia?

Mr. POPPER. The question is far too vague for me to be able to answer in the first place.

Mr. MOULDER. That is a very simple question as to whether or not you had a conference with a Soviety party leader or Soviet party official.

Mr. POPPER. No, the question is not specific as to time, what trip you are talking about.

Mr. MOULDER. We will say any time while you were over in Russia, in the Soviet Union.

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. POPPER. I see. Thus far I have been asked only about discussions relating to the possibility of discussions of an association nature, of a political nature. Those are the only questions which I have refused to answer. Therefore, what you have just said must necessarily be confined to the questions which have thus far been asked. Should I be asked questions that are not within that area but are possibly questions that I would answer, having to do with trips abroad, we would have a difficult situation.

But thus far I have only been asked questions——

Mr. MOULDER. I just asked you that question.

Mr. POPPER. What was that?

Mr. MOULDER. Whether or not any time while you were overseas and in the Soviet Union you conferred with any Soviet officials.

Mr. POPPER. I said, for instance, first while I was at Nuremberg, that I was invited to the Soviet Union by not a government official, but a member of the Soviet delegation there. I have gone abroad on legal business. And while abroad on legal business, for instance, I did discuss affairs of law, legal representation. As far as I can remember, however, while in the Soviet Union, that is to say while I was in the Soviet Union, I did discuss with one or more officials the problems connected with my legal representation.

As I say, I will certainly be glad to tell you that.

Mr. MOULDER. You say you discussed with one or more of the Soviet Union officials your problems in connection with your representation?

Mr. POPPER. Not my problems. Legal problems in connection with professional——

Mr. DOYLE. Of course, we are not interested in questioning you as to your professional representation of any client, as I see it. I am sure there was no indication by any of us that we are interested in that field, certainly.

Mr. MOULDER. Let me ask this one more question:

Did you discuss with those officials, or any other officials, the progress being made by the Communist Party in the United States?

Mr. BOUDIN. Did you say the progress, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. MOULDER. The progress of the Communist Party.

Or did you make a report or give them any information concerning the Communist Party in this country?

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. POPPER. If you are implying or if you are asking whether I, in some official capacity, either carried instruction or anything of that kind, I did not.

If you are asking me whether I had discussions on my own with regard to politics, and so forth, I will tell you I will decline to answer such questions, because it is just another variation of the same sort of question which I have said you have no right to inquire into.

Mr. MOULDER. You referred to your problems in a legal capacity. Did you discuss with the Soviet officials the problems of the Communist Party in this country?

Mr. POPPER. I just answered that question.

Mr. DOYLE. May I ask a question that may be a little bit different?

While over there in the Soviet Union, during the period we are discussing, did you discuss with Soviet Communist Party leaders or officials the activities of the Communist Party in the United States? I am not referring now to their ideology, their beliefs, but I am referring to their activities in the United States.

Mr. POPPER. Surely, Mr. DOYLE, you must understand that again what you are doing is attempting to establish whether I am, or have been, a member of the Communist Party. I have respectfully declined to answer that.

Mr. DOYLE. I didn't assume that, Mr. Popper, in my question. You are an American citizen. I would assume that you would have a right to go to Europe, even to Soviet Russia, and discuss even with Soviet Communist officials, if you did it without violating your citizenship in the United States and your pledges of citizenship. I would assume that you would have a legal right to discuss, wouldn't you, the activities of the Communist Party of the United States?

Mr. POPPER. I should think I would have the right to discuss any subject of the kind you are talking about with anyone, anywhere in the world.

Mr. DOYLE. Why, then, do you object to answering my question?

Mr. POPPER. I told you why. Because your question seeks to establish whether I am or was a member of the Communist Party.

Mr. DOYLE. I am not seeking to establish that.

Mr. POPPER. That is what I understand to be the meaning of your question.

Mr. DOYLE. I will say in asking the question I am not assuming you are a Communist, no matter what I know or believe.

Mr. BOUDIN. That statement is clearly improper, Mr. DOYLE. I think you know that. I suggest you withdraw it.

Mr. MOULDER. Counsel understands the rules of the committee.

I have one more question to ask the witness at this point.

While you were there in conference, as you state that you were, with Soviet officials or Soviet party leaders, did you advise them or inform them of industrial problems, economic problems, and the general philosophy of our Government as it exists in this country or any other matters concerning industrial production, unemployment, and your opinion as to the sentiment of the people of this country on those problems, aside from political affiliations, independent of what you call political affiliations?

Mr. POPPER. I frankly don't understand your question. It has so many things about it that I don't know how to even approach an answer to that question.

Mr. BOUDIN. Mr. Chairman, excuse me a second.

Mr. MOULDER. I think the question is quite clear.

Proceed.

Mr. JOHANSEN. Did you, at any time while you were in the Soviet Union, discuss with officials of either the Soviet Union or the Communist Party the matter of whether the Smith Act is violative of the constitutional guarantees and the Bill of Rights?

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. POPPER. I really have no recollection of any such specific discussion on that subject, except as I have told you in relation to talking with lawyers about the subject. That is about the only thing I can recall in that line.

Mr. MOULDER. Proceed, Mr. Tavenner.

Mr. TAVENNER. I hand you a photostatic copy of an application purportedly signed by you on March 30, 1954. Will you examine it, please, and state whether or not you filed that application?

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. TAVENNER. State also whether or not that is your signature.

Mr. MOULDER. That will be exhibit No. 6?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes, sir. I desire to offer the document in evidence and ask that it be marked "Popper Exhibit No. 6."

Mr. MOULDER. The record will show that the witness and counsel are examining the document referred to, that is, the witness' counsel and the witness. It is marked "Popper Exhibit No. 6."

(Document marked "Popper Exhibit No. 6" and retained in committee files.)

Mr. POPPER. It looks like an accurate photostatic copy. The date of the application is March 30, 1954. I call your attention to the fact that on the front of it there is a date of July 3, 1957. I don't know the reason for that.

But at any rate I will say that is probably correct.

Mr. MOULDER. Exhibit No. 6 is admitted in evidence and will be made a part of the record.

Mr. TAVENNER. Did you receive the passport pursuant to that application?

Mr. POPPER. No.

Mr. TAVENNER. Did you receive a letter from the State Department with regard to it?

Mr. POPPER. I think I did.

Mr. TAVENNER. I hand you a photostatic copy of what is alleged to be a letter sent to you in response to your application.

Will you examine it, please?

(Document was handed to the witness.)

Mr. MOULDER. The document referred to by counsel will be marked "Popper Exhibit No. 7." The record will show the witness is examining the document.

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

(Document marked "Popper Exhibit No. 7" and retained in committee files.)

Mr. POPPER. Yes, I believe that is the letter I received.

Mr. MOULDER. That is a true and correct copy of the letter referred to by counsel, a photostatic copy?

Mr. POPPER. It seems to me. I think it is correct.

Mr. MOULDER. Exhibit No. 7 is admitted in evidence and made a part of the record.

Mr. TAVENNER. I desire to read the letter into evidence. This is a letter from R. B. Shipley, Director, Passport Office. It is under date of June 4, 1954, and it is addressed to Mr. Martin Popper, 860 Riverside Drive, New York, N.Y.:

"DEAR MR. POPPER: I regret to inform you that after careful consideration of your application for passport facilities which you executed on March 30, 1954, the Department of State is obliged to disapprove your application tentatively on the ground that the granting of such passport facilities is precluded under the provisions of section 51.135 of title 22 of the Code of Federal Regulations. A copy of the pertinent regulations is enclosed for your information.

"In cases coming within the purview of the regulations above referred to, it is the practice of the Department to inform the applicant of the reasons for the disapproval of his request for passport facilities insofar as the security regulations will permit. In your case it has been alleged that you were a Communist.

"The Department has concluded that your case also falls within the scope of subsection (b) of section 51.135 as that subsection is amplified by subsection (b) of section 51.141 of the aforementioned regulations. The opinion of the Department is that the evidence indicates on your part a consistent and prolonged adherence to the Communist Party line on a variety of issues and through shifts and changes of that line during a period of many years. It has been alleged that you were a member of the National Lawyers Guild and represented that organization at a meeting of the National Delegation of Democratic Lawyers held in Prague commencing on September 6, 1948. It was also alleged that you were a sponsor of the Pro-Soviet Cultural and Scientific Conference for World Peace held at New York City on March 25, 1949, and that you were a moderator on the topic "Peace and Civil Rights" on June 7, 1949, at the Citizens Conference for Peace which was held on June 7, 8, 1949, at New York City. It was further alleged that you were selected by the Communist Party to endeavor to influence Judge Medina to grant a motion for mistrial in the trial of the 11 Communists, and that you helped prepare the brief in support of the motion to stay execution of judgment for contempt of the lawyers who participated in the trial of the 11 Communist leaders. You were reported to have attended the celebration of the 30th anniversary of the founding of the Republic of Czechoslovakia on October 28, 1948, and you also accepted an invitation to the 31st anniversary of the October revolution held at the Soviet Embassy on November 7, 1948. You were alleged to have been active in endeavoring to prevent the enactment of the Mundt-Nixon bill and you were reported to have signed an open letter to Senators and Congressmen urging the defeat of President Truman's arms program. Your connection with the National Council of the Arts, Sciences and Professions is also said to have followed the Communist Party line.

"You are also alleged to have been a member of the board of directors of the American Committee for the Protection of Foreign Born, a member of the executive committee of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, and a member of the Civil Rights Congress. The above-named organizations have been cited by the Attorney General as subversive and Communistic.

"It is also alleged that you have spoken in favor of the Communist movement and have been closely associated with known Communists.

"Under section 51.137 of the regulations you may present your case and all relevant information informally to the Passport Office. If you desire to take advantage of this provision you may appear before a hearing officer of the Passport Office and you may be represented by counsel. In any event you will be required to submit a sworn statement whether you are now or ever have been a Communist.

"If you do not desire a hearing, the Department will give consideration to any written statement under oath which you may desire to submit concerning the matter, provided that you include therein a statement as to whether you are now or ever have been a Communist.

"You are assured that any information or evidence which you may supply will receive most careful consideration," and so forth.

Mr. BOUDIN. Have you read the entire letter?

Mr. TAVENNER. No.

Mr. BOUDIN. Is there a reason?

Mr. TAVENNER. No. I will read it. I was just looking at it.

"And that every effort will be made to act upon your application promptly and justly. The Department desires to emphasize that the passport records are confidential Government records and any information which you may submit or which may be received from other sources in connection with your application will not be made known to the public or to any unauthorized person unless you release it. The Department reserves the right to disclose factual information to supplement or correct any statement which a passport applicant may release for publication concerning the reasons why he was denied a passport or the Department's action in his case.

"If a reply to this letter is not received within 30 days it will be assumed that you do not wish to have your case reconsidered at this time.

"Sincerely yours,

"R. B. SHIPLEY,
"Director, Passport Office
"(For the Secretary of State.)"

You did not reply to that letter, did you?

Mr. POPPER. No, that is not accurate.

It would seem to me the fact that you do not know that I made a response to that would indicate that the policies which the Department says it carries out in that letter have been violated in a number of ways. It is, I might say, a very shocking thing for a citizen to come before this committee and find that what the Department itself indicated would be confidential communications between it and citizens are disclosed for purposes such as this hearing. The fact is that I made the following response:

I met with a representative of the Department and told him why I believe that the denial of the passport on the grounds set forth were unlawful, and why they violated my rights in several different respects.

I filed a brief in support of my legal position. I also responded quite specifically, and I wish to today, to two allegations relating to my professional activities, one which makes the statement, unfounded in fact as far as I can tell, that I had anything whatsoever to do with any effort to influence Judge Medina in connection with the trial which he was then conducting. The undisputed fact is that I never did any such thing or had anything to do with any such thing.

I respond to that because it deals with my professional activity, my professional conduct. But it is a sign of irresponsibility of a Government agency that it should make a statement of that kind regarding a lawyer.

I also responded directly to the other allegation regarding professional activity on my part, which was based, among other things, in the refusal to give me a passport, namely that I filed a brief, or something to that effect, in support of a lawyer or lawyers who were appealing from a conviction of contempt of court. I pointed out to the Department that indeed I was the lawyer in one stage of the proceeding and argued the case before a member of the U.S. Supreme Court, and that to assert that as a ground for denial of a passport shows how far they were going in those days.

In any event, I am very glad, of course, as are so many other American citizens, that the power asserted by the Department in those days has been held finally to be unlawful.

Mr. TAVENNER. Were you employed by the Communist Party to perform any function in the Smith Act trial or of any of the attorneys charged with contempt in that case?

Mr. POPPER. The question is a most improper one as to who employs a lawyer or retains a lawyer. That is certainly not pertinent to any investigation this committee has a right to make. But the fact of the matter is I was retained by the defendants in that contempt of court proceeding.

Mr. DOYLE. May I inquire? Was the Communist Party a defendant in that proceeding?

Mr. POPPER. No.

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. POPPER. The Communist Party was not a defendant.

Mr. DOYLE. I felt that my question was proper in view of your observation.

Mr. POPPER. As I say, I don't think that any of these questions are proper, but they deal with an area of my professional relationship and also what the State Department said about it.

The defendants in that case were the lawyers and Eugene Dennis, who was acting on his own behalf during the trial. He was pro se.

Mr. TAVENNER. Were you a member of the Civil Rights Congress prior to that time or at that time?

Mr. POPPER. Well, you know, I don't recall that. I know there was such an assertion made, but I don't recall whether or not I was ever a member of the Civil Rights Congress. I cannot either affrm or deny that, because I really don't know. I don't remember.

Mr. TAVENNER. Were you a member of the executive committee of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties?

Mr. POPPER. Well, I don't know that either. I don't recall that I was ever in that position.

But I really don't know. I can't recall whether I was a member of the board of directors or not.

Mr. TAVENNER. Were you affiliated with the National Council of the Arts, Sciences and Professions?

Mr. POPPER. Yes.

Mr. TAVENNER. Were you a member of the Communist Party in 1954 when you made this application for a passport?

Mr. POPPER. I decline to answer that question upon the same grounds.

Mr. TAVENNER. Did you make application for an additional passport prior to April 1956 for the purpose of visiting the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, and Hungary?

Mr. POPPER. Prior to 1956?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. POPPER. I will have to have my recollection refreshed.

Mr. BOUDIN. Have you an application there which will guide us as to date, et cetera, Mr. Tavenner?

Mr. TAVENNER. The date does not appear but there is a statement that you plan to travel prior to April 29, 1956. It is not signed.

(Document was handed to the witness.)

Mr. POPPER. That seems to be an unsigned application.

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes; I said it was an unsigned application. I ask you if you did apply.

Mr. POPPER. I think this does refresh my recollection.

I think I applied for a passport in 1956 for the purpose of making a business trip, and I think it was a request for a passport for a limited period of time. I don't know whether that appears on here or not.

Yes; it does—3 to 4 months. I said that was the length of stay.

I think I did, as a matter of fact, ask for that if they would not give me 1 or 2 years.

Mr. TAVENNER. Was that application denied?

Mr. POPPER. Well, if it can be said to be an application it was denied. The only point I am making is that it was not signed. So I don't know what the formal status of the application was. But I think it was denied, however.

Mr. TAVENNER. Didn't you receive a letter from Frances G. Knight, Director of Passport Office, dated April 23, 1956, denying specifically the application.

I hand you the letter for your examination.

(Document was handed to the witness.)

Mr. POPPER. Yes, I think that is accurate.

Mr. TAVENNER. I desire to offer the letter in evidence and ask that it be marked "Popper Exhibit No. 8."

Mr. MOULDER. The document referred to will be marked "Exhibit No. 8" and admitted into evidence.

(Document marked "Popper Exhibit No. 8" and retained in committee files.)

Mr. TAVENNER. I will quote this from the letter:

"This action is predicated upon information reflecting membership in the Communist Party and participation over a span of years in the activities of Communist front organizations. The Department has reason to believe that your proposed travel would further the cause of the world Communist movement. The Department feels, therefore, that the extension of passport facilities to you would be contrary to the national interest."

Were you a member of the Communist Party at that time, April 23, 1956?

Mr. POPPER. I respectfully decline to answer upon the same grounds.

Mr. TAVENNER. Had you been a member of the Communist Party at any time prior to that?

Mr. POPPER. I respectfully decline to answer that question upon the same grounds.

Mr. MOULDER. At this point, ask him if he is a member of the Communist Party now.

Are you a member of the Communist Party, Mr. Popper?

Mr. POPPER. I respectfully decline to answer upon the same grounds.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Popper, there was a witness before this committee in December 1955 by the name of Mr. Mortimer Riemer. Mr. Riemer had been a member of the Communist Party of New York. He was a lawyer. He advised this committee of the circumstances relating to his becoming a member of the Communist Party and the reasons for his getting out of the Communist Party. He was the first secretary of the National Lawyers Guild.

He gave this committee considerable information regarding the organization, the initial organization, of the National Lawyers Guild.

I asked him to describe the Communist Party group to which he was first assigned. He said it was a group composed exclusively of lawyers in New York City. He identified some of those.

In one statement he identified Martin Popper, Alex Racobin, and Harry Sacher as members of that group with him.

Was he correct in identifying you as a member of that group of the Communist Party?

Mr. BOUDIN. Could I see the testimony referred to?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes, sir.

(Document was handed to the witness.)

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. POPPER. I decline to answer that question upon the same grounds.

Mr. TAVENNER. May I have a direction that he answer?

Mr. MOULDER. The witness is directed to answer the question.

Mr. TAVENNER. I have no further questions, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOULDER. Any questions, Mr. DOYLE?

Mr. DOYLE. No questions.

Mr. MOULDER. Mr. JOHANSEN?

Mr. JOHANSEN. No questions.

Mr. MOULDER. The witness is excused.

Because of the foregoing, the said Committee on Un-American Activities was deprived of answers to pertinent questions propounded to the said Martin Popper, relative to the subject matter which, under Public Law 601, section 121, subsection (q)(2) of the 79th Congress, and under House Resolution 7 of the 86th Congress, the said committee was instructed to investigate, and the refusal of the witness to answer the questions, namely:

"The purpose of this hearing, Mr. Popper, is to determine, among other things, whether or not the Secretary of State should be given authority, by legislation, to require passport applicants to furnish information of the nature called for in these three questions. I would, therefore, like to ask you if at the time you executed your application for a passport you were a member of the Communist Party?

"At the time you made this application for passport, were you a member of the Communist Party?

"Were you a member of the Communist Party at the time of your attendance at that convention in Paris?

"Were you a member of the Communist Party at the time you made that speech?

"Mr. Popper, there was a witness before this committee in December 1955 by the name of Mr. Mortimer Riemer. Mr. Riemer had been a member of the Communist Party of New York. He was a lawyer. He advised this committee of the circumstances relating to his becoming a member of the Communist Party and the reasons for his getting out of the Communist Party. He was the first secretary of the National Lawyers Guild.

"He gave this committee considerable information regarding the organization, the initial organization, of the National Lawyers Guild.

"I asked him to describe the Communist Party group to which he was first assigned. He said it was a group composed exclusively of lawyers in New York City. He identified some of those.

"In one statement he identified Martin Popper, Alex Racobin, and Harry Sacher as members of that group with him.

"Was he correct in identifying you as a member of that group of the Communist Party?"

which questions were pertinent to the subject under inquiry, is a violation of the subpena under which the witness had previously appeared, and his refusal to answer the aforesaid questions deprived your committee of necessary and pertinent testimony and places the said witness in contempt of the House of Representatives of the United States.

Other pertinent committee proceedings

The following resolution was adopted at the organizational meeting of the committee for the 86th Congress, held on the 23d day of January 1959:

"Be it resolved, That the chairman be authorized and empowered from time to time to appoint subcommittees composed of three or more members of the Committee on Un-American Activities, at least one of whom shall be of the minority political party, and a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, for the purpose of performing any and all acts which the committee as a whole is authorized to perform."

The following is an extract from the minutes of an executive session of the subcommittee of the Committee on Un-American Activities, consisting of Representatives MORGAN M. MOULDER, chairman; CLYDE DOYLE, and AUGUST E. JOHANSEN, held on September 1, 1959, in room 225, Old House Office Building.

"The subcommittee was called to order by the chairman of the full committee who stated the purpose of the meeting was to consider what action the subcommittee should take regarding the refusal of Martin Popper to answer material questions propounded to him in the course of the hearings conducted by the said subcommittee beginning on the 5th day of June 1959, and what recommendation it would make regarding his citation for contempt of the House of Representatives.

"After full consideration of the testimony of the witness, given at the said hearing in Washington, D.C., a motion was made by Mr. DOYLE, seconded by Mr. JOHANSEN and unanimously carried, that a report of the facts relating to the refusal of Martin Popper to answer material questions before the said subcommittee at the hearing aforesaid, be referred and submitted to the Committee on Un-American Activities as a whole, with the recommendation that a report of the facts relating to the refusal of said witness to answer material questions, together with all of the facts in connection therewith, be referred to the House of Representatives, with the recommendation that the said witness be cited for contempt of the House of Representatives for his refusal to answer questions therein set forth, to the end that he may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law."

The following is an extract from the minutes of an executive session of the Committee on Un-American Activities, consisting of Hon. FRANCIS E. WALTER, chairman; Hon. MORGAN M. MOULDER, Hon. CLYDE DOYLE, Hon. EDWIN E. WILLIS, Hon. WILLIAM M. TUCK, and Hon. AUGUST E. JOHANSEN, held on the 1st day of September 1959, in room 225, Old House Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

"The report of the facts relating to the refusal of Martin Popper to answer material questions was submitted to the committee, upon which a motion was made by Mr. MOULDER, seconded by Mr. JOHANSEN, and unanimously carried, that the subcommittee's report of the facts relating to the refusal of Martin Popper to answer material questions before the said subcommittee at the hearing conducted before it in Washington, D.C., on the 5th day of June 1959, be and the same is hereby approved and adopted, and that the Committee on Un-American Activities report and refer the said refusal to answer questions before the said subcommittee, together with all the facts in connection therewith, to the House of Representatives, with the recommendation that the witness be cited for contempt of the House of Representatives for his refusal to answer such questions, to the end that he may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law."

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HALEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 159]

Albert	Davis, Tenn.	Marshall
Andrews	Derwinski	Minshall
Anfuso	Durham	O'Brien, N.Y.
Baumhart	Flynn	Osmers
Blitch	Ford	Poage
Bolton	Frazier	Powell
Bonner	Gray	Roberts
Brown, Mo.	Hall	St. George
Broyhill	Holifield	Shelley
Canfield	Jones, Mo.	Sikes
Carter	Lesinski	Thompson, N.J.
Celler	McDonough	Van Pelt
Cooley	McMillan	Westland
Dague	Machrowicz	Willis

The SPEAKER. On this rollcall 394 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST MARTIN POPPER

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 374) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives certify the report of the Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives as to the refusal of Martin Popper to answer questions before a duly constituted subcommittee of the Committee on Un-American Activities, together with all of the facts in connection therewith, under the seal of the House of Representatives, to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia, to the end that the said Martin Popper may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MOULDER].

Mr. MOULDER. Mr. Speaker, the hearings referred to in the report concerning the witness, Martin Popper, were held on June 5. The Committee on Un-American Activities was seeking information to enable our committee to proceed on the question of the advisability of recommending legislation expressing the will and intent of Congress, spelling it out in direct and positive form, in granting authority to the Secretary of State to issue, withhold, or limit passports for international travel of members of the Communist Party and the granting of specific authority to the Secretary of State to issue regulations on this subject.

This witness was subpenaed before the committee for hearings held in the House caucus room on the 5th day of June. He refused to answer any of the important and relevant questions propounded to him on this subject, and in refusing to answer he did not invoke any of the provisions of the Constitution and did not claim the protection of any of the provisions of the Constitution in declining to answer, but he refused to answer on the claim that the committee did not have jurisdiction and that the questions were not pertinent to the subject under investigation.

The subject of the investigation, the purposes of our hearings, and the pertinency of the questions propounded to the witness were clearly stated and explained to the witness, yet he refused to answer all of the important questions propounded to him with the exception of a few introductory questions in connection with his identity. For example, we asked him this question:

At the time you made this application for passport were you a member of the Communist Party?

He refused to answer that question claiming it was not pertinent to the subject matter under inquiry.

We asked another question:

Were you a member of the Communist Party at the time of your attendance at the convention in Paris?

He again refused to answer, claiming it was not pertinent to the subject under inquiry.

Many other questions were asked him along that line. We contend that the questions which he refused to answer were relevant and pertinent to the subject matter under inquiry and that the witness wrongfully and without legal reason refused to answer and provide the committee the information sought. Our subcommittee met and reported the facts to the Committee on Un-American Activities and passed a resolution recommending to the full committee that this witness, Martin Popper, be cited for contempt. The full committee approved and adopted the report and recommendation as presented today by our chairman, Mr. WALTER. In order to preserve and protect the authority of Congress and to enable the committee to carry on with the duties assigned to us by Congress as provided in Public Law 601, this witness should be cited for contempt.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JOHANSEN].

Mr. JOHANSEN. Mr. Speaker, by way of corroborating the statements made by the gentleman from Missouri with respect to the appearance of Martin Popper before the Committee on Un-American Activities and its subcommittee, I point out one further fact, that the witness was specifically asked if he claimed the protection provided in the Constitution by the fifth amendment. Mr. Popper's answer to the question was: "I am not"; then he interjected: "You are talking about the privilege against self-incrimination?" And the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MOULDER] answered in the affirmative. The witness said, "I am not claiming the privilege against self-incrimination."

There was a specific rejection of a claim of rights under the fifth amendment.

The further statements made by the gentleman from Missouri are correct in reference to the refusal of the witness to answer questions asked by members of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I support the action of the subcommittee and of the full committee in recommending the citation of Martin Popper for contempt of Congress.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST EDWIN A. ALEXANDER

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Un-American Activities, I submit a privileged report—House Report No. 1136.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST EDWIN A. ALEXANDER

The Committee on Un-American Activities, as created and authorized by the House of Representatives through the enactment of Public Law 601, section 121, subsection (q)(2) of the 79th Congress, and under House Resolution 7 of the 86th Congress, caused to be issued a subpena to Edwin A. Alexander, 2211 East 97th Street, Chicago, Ill. The said subpena directed Edwin A. Alexander to be and appear before the said Committee on Un-American Activities, or a duly authorized subcommittee theref, at the hour of 10 a.m., on May 6, 1959, at courtroom 208, U.S. Courthouse, 219 South Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee, and not to depart without leave of said committee. The subpena served upon the said Edwin A. Alexander is set forth in words and figures, as follows:

"UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
"CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

"To EDWIN ALEXANDER, Greeting:

"Pursuant to lawful authority you are hereby commanded to be and appear before the Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives of the United States, or a duly appointed subcommittee thereof, on May 6, 1959, at 10 o'clock a.m., at court room 209, U.S. Court House, 219 South Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee, and not to depart without leave of said committee.

"Hereof fail not, as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties in such case made and provided.

"To U.S. marshal, to serve and return.

"Given under my hand this 23d day of March, in the year of our Lord, 1959.

"FRANCIS E. WALTER,
"Chairman."

The said subpena was duly served as appears by the return made thereon by the U.S. marshal who was duly authorized to serve the said subpena. The return of the service by the said U.S. marshal being endorsed thereon, is set forth in words and figures as follows:

"I made service of the within subpena by serving the within named Edwin Alexander at 2211 E. 97th Street, by giving copy to his wife, Mrs. Alexander, at 10:30 o'clock, a.m., on the 5th day of April 1959. Dated April 6, 1959.

"W. W. KIPP,
"U.S. Marshal,
"By HERBERT F. LOWE,
"Deputy."

The said Edwin A. Alexander, pursuant to the said subpena, and in compliance therewith, appeared before a subcommittee of the Committee on Un-American Activities on May 6, 1959, to give such testimony as required under and by virtue of Public Law 601, section 121, subsection (q)(2) of the 79th Congress, and under House Resolution 7 of the 86th Congress. The said Edwin A. Alexander having appeared as a witness and having been asked the question, namely:

"Now, sir, with that explanation, I now ask you while you are under oath to name before this committee now the names of persons who, to your certain knowledge, were in 1956 members of the Communist Party and active in the Greater Chicago area."

which question was pertinent to the subject under inquiry, refused to answer said question, and as a result of said Edwin A. Alexander's refusal to answer the aforesaid question, your committee was prevented from receiving testimony and information concerning a matter committed to said committee in accordance with the terms of the subpena served upon said Edwin A. Alexander.

The record of the proceedings before the subcommittee on May 5, 1959, insofar as it affects the appearance of the witness Edwin A. Alexander is set forth in fact as follows:

TUESDAY, MAY 5, 1959

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE
COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES,
Chicago, Ill.

Public hearings

A subcommittee of the Committee on Un-American Activities met, pursuant to notice, at 10 a.m., in courtroom 209, U.S. Courthouse, 219 South Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., Hon. MORGAN M. MOULDER (subcommittee chairman) presiding.

Subcommittee members present: Representatives MORGAN M. MOULDER, of Missouri; EDWIN E. WILLIS, of Louisiana; and AUGUST E. JOHANSEN, of Michigan.

Staff members present: Richard Arens, staff director, and Raymond T. Collins, investigator.

Mr. MOULDER. The subcommittee will be in order.

The hearings which begin today in Chicago are in furtherance of the powers and duties of the Committee on Un-American Activities, pursuant to Public Law 601 of the 79th Congress, which not only establishes the basic jurisdiction of the committee, but also mandates this committee, along with other standing committees of the Congress of the United States, to exercise continuous watchfulness of the execution of any laws, the subject matter of which is within the jurisdiction of the committee.

In response to this power and duty, the Committee on Un-American Activities is continuously in the process of accumulating factual information respecting Communists, the Communist Party, and Communist activities which will enable the committee and the Congress to appraise the administration and operation of the Smith Act, the Internal Security Act of 1950, the Communist Control Act of 1954, and numerous provisions of the Criminal Code relating to espionage, sabotage, and subversion. In addition, the committee has before it numerous proposals to strengthen our legislative weapons designed to protect the internal security of this Nation.

I shall now read the resolution of the Committee on Un-American Activities, authorizing and directing the holding of the instant hearings here in Chicago.

"Be it resolved, That hearings by the Committee on Un-American Activities or a subcommittee thereof, to be held in Chicago, Ill., and at such other place or places as the chairman may indicate, on such date or dates as the chairman may determine, be authorized and approved, including the conduct of investigations deemed reasonably necessary by the staff in preparation therefor, relating to the following matters and having the legislative purposes indicated:

"1. The extent, character and objects of Communist infiltration and Communist Party propaganda activities in labor unions within the area of Chicago, the legislative purposes being:

"(a) To obtain information for use by the committee in its consideration of a proposal to amend section 4 of the Communist Control Act of 1954, prescribing a penalty for knowingly and willfully becoming or remaining a member of the Communist Party with knowledge of the purposes or objectives thereof; and

"(b) To obtain additional information adding to the committee's overall knowledge on the subject so that Congress may be kept informed and thus prepared to enact remedial legislation in the national defense and for internal security, when and if the exigencies of the situation require it.

2. Communist techniques and strategy in the raising of funds for the benefit of the Communist Party, the legislative purpose being to determine whether a recommendation should be made tightening the laws relating to tax exemption which labor unions enjoy, and for the additional reasons set forth in items 1 (a) and (b) of this resolution.

"3. The execution by the administrative agencies concerned of the Internal Security Act, the Communist Control Act of 1954, the Foreign Agents Registration Act, and all other laws, the subject matter of which is within the jurisdiction of the committee, the legislative purpose being to exercise continuous watchfulness of the execution of these laws to assist the Congress in appraising the administration of such laws, and in developing such amendments or related legislation as it may deem necessary.

"Be it further resolved, That the hearings may include any other matter within the jurisdiction of the committee which it, or any subcommittee thereof appointed to conduct this hearing, may designate."

I shall now read the order of appointment of the subcommittee to conduct these hearings which was made by the chairman of the full committee, the Honorable FRANCIS E. WALTER, of Pennsylvania:

"APRIL 28, 1959.

"To Mr. RICHARD ARENS,
"Staff Director, House Committee on Un-American Activities:

"Pursuant to the provisions of the law and the rules of this committee, I hereby appoint a subcommittee of the Comittee on Un-American Activities, consisting of Representatives EDWIN E. WILLIS and AUGUST E. JOHANSEN, as associate members, and Representative MORGAN M. MOULDER, as chairman, to conduct hearings in Chicago, Ill., Tuesday, May 5, 1959, 10 a.m., on subjects under investigation by the committee and take such testimony on said day or succeeding days, as it may deem necessary.

"Please make this action a matter of committee record.

"If any Member indicates his inability to serve, please notify me.

"Given under my hand this 28th day of April 1959.

"FRANCIS E. WALTER,
Chairman, Committee on Un-American Activities."

These hearings in Chicago are in furtherance of a project of this committee on current techniques of the Communist conspiracy in this Nation. We know that the strategy and tactics of the Communist Party are constantly changing for the purpose of avoiding detection and in an attempt to beguile the American people and the Government respecting the true nature of the conspiracy.

Preliminary investigations conducted by the staff indicate that a principal concentration point of Communists in the Chicago area is the packinghouse industry which is vital not only to the economy of this area but is essential in the maintenance of a strong national defense. Those of us who through the years have been engaged in the work of the Committee on Un-American Activities are obliged, from our experience, to conclude that there is no easy answer or quick solution to the many problems created by the Communist fifth column in our country. We must constantly keep abreast of the changing strategy and tactics of the Communist Party so that we may have factual information for our legislative purposes.

In the course of the last few years, as a result of hearings and investigations, this committee has made over 80 separate recommendations for legislative action. Legislation has been passed by the Congress embracing 35 of the recommendations, and 26 separate proposals are currently pending in the Congress on subjects covered by other committee recommendations. Moreover, in the course of the last few years numerous recommendations made by the committee for administrative action have been adopted by the executive agencies of our Government.

Today the Communist Party, though reduced in size, continues as a serious threat to the security of our Nation. It has long since divested itself of unreliable elements. Those who remain are the hard-core, disciplined agents of the Kremlin on American soil. Most of the Communist Party operation in the United States today consists of underground, behind-the-scenes manipulations.

What techniques are the hard-core Communists pursuing here in order to avoid detection as they pursue their nefarious work?

What loopholes or weaknesses exist in our security laws?

How can those laws be strengthened?

These are some of the questions I hope to have answered.

The objective of our subcommittee during this brief stay in Chicago is to sample factual material on types and patterns of activity germane to the scope of our inquiry. We have not subpenaed witnesses here at random nor shall we attempt to exhaust the subject matter. To do so would require a disproportionate amount of time, both of the staff and of the subcommittee, to the detriment of other equally important projects which are presently in process elsewhere in the United States.

We seek only the facts. Insofar as it is within the power of this committee, as part of the U.S. Congress, we shall obtain the facts and we shall do so within the framework of carefully prescribed procedures, adopted by this committee, of justice and fair play as provided by the law of our land.

It is a standing rule of this committee that any person identified as a member of the Communist Party during the course of the committee hearings will be given an early opportunity to appear before this committee, if he so desires, for the purpose of denying or explaining any testimony adversely affecting that person. It is also the policy of the committee to accord any witness the privilege of being represented by counsel to advise him; but within the provisions of the rules of this committee, counsel's sole and exclusive prerogative is to advise his client in a legal fashion.

I would remind those present that a disturbance of any kind or an audible comment during the hearings will not be permitted. This is a serious proceeding in which we are earnestly trying to discharge an important and arduous duty with the general objective of maintaining the security and the American way of life of this great Nation.

Do you have comments to add to that, Mr. WILLIS?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, you refer to the rules of the committee. It might be interesting to know, I think this is the one committee that operates under very enlightened and comprehensive rules. I have a copy here and the very last provision of the rules is that all witnesses appearing before the committee shall be furnished with a copy of the printed rules, and so on. The rules are available to the press, counsel, and to anybody who wants to see them.

Mr. MOULDER. Mr. JOHANSEN.

Mr. JOHANSEN. The only comment I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that I am very happy to have the chairman and my colleague from Louisiana very clearly and emphatically set forth the fact that we do operate by prescribed rules, with the full regard for the rights of the witnesses. I think it is particularly timely, particularly important to have that emphasized because of the evident misinformation that seems sometimes to be promulgated from other presumably responsible sources. I associate myself completely with the statement of the chairman and of Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. MOULDER. Thank you, gentlemen.

Now, Congressman WALTER, the chairman of the full committee of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, has requested that I read the following letter addressed to him by Ralph Helstein, president of the United Packinghouse Workers of America, an AFL–CIO union. The letter is dated May 1, 1959, and he has requested that I read this letter before the beginning of the hearing and insert the letter into the record.

The letter is as follows:

HON. FRANCIS E. WALTER,
Chairman, House Committee on Un-American Activities, House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: In view of the fact that the House Committee on Un-American Activities has subpenaed some present or former members of our union to appear at your sessions on May 5, 6, and 7, we have felt it appropriate to transmit to you a brief statement of the position of our union.

We represent, as you are perhaps aware, over 100,000 employees in the meatpacking industry and others in related industries. If you are familiar with the history of the meatpacking industry, you know it as one with the history of back-breaking labor and oppressive, soul-searing working conditions which earned for it the designation "the jungle."

In the two decades since we came into existence, we have written a proud history of our own. We have built a record of economic improvement for packinghouse workers, and we have built a genuinely democratic union, widely respected for its honesty and integrity and one which is, we are convinced, free of outside influence, Communist or any other. We hold a respected position in the ranks of labor and in the communities in which our members reside.

We are particularly proud of our status in the Negro communities of the Nation. A relatively substantial proportion of our membership is Negro and our union has evidenced its special interest in and concern with the problems of the Negro people. Negro leaders have risen, on their merits, to positions of importance in our ranks, and we have applied our energies actively to the task of eliminating discriminatory practices in American life.

In this history of achievement, many, many people have played their roles—thousands of rank-and-file members, local, district and national officers and staff employees. Those individuals included among your subpenaed witnesses who presently hold district or local office or who are currently on our field staff are among those who are recognized by our membership as having made, over many years, unselfish and consistent contributions to the growth and performance of our union. So far as their records of performance show, they have passed the test of service to the needs of our members—organization of the unorganized, negotiation of contract improvements, honest and effective grievance presentation.

Our union was born in the midst of the distress and disillusion of the depression and postdepression years of the 1930's and 1940's. In the light of the background of the industry, the economic and social tensions of the times and the bitter opposition of the packing companies to our efforts at organization and improvement of conditions, it would have been strange indeed if among the packinghouse workers there were none who turned to one or another of the utopian panaceas held out from various sources to the disillusioned: communism, socialism, technocracy, single-tax programs, and all the rest.

Before our union was very old, therefore, it was faced with a fundamental choice of procedures. It could have embarked upon a program that might have led to bitter internal conflict, diverting energies urgently needed for the task of providing economic improvements for the packinghouse workers. Our membership developed a different program, one which we believe to be in the best traditions of our Nation. There was never the slightest question or possibility of yielding control to a Communist group or any other ideology. But we felt that the challenge of communism could best be met not by a civil war certain to blunt the union's collective-bargaining effectiveness, but by demonstrating that a positive and democratic brand of unionism would produce results, thereby defeating the attractions of communism by undercutting its ground.

We believe our program was right for the packinghouse workers. We know that it worked.

Our union has, over the years, established its position on communism. Our union is firmly on record in its opposition to communism—and all similar forms of authoritarian doctrine. Our union has adopted as official policy the AFL–CIO Ethical Practices Codes. No member of the Communist Party is or will be permitted to hold elective or appointive position in our union. For the implementation of this policy, the union has established, from its executive board, a committee to investigate situations involving possible violation of these codes and a public review commission of disinterested, prominent citizens, to assure that our procedures are effective to maintain integrity and democracy in our union.

The path by which we reached our present position may not be the one which others have followed or would have prescribed. Perhaps members of your committee would disagree as to our choice of paths—and we respect their right to disagree. We ask only the same respect for our right to our opinion as to the rightness of our course. We firmly believe that the result in our union proves that our forefathers' faith in the principles of the Bill of Rights was well founded.

In enforcing our policies today, we are, of course, concerned with the present and the future. We do not feel that we serve any useful purpose by seeking to dredge up the muck of a dead past. If there are in our ranks persons with a Communist past, their present adherence to the democratic principles of our union represents a symbol of the victory of democratic philosophy over totalitarianism, and we see no purpose in placing them in the public pillory.

In our enforcement of our policies, we will, of course, give appropriate consideration to relevant evidence presented to your committee as we would to similar evidence from any source. It is an unfortunate fact, however, that your committee's decision to conduct these hearings happens to coincide in time with certain other developments.

A rejected and disgrunted former officeholder has been engaged in an effort to revive the long dead Communist issue, as it affects our union, in what appears to us to be frantic effort, unquestionably doomed to failure, to foist himself back on to a membership which has rejected him. There is also some evidence which suggests that he is acting for another union which is suspected of having hopes of gobbling up the membership of our organization. Finally, your hearings happen to come at a time when we are about to enter upon negotiations with the major packing companies, as the current 3-year term of contracts throughout the industry approaches expiration. Pressing problems of plant shutdowns, mass layoffs, technological unemployment, inadequate pension and severance pay clauses, and many others claim the attention of our members and leaders. The sudden revival of long dead issues obviously plays into the hands of the packing companies.

Under these circumstances, you will understand, I am sure, the feeling among many of our members that your hearings may, without any such intent on your part, serve to aid some few who may wish to create a misleading public impression of our union. We are confident, in all frankness, that our record of performance in the public interest is so clear and so well understood by those most directly concerned, that our union's public stature will readily withstand any such attack.

Very truly yours,

RALPH HELSTEIN,
President.

Chairman WALTER requested that his comments as follows also be read and inserted into the record:

"1. There is no intention on the part of the House Un-American Activities Committee, to interfere in any way, or on either side, with any negotiations between the union and employers. In this connection I wish to point out that these investigations are in no way directed at the United Packinghouse Workers of America, as a union, or at its officers, as such.

"2. While it is true, as Mr. Helstein pointed out, that this committee may well differ with the methods followed by the union to eliminate Communists, nevertheless, the committee welcomes the unequivocal assertion by the president of the union that the union is firmly on record in its opposition to communism and all similar forms of authoritarian doctrine, that 'no member of the Communist Party is, or will be permitted, to hold elective or appointive position' in the union and that a procedure involving a review by a public review commission of disinterested prominent citizens has been established to assure that this policy is being implemented. In these circumstances I am hopeful that any information adduced by this committee concerning Communists holding elective or appointive position in the union will receive the full consideration of the union and the public board established by it."

That concludes Chairman WALTER's statement. I wish to apologize for taking so much time reading all these statements, but I was requested by the chairman to place the letter and his statement in the record as well as our opening statement.

The record of the proceedings before the subcommittee on May 6, 1959, during which the said Edwin A. Alexander refused to answer the aforesaid question, pertinent to the subject under inquiry, is set forth in fact as follows:

WEDNESDAY, MAY 6, 1959
U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE
COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES,
Chicago, Ill.

* * * * *

AFTERNOON SESSION, WEDNESDAY, MAY 6, 1959

Mr. WILLIS. The subcommittee will please come to order.

(Subcommittee members present: Representatives WILLIS, presiding, and JOHANSEN.)

* * * * *

After hearing the testimony of two other witnesses, the testimony of Edwin A. Alexander is set forth as follows:

* * * * *

Mr. ARENS. The next witness, if you please, Mr. Chairman, will be Mr. Edwin Alexander.

Kindly come forward, Mr. Alexander.

Mr. WILLIS. Please raise your right hand.

Do you solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do.

Mr. Chairman, my counsel has asked me, Mr. Chairman, that you furnish him with a copy of the statement of purposes of the committee and the rules of the committee, since he was not present yesterday when they were read.

Mr. ARENS. We will make them available in just a second as soon as we dig them out here, after you have been sworn.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, may I ask one other thing in regard to the taking of pictures during the conduct of testimony?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes. If you object to it, then it will be stopped right now.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, I do. Thank you very much.

Testimony of Edwin A. Alexander, accompanied by counsel, Willard J. Lassers and F. Raymond Marks, Jr.

Mr. ARENS. Kindly identify yourself by name, residence, and occupation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. My name is Edwin A. Alexander. I live at 2211 East 97th Street, Chicago, Ill. My occupation, I am a member of the professional staff of a philanthropic social work agency, the Jewish Federation, Metropolitan Chicago. I am responsible for raising the deficit funds and the capital building funds for a group of some 11 social agencies in Chicago which I consider to be very worthwhile organizations.

Mr. ARENS. You are appearing today in response to a subpena served upon you by the Committee on Un-American Activities?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is correct.

Mr. ARENS. And you are represented by counsel?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is correct.

Mr. ARENS. Counsel, would you kindly identify yourself?

Mr. LASSERS. My name is Willard J. Lassers, of Chicago, Ill.

Mr. MARKS. F. Raymond Marks, Jr., of Chicago, Ill.

Mr. ARENS. Where and when were you born?

Mr. ALEXANDER. On June 25, 1917, Bronx, New York City.

Mr. ARENS. Give us, please, a word about your education.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I went to high school, DeWitt Clinton High School, New York City, and attended the College of the City of New York.

Mr. ARENS. When did you graduate from the College of the City of New York?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I did not graduate from the College of the City of New York.

Mr. ARENS. When did you complete your education there?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Approximately 1933 or 1934.

Mr. ARENS. Did you complete your formal education?

Mr. ALEXANDER. My formal education?

Mr. ARENS. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, it all depends what sense you want to take that in. I attended the Allied Technical Institute in Chicago about 1949, studying machinist trade and this last, just recently within the past few months I was a student at Roosevelt College extension program creative writing workshop.

Mr. ARENS. How long have you been employed at your present place of employment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Since January 13, 1958.

Mr. ARENS. What was your employment immediately prior to your present employment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Immediately prior to that I have been unemployed for close to a month. Before that I was engaged in the tool and die makers trade. The last company I worked for specifically was the Zeitergraf Co., for which I worked until 3 days before Christmas 1958, at which time I was laid off because the company went out of business.

Mr. ARENS. Were you living in New York at the time that you obtained your degree there—excuse me, completed your education there, what training you did receive?

Mr. ALEXANDER. At the College of the City of New York?

Mr. ARENS. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. ARENS. Where did you next live, where was your next place of residence?

Mr. ALEXANDER. City of Chicago.

Mr. ARENS. And over what period of time were you then in continuous residence in the city of Chicago?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Chicago? That was so long ago that it would be hard—I wouldn't like to be held to its accuracy. I would estimate approximately 6 months.

Mr. ARENS. Then where did you go?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Los Angeles.

Mr. ARENS. How long were you there?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Again approximately 6 months.

Mr. ARENS. What occasioned your trip to Los Angeles?

Mr. ALEXANDER. My job from 1934 approximately, the time I left City College, after a few months, later I was employed as a field organizer, as a regional organizer, first for the National Student League and then for the American Student League. This required that my first area of activity was Chicago, where I went, and then I was sent by the national committee of that organization to the Los Angeles area to be the California representative.

Mr. ARENS. About what year are we in now?

Mr. ALEXANDER. What is that?

Mr. ARENS. About what year are we in now?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well——

Mr. ARENS. Roughly speaking?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Roughly speaking 1934–35.

Mr. ARENS. All right, sir. What was your next employment?

Mr. MARKS. Counsel, do you mind if he smokes?

Mr. ARENS. It is prohibited in the courtroom.

What was your next employment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. My next employment after that was as a full-time official for the district office of the Young Communist League of California.

Mr. ARENS. Over what period of time did you serve in the district office of the Young Communist League?

Mr. ALEXANDER. There was one interruption. I would say again it is difficult to say exact dates, approximately 1935 to about somewhere in the early 1940's. During that period there was one interruption. I was for a period of approximately 2 years out of that period, I was a restaurant worker in the city of San Francisco, and I was elected to two full-time posts in the Restaurant Workers' Union of the AFL. I served as assistant secretary of the Miscellaneous Employees' Union, the Hotel Restaurant Employees' International Alliance, and I served as business agent of the Hotel Restaurant Employees' International Alliance and Miscellaneous Employees' Union in San Francisco for a short period during that time.

Mr. ARENS. Would you tell us the specific title you had with the Young Communist League, please?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I believe while I was in California that I had two titles. One was a district educational director. One was a district organizational director.

Mr. ARENS. When did you become disassociated from the full-time work with the Young Communist League?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Again I couldn't be certain of the exact date. I moved from California——

Mr. ARENS. Was it in the early 1940's?

Mr. ALEXANDER. From the Young Communist League?

Mr. ARENS. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. I graduated from the Young Communist League and became a full-time official in the Communist Party.

Mr. ARENS. When did you become a full-time official in the Communist Party, just roughly speaking?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Very roughly in the early 1940's.

Mr. ARENS. Tell us, when did you join the Communist Party?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I believe I joined the Communist Party in approximately 1934 or 1935. I was a member of the Young Communist League for a short period without being a member of the Communist Party and then joined the Communist Party.

Mr. ARENS. Tell us how long you maintained your membership in the Communist Party.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I maintained my membership in the Communist Party from approximately 1934 until 1948.

Mr. ARENS. May I inquire, have you ever made available to a congressional committee or any agency of the Government, facts respecting your membership in the Communist Party?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have never been asked by any Government agency these facts before. This is the first occasion at which I have been asked them, and I gladly volunteered them.

Mr. Chairman, may I state something surrounding the circumstances of withdrawing from the Communist Party in 1948?

Mr. ARENS. I expect to take you over the whole ground so we can take in a uniform pattern here which I think would be easier for you and be more clear for us, if you please.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Hope you will. Very relevant why I——

Mr. ARENS. Yes, sir. Very delighted to pursue this with you.

Now, tell us where and when you joined the Communist Party and in your own words, and I will try to restrain myself until I have a particular question to fill in, where and when you joined the Communist Party and in your own words the various posts that you held in the Communist Party. Then we will come back and get additional information.

Mr. ALEXANDER. All right.

Mr. ARENS. I want to say now, so there will be no sense of us being at all other than completely open and aboveboard——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Right.

Mr. ARENS. We did not, until you just said so, know that you were going to tell this committee of your Communist career. We did know of your Communist career. We did not know, had no basis on which to suspect that you would tell us of your Communist career.

Now, proceed at your own pace, sir, to tell us where and when you joined the Communist Party and the various posts you held in the Communist Party up until you disassociated yourself from the Communist Party until 1948.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I did not disassociate myself from the Communist Party in 1948.

Mr. ARENS. We will get up to that in a little while.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I joined the Communist Party in approximately 1934 or 1935. I have already detailed to you the posts I held in the Young Communist League. I was requested to go to Seattle, Wash., by the national committee of the Young Communist League, serve as district organizer of the YCL for the States of Washington, Oregon in the early 1940's. This I did. I accepted it. I accepted the request and went.

For a short period I was requested by the national committee of the Young Communist League to return to New York City and serve as assistant editor of the Young Communist League national newspaper, which I did. The Young Communist League at this point was dissolved itself by a national convention. I can't remember the exact year. But at this time I returned to the State of Washington, the city of Seattle, which I then considered my home. And I assumed a full-time post in the Communist Party.

Mr. ARENS. May I interrupt just there——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ARENS. To ask you a question. Upon the dissolution of the Young Communist League——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Right.

Mr. ARENS. There was formerly an entity known as either the League for Industrial—it was the American Youth for Democracy, was it not, as a successor organization?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In one sense; in another it was not completely a successor organization. In one sense it was. In one sense it was not.

Mr. ARENS. The AYD, American Youth for Democracy, was controlled by the Communist Party, was it not, by Communists?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, I graduated from the youth movement at that point. I would say that I think the Communists themselves greatly regretted that the American Youth for Democracy was controlled by Communists. They felt that the need had passed for a specifically Communist youth organization, and this is why they dissolved this Young Communist League in the hope that a non-Communist youth organization could be established. However——

Mr. WILLIS. As a front actually?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, some people would prefer to call it that. I don't think they meant it in that sense at all. I think they meant that our country was in a serious degree of danger from Hitler at that time, and from internal fascism, and I think they wanted to create—no matter how much I am opposed to the Communist Party today, I want to be as fair and objective about the thing as I can. I think they wanted at that time to create a youth movement which was genuinely opposed to fascism and which would extend far beyond the Communists.

They felt that the Young Communist League had the limitation that in order to be a member of it you would have to subscribe to the principles of communism. They felt at that time that as the Communist Party continued to exist that any young person who wished to subscribe to the principles of communism could become a member of the Communist Party itself. And that the interests of preserving democracy and fighting against facism in our country could better be served by a non-Communist, anti-Fascist youth organization which, although it included Communists, would not be Communist in its program.

I don't think the Communists themselves believed that they succeeded very well, and they were constantly dissatisfied with the fact that far too great a proportion of the leadership, membership of the American Youth for Democracy, were continuing to be Communists. However, I don't have too much expert knowledge on that since at that time I left the youth movement and became an official of the Communist Party itself and was more concerned with adult problems.

Mr. ARENS. Now would you proceed with a chronology of your posts in the Communist Party itself, which, I understand, from what you said a few moments ago began about——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Pardon me. Would you repeat that question?

Mr. ARENS. Proceed, if you please, with the chronology of the assignments and posts that you held in the Communist Party.

Mr. WILLIS. He had just entered.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. I was getting to that. You got me off on the track of the AYD.

Mr. ARENS. Let us date this now so our record is clear. You left the Young Communist League.

Mr. ALEXANDER. In early 1940's.

Mr. ARENS. Entered the party?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Right.

Mr. ARENS. Now proceed there, please, sir.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I then returned to Seattle, Wash., and held several posts. I am not quite certain which posts I held before I entered the Army. I was either district organizational director or district educational director.

Mr. ARENS. Were you a paid functionary of the Communist Party?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; I was.

Mr. ARENS. Who was your immediate superior?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I would respectfully like to decline to answer that question for the following reasons: I am extremely willing to be cooperative and frank and candid about my own activities.

Mr. ARENS. We will come back to that in a little while. I would like to get your chronology on here. We will pursue that question with you a little while later. You are in the early 1940's and going into the Army.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I was either district educational director or district organizational secretary of the Communist Party on a full-time basis until I was inducted into the Army in approximately May of 1944, I believe. As was the requirement in the Communist Party at that time I dropped my membership in the Communist Party in order to become a soldier in the U.S. Army. I served in the Army until May 1946.

Mr. ARENS. Just a word as to where you served, please.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Most of that time was spent overseas in the China, Burma, India theater. There I held the post of associate editor of the CBI Round-Up, which was the equivalent of Stars and Stripes for the CBI theater. It was the official Army paper in that theater.

Mr. ARENS. We have some exhibits of yours in the CBI Round-Up operation. I will not pursue them now except to ask you this question: You said you dropped your Communist Party membership?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Right, that——

Mr. ARENS. That was what was a technical disassociation only, was it not?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No, not altogether. Not altogether.

Mr. ARENS. Did you do it at the direction of the party?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, everything I do, I do voluntarily, I may agree with the party.

Mr. ARENS. Did the party direct you to do it?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do what I think.

Mr. ARENS. It was party policy?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It was policy of the party, yes, because the party believed that the United States in fighting against fascism needed support, that the U.S. Army was an Army fighting against fascism. It had to be a unified military organization and that for one to be a member of the Communist Party within the Army, as lawyers, for example, sometimes say there might be a problem of allegiance or loyalties and so on. They felt someone in the U.S. Army ought to obey the discipline only of the U.S. Army.

Mr. ARENS. May I inquire just a word? I don't want to interrupt any more than necessary. This is an important theme from the standpoint of the fund of knowledge of this committee. During your service in the U.S. Army from 1944 to 1946, you still maintained yourself as a Marxist, did you not, even though you were disassociated from the formal organization known as the Communist Party?

Mr. ALEXANDER. At that time I was a Marxist, yes. I considered myself a Marxist.

Mr. ARENS. Would you pick up the theme in 1946 and go right on?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In 1946 I was honorably discharged from the Army.

Incidentally, when I entered the Army it was with the knowledge of the U.S. Army that I was an officer of the Communist Party and when I went into the Army my special number given to me by the Army was that of organizer because I told them that my occupation was Communist Party organizer.

Mr. ARENS. At that time they had a movement on in which they were commissioning people who were known as Communists in the U.S. Army; isn't that correct?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. To the best of my knowledge.

Mr. ARENS. Pick up the 1946 date.

Mr. ALEXANDER. In 1946 I was discharged from the Army, I returned to Seattle, Wash., and I again assumed full-time work in the district office of the Communist Party, either in the role of educational director or organizational director, I don't recall which. In 1948 I was publicly expelled by the district committee of the Communist Party of Washington on the grounds that I was an enemy of the party, an enemy of the working class, an accomplice of the FBI.

Mr. ARENS. The party made a mistake then, didn't it?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think so. I think it has been disproven. Do you want me to go ahead, or ask me questions?

Mr. ARENS. I want you to hesitate there just a moment.

Mr. WILLIS. I am interested in that. You were not an undercover agent for the FBI?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Most assuredly not. I am not undercover about anything for anybody.

Mr. ARENS. In 1948 the Communist Party started becoming security conscious, was it not?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. ARENS. And they were expelling from the party anyone they suspected of being either an informant for the FBI or informant for this committee or informant for any Government agency; isn't that so?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Generally speaking.

Mr. ARENS. You were just caught in the net of the Communist Party itself; is that correct?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In a sense. It is a great deal more complex matter than that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ARENS. I do not want to get into too much detail in this particular session.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Neither do I.

Mr. ARENS. Then tell us what happened.

Mr. ALEXANDER. When I was expelled from the Communist Party, I moved to the city of Chicago and began to learn the trade of machinist and tool and die maker. I worked at several shops, went to the Allied Institute to learn that trade. In 1950—pardon me, in approximately 1951 I was reaccepted into the party.

Mr. ARENS. Excuse me a minute. I want to get that date down here. In 1951 you got back into the party?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Approximately.

Mr. ARENS. Where was that, here?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In the city of Chicago.

Mr. ARENS. In what capacity?

Mr. ALEXANDER. May I ask, Mr. Chairman—there has been a great deal of prior newspaper publicity; the previous witness has testified and so on that it is a well-known public fact that there has been a great commotion in Local 113 in Tool and Die Makers Union in the last 3 years. While I am perfectly willing to be candid and honest about all my affiliations, sometimes the establishment of a half-truth, as any of you well know, can give the exact opposite appearance.

I want to testify either at this point, or I would like to receive assurance that I can testify at some other point, as to the exact and true relationship between the Communist Party and the rank-and-file caucus in Local 113.

Mr. ARENS. We will get into that in a little while.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Otherwise the simple parallelism of my Communist membership and my union membership would give exactly the opposite picture of the truth. Mr. Chairman, may I be assured I will have full opportunity of hearing that?

Mr. WILLIS. I am not so sure I followed what you have in mind. I am afraid you have things in mind that you didn't make clear to me.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ARENS. We will give you an opportunity to pursue anything you want to say here in a little while. We do and insist in a little while on some information we don't think you are going to want to give us.

Mr. ALEXANDER. All right. I may have some information which you do not know and may not wish to hear, I don't know. It will be——

Mr. ARENS. We have considerable. On the basis of what you said and basis of what I have before you now, the identification and rank we know you have held in the party and the instructorship you had in the Communist Party training schools and the like, leadership schools, we think you have considerable information.

I am just sorry you didn't make yourself available to us prior to this particular session if your attitude is one of thorough cooperation, because we feel you have considerable information that can be of service to this Government.

Now, in 1951 you are back in the party. Tell us now the rest of your career until you became completely disassociated.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I was in the Communist Party from approximately 1951 until 1956. During this period I was working.

Mr. ARENS. Where?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Here in Chicago. I was working in various shops, a good number of them as a first machinist and then a tool and die maker. To become a good tool and die maker you have to work in a lot of shops, believe me.

In 1956 I resigned from the Communist Party voluntarily. Again I might say about one step ahead of being expelled for the following reasons: I was a member of local 113 at this time and a member of the Communist Party. In December of 1955 a rank-and-file movement began in local 113 aimed at the very things which the U.S. Senate is now trying to embody in legislation, clean unionism, the abolition of undemocratic procedures in the local, the ending of corrupt financial practices on the part of the business agents, and so on. I voluntarily as an individual took part in this movement because I thought what now all the newspaper editorials urge, what now the Kennedy committee urges is correct.

Mr. WILLIS. What?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will establish the connection very soon.

Mr. WILLIS. I just wanted to——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why I left the Communist Party——

Mr. WILLIS. Local 113 is in what area of industry?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Local 113 tool and die makers union.

Mr. WILLIS. What?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The tool and die makers local of the International Association of Machinists.

Mr. WILLIS. Oh.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I became interested in this rank-and-file movement because I felt, and a great number of other people felt in the local, with the Kennedy committee, and what the Chicago newspapers now say editorially is right, that if labor is going to avoid crippling legislation it is up to the membership of the unions to take matters into their own hands in a democratic fashion and clean house. The rank-and-file movement in this union did this. So effective was the exposures to some of the practices of the business agents that all the business agents of the local voluntarily resigned and left Chicago. I participated in this rank-and-file movement. I was never a leader of it. I wasn't the very steady and consistent member of it, but because I participated in this rank-and-file movement, which has been made out by somebody, somewhere, sometime, to be an alleged Communist subversive plot, seizure of power in the union, which it most emphatically was not, because I participated in this rank-and-file movement, the club of the Communist Party to which I belonged issued, forbade me or any other Communist to participate in this rank-and-file movement.

The Communist Party then put me on suspension and said that if you participate in this rank-and-file movement any longer as you have been doing, you will be expelled from the Communist Party.

Mr. ARENS. For how long were you on suspension?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Oh, I don't think I was on suspension for more than 5 minutes.

Mr. ARENS. Go right ahead.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As soon as that happened my mind about the Communist Party was quite well made up. This was just about the time that events in Hungary were transpiring, and so on. By now things were quite clear. I quit the Communist Party because had I stayed in I would have been expelled from the Communist Party for taking part in this honest unionism, clean-up unionism, rank-and-file movement.

To me there was a clear conflict of interest there. The Communist Party branch to which I belonged I think by this time was so weak and so impotent and had become so dogmatic and so removed from the membership of the union that they took what I think was a very mistaken position. They took the position that Al Hayes represented the best section of the labor movement, that there was an internal political struggle going on in the labor movement.

Mr. ARENS. This committee is not interested in the internal struggles of any particular labor organization. We are interested solely and exclusively in Communists, Communist activities, the Communist Party, the Communist conspiracy, and the like.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am trying to establish simply by this testimony that the rank-and-file caucus movement in local 113 was not, as has been alleged, a part of the Communist conspiracy at all. Quite the contrary, I was going to be expelled from the Communist Party because I participated in it.

Mr. ARENS. You were expelled in 1956?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I was not expelled. I resigned before I could be expelled, let's put it that way.

Mr. ARENS. When did your connection with the Communist Party terminate?

Mr. ALEXANDER. 1956.

Mr. ARENS. Did you participate in Communist Party activities after 1956?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No.

Mr. ARENS. You are confident of that?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I did not. I did not. I attended many Socialist affairs for 6 months or a year after leaving the Communist Party. I still was hopeful that a leftwing movement might be reconstituted in this country. I attended meetings of various Socialist groups that were attempting to do something of this sort. But I never attended any meetings of the Communist Party for members of the Communist Party only. I am certain that if I put in an appearance at the door I would have been excluded.

Mr. ARENS. Are you now completely, irrevocably, against the Communist Party?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That again, I am not trying to dodge the answer to that question. Yes. I am against the Communist Party. But that is a big question. I happen to be writing a book about my attitude on that question. So far I have written 150 pages, and I am not near done, so I can hardly hope to do justice to it.

Mr. ARENS. Do you care to tell us whether or not you are still a Marxist?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No, I am not.

Mr. WILLIS. Let us take a recess for 10 minutes at this point.

(Subcommittee members present: Representatives WILLIS and JOHANSEN.)

(A brief recess was taken.)

(Subcommittee members present: Representatives WILLIS and JOHANSEN.)

Mr. WILLIS. The subcommittee will please come to order.

Counsel may proceed.

Mr. ARENS. Now, for the next several minutes I should like to inquire respecting some of your own functions and activities in the Communist Party. Did you ever teach in any leadership training school in the Communist Party?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, certainly.

Mr. ARENS. Where?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In the Seattle, Wash., area when I was educational director; possibly in California. I can't quite remember.

Mr. ARENS. What did you teach, what courses?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I can't remember the specifics. As educational director of the district organization I was the director of the district party training school. I probably taught several courses, but after 11 years I can't remember the specific titles of them.

Mr. ARENS. Can you remember any of the courses which you taught?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I can't remember specifications.

Mr. ARENS. Did you teach any courses on revolution, techniques of revolution, or were these public courses?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I taught courses on Marxism, Leninism, certainly.

Mr. ARENS. And over what period of time did you teach Marxism and Leninism?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am certain scattered through the period from 1940 to 1948 I taught some courses many times, oh, many times that I can't recall the individual dates or titles or courses.

Mr. ARENS. Now, your disassociation from the Communist Party did not thus far from your explanation include a disassociation from the ideology of communism. Have you disassociated yourself or have you developed an antipathy to the ideology of communism; namely, that there is no God, that we are controlled by materialistic forces, that there must be a world revolution? Are you disassociated from the ideology of communism?

Mr. MARKS. Are you talking about now?

Mr. ARENS. I am talking to the witness, if you please.

Are you disassociated now from the ideology of communism?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Honestly, Counsel, I disassociated myself now from the ideology of communism but I could not state as a person who tried to read some books in my life that your descriptions of the ideology of communism—I don't believe that to be quite exact or fair—although I do dissociate myself from the conception of ideology of communism that I had gotten from some 20 to 25 years of study of it and a great number of other subjects.

Mr. ARENS. Have you been educational director of the Communist Party for the State of Illinois?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No.

Mr. ARENS. What have you done in educational work in the State of Illinois?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Nothing that I can recall. In the State of Illinois, as I stated, way back in 1934 or 1935 I was not an official of the Communist Party or the Young Communist League, and when I was a member of the Communist Party of the State of Illinois from approximately 1951 to 1956, having recently been reaccepted into the Communist Party, I was certainly not a leader of the Communist Party.

Mr. ARENS. Was your acceptance in the Communist Party at your solicitation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. Having been accused of personal dishonesty by the Communist Party in 1948, perhaps quixotically, looking back on it I was very anxious to clear my own record and my own conscience but I felt it was the wrong way to do so.

Mr. ARENS. Did you become cognizant of the Communist in the 1950's—of the treachery of the Communist operation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, in 1956, when I left the Communist Party, as I say, I left it because there was a clear conflict of interest between the membership of local 113 and the rank-and-file caucus of 113 and the Communist Party. That is why I left.

Mr. ARENS. Were you cognizant of the control of the Communist Party of the United States by the Kremlin?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That control, again, Mr. Chairman, that is a simple word which covers up a complex problem. One of the reasons why I left the Communist Party was because I felt that the Communist Party in the United States attempted much too much to pattern itself upon policies formed by the Soviet Communist Party and that the Soviet Communist Party attempted too much to a great extent to guide the policies of the American Communist Party.

Mr. ARENS. Were you cognizant of the——

Mr. ALEXANDER. As a consequence, the American Communist Party became futile and ineffective.

Mr. WILLIS. May I ask a question at this point?

Along the lines of direction and control of policies of the American party by the Soviets, and picking up your thoughts with reference to the policy of the American Communist Party during World War II, when there was a common fight, as you said, against fascism, I would be interested to have as frank a statement from you as——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. As you would kindly inform us on what was the policy of the Communist Party during the Korean war as to righteousness of our cause or what was the official line? Would you care to talk about that?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Would you please refresh my memory about the year of the Korean war?

Mr. WILLIS. The Korean war was June 1950, I think it started, and lasted a year or so. You were not in the party?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I was not in the party in 1950; no. I rejoined in approximately 1951 or 1952.

Mr. WILLIS. The war was on to 1953, actually. Do you have any knowledge on that, because we have our own opinions on it and we have some executive information that we received in the committee and I am curious to know if you have any judgment on that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have knowledge, not expert knowledge, because I was not a leader of the Communist Party at that time. My knowledge of Communist Party policies is based on the same sources as your own publicly printed statements and so on.

Mr. WILLIS. What is your knowledge?

Mr. ALEXANDER. My knowledge of it is that the Communist Party opposed the position of the American Government in entering that war and felt that the North Koreans represented the trend among all the colonial peoples of the world toward their national independence and that the United States was intervening against themselves on the side of a rather reactionary and corrupt old gentleman by the name of Syngman Rhee, who the people of South Korea didn't like any better than the people of North Korea, who himself was what we attempted to call a Fascist dictator.

I think that was the position of the Communist Party at that time. I am not stating that that is my opinion or my position at the present time. I am not stating that it is or isn't. You simply asked me to state what I remember of the position of the Communist Party at that time.

Mr. JOHANSEN. Mr. Alexander.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, sir.

Mr JOHANSEN. I understand you to testify that the party, at least because of the guidance, I think was the word you used, of the Kremlin in the affairs of the Communist Party of the United States being too extensive, in consequence of that the Communist Party of the United States became futile and ineffective.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHANSEN. In respect to what goals or objects or purposes did you feel that it had become futile and ineffective?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thought it became futile and ineffective in regard to the goals for which I joined it, and that was social progress and advancement of democratic rights in the United States, the creation of a more equitable social and economic order in the United States. I think that the Soviet Communist Party having no firsthand knowledge of the American political scene was in a very poor position to make suggestions to American Communists about what political strategy and so on they should employ and that the American Communists were very ill advised in, so to speak, hanging on the word of every Pravda and Izvestia editorial that came out to try to catch the latest slant and how they should apply that to the American situation. And the ideals for which I joined the Communist Party were effective social progress, work for social legislation, the unifying of the labor movement and all the liberal people in the United States to achieve these immediate goals and a more equitable social order.

I think the Communist Party went way off the track because the way, for example, the new social order had been achieved in Russia or in China, I don't think has hardly any relevance to the United States with its constitutional form of democracy, and that is the only way, the only effective way of making improvements in the social and economic order of the United States which I do think, could bear improvement, and I think everybody could agree, I don't think that Russians or Chinese can be of much help to anybody in understanding how to improve our setup here under our type of government. Our type of government, they just haven't been brought up, they are not familiar.

Mr. ARENS. Are you cognizant of the fact that in the ascendancy of communism in Soviet Russia an estimated 20 million human souls have been liquidated, crushed?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I don't know the exact number. I am certainly cognizant of the fact that millions of people have suffered very deeply and many have been illegally murdered in the Soviet Union. That is one of the reasons why I quit the Communist Party.

Mr. ARENS. Are you cognizant of the fact that in Red China an estimated 40 million human lives have been snuffed out in the ascendancy of this force known as communism?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am no expert on China and I don't know whether that is true or not. I might say this—that all——

Mr. ARENS. What is your estimate on the number of human souls that have been destroyed in Red China?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no estimate. I have no way of estimating at all.

Mr. ARENS. Have you any doubt but what millions of human souls have been destroyed by this force known as communism in Red China?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is highly possible and I am opposed to those methods of bringing—may I answer?

Mr. ARENS. Are you cognizant of the fact right now, while I am talking to you, in Red China——

Mr. ALEXANDER. May I finish answering?

Mr. ARENS. They have a system known as the spread eagle where they take people who are against the regime and they tie one hand to a horse, another hand to a horse, their head to a horse, a foot to a horse, and the other foot to a horse, and then they pull them bodily apart. Are you cognizant of that going on now in Red China?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no expert knowledge of these facts.

Mr. ARENS. Are you cognizant——

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have read in the newspaper and I have no way of evaluating.

Mr. ARENS. Are you cognizant of the fact that Stalin, who over the course of a generation was the leader of this force of communism, was by his own colleagues, the present leader Khrushchev, condemned as one who was brutal, a murderer, who destroyed hundreds of thousands of his colleagues in the ascendancy of this force in Soviet Russia? Are you cognizant of that fact?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Very cognizant of it. That is why I left the Communist Party.

Mr. ARENS. Are you cognizant of the fact that Khrushchev, the present leader of the Kremlin, is dripping in blood, that during the regime of Stalin, Khrushchev had charge of liquidation of an estimated 8 to 10 million of the Kulak class that he just mowed down, had mowed down and destroyed as a Kansas farmer would wheat? Are you cognizant of that fact?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am cognizant of all the brutalities committed by the Stalin regime. That is why I left the Communist Party.

Mr. ARENS. Are you cognizant of the fact——

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no expert knowledge of any of these questions.

Mr. ARENS. Are you cognizant of the fact that that same force is the force that has been let loose of which you were a part and parcel for 20 years in this country, under whose flag you have protection?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I recall that the first question along this line of questioning I did not finish answering when counsel interrupted me. I would like that first question restated so I might finish answering.

Mr. ARENS. Let's finish this question first and then go back to it. Are you cognizant of the fact that you have dedicated 20 years of your life to the promotion, the development, and the activity of this awful force on the soil of the country under whose flag you have protection?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to answer this question after I finish completion of the first question.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. ARENS. Complete your answer.

Mr. WILLIS. I think he is entitled to have that first question read, if that is what he wants.

Mr. ARENS. Which question is it you are in doubt about?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think it was the first in this line of questions. It had something to do with Red China.

Mr. ARENS. Yes. Are you cognizant, in a word, of the horror now in vogue in Red China?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I would request that the question as stated in the record be read back.

Mr. WILLIS. I think you remember it substantially, don't you?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not certain.

Mr. ARENS. The essence of it, then, I shall now repeat, are you cognizant of the fact that in Red China now they are separating families, that they are digging up the graves of the ancestors to use them for fertilizer, they are taking those people who are no use any longer to this machine and killing them off as you and I might slaughter hogs, all for the purpose of the ascendancy of this force in its awful terrorism, the like of which this planet has yet to see? Are you cognizant that now in Red China——

Mr. WILLIS. Let him answer that question fully, Counsel.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ARENS. Go ahead and answer it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I am advised by my counsel that I have the right to have the text of the question as originally asked to be read back to me from the record. I will be glad to finish answering it.

Mr. ARENS. If there will be an answer we will strike the question and use the question I just asked.

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will you please restate it so I may answer accurately the question before.

Mr. ARENS. In essence, are you cognizant of the horror beyond human comprehension that is now in vogue in Red China?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. I am cognizant of it and I am very much opposed to it. I am also cognizant of a great number of things that go on in the colonial world. I spent almost 2 years as an enlisted man in the American Army in India. I saw a great deal of all of southeast Asian nations. The first year I was in India under British rule, some 2 million people died of starvation in the streets of the city of Calcutta. Certainly I think this is a very difficult problem to solve. If you don't have rapid industrialization of these colonial countries, millions of people die of starvation each year as they used to in old China. If you do have the rapid pace of industrialization that is necessary to stop this slow daily starvation among the people of Asia and Africa, so far it appears that the only way that it has been successfully done has been through the rapid brutal methods now being used in China. I am against them but it is a genuine dilemma, believe me.

Mr. WILLIS. Pardon me. I don't want to interrupt you. We have instructions from the Federal judge not to permit smoking during hearings.

Mr. ARENS. Are you cognizant, sir, and this is the crucial question I want to pose to you now in all sincerity, that the force which has caused the destruction of an estimated 20 million people in the Soviet Union, that has caused an estimated millions upon millions to be destroyed in Red China, the force that cut loose in Korea, the force that cut loose in Hungary, the force that now has 33 million agents over the world in this Godless, atheistic communism, which is dedicated to the destruction of this Nation under whose flag you have protection, is the same force to which you dedicated your life, your energies, your talents for 20 years?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, I think, Mr. Chairman, in all honesty, I would respect the staff director's description and ideals about communism. I hope that he will respect my own. I am opposed to the Communist Party.

Mr. ARENS. Would you kindly just answer that question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is a very bad thing. I am answering it. I answered it by leaving the Communist Party. However——

Mr. ARENS. If you want to answer it, then tell us.

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. WILLIS. I think——

Mr. ALEXANDER. May I finish this question?

Mr. ARENS. Go right ahead.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Much as I am now opposed to the Communist Party, I don't think that the Communist Party quite fits the description staff counsel gave and I think a good number of other people think so.

Mr. ARENS. Do you think communism——

Mr. ALEXANDER. May I finish answering the question?

Mr. ARENS. Go right ahead.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the problem might be stated in a nutshell like this, that there are people who are opposed to—both the Communists and the committee I think have an unfortunate habit of trying to force a person either to be a Communist or a supporter of the position of, well, one might call what might be called the modern know-nothing position. I think most of the people in the United States are in the middle between the two. And I think I share that position. I am opposed to communism, but I am not so naive as to subscribe to the devil theory of history. I am opposed to communism, but by being opposed to communism I don't think that I have to become a know-nothing, a witch hunter, and that type of thing.

Mr. ARENS. We don't want you to become a know-nothing.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think I can have an honest, dispassionate, objective, intellectual opposition to communism.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Without becoming a witch hunter.

Mr. WILLIS. I think that answers the question adequately.

Mr. ARENS. Now, would you kindly tell us if you are opposed to communism, if you think it is an evil force, would you tell us, please, sir, the names of persons who to your certain knowledge are now participants as members of the Communist Party in the greater Chicago area?

Mr. ALEXANDER. You asked me knowledge of people who are now members of the Communist Party.

Mr. ARENS. Who as of 1956 when you left the Communist Party.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As of 1956?

Mr. ARENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I would beg respectfully to decline to answer that question because I have been going through the unfortunate experience, very possibly losing my own job, by virtue of being summoned up here because I was a Communist in the past though I am not any longer, and I am conscious while I have been freely willing to testify about myself, my own activities in conscience I can't subject anybody else to the things I have been subjected to the past few days.

Mr. ARENS. May I ask you this question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I decline to answer any questions concerning names of other people.

Mr. WILLIS. Let him complete. He has a right to explain his declination.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Matter of conscience.

Mr. ARENS. Just a matter of conscience in his case.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Right.

Mr. ARENS. Now, if you had been a member of a narcotics ring which was selling narcotics to destroy the bodies and souls of people in the Chicago area, and you for reasons of your own had decided, "Well, this narcotics ring isn't for me, I am now decidedly opposed to it," would you come forward and tell the Government of the United States or its authorized agency the names of other persons in that narcotics ring, so that the Government of the United States might develop factual information with which to protect this society against the machinations and marauding of the narcotics ring?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I would like your advice. I think that we are discussing subversive activities, not a narcotics ring. I believe the question would be irrelevant. Pretty hard to discuss the parallel because it is a big philosophical argument here.

Mr. ARENS. Do you feel the Communist operation in the United States today now is a vile force?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Communist operation in America now an evil force?

Mr. ARENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, hardly. I think the Communist operation now is an impotent force, a sterile force, and in my own opinion that if it were not given all the publicity that it is given by committees like this one and a few others, that within a few months the Communist Party would be reduced to the same type of sterile impotency as the Social-Labor Party, the IWW have, and they would cease to be any factor at all in America.

Mr. ARENS. Are you cognizant of the fact that the best brains and best intelligence sources in the Government of the United States undercover agencies serving in the Communist Party, indeed people who testified in these very hearings, as well as undercover agents who have been giving information to this committee, unanimously without a sense of dissent profess that the Communist operation in the United States today now is a more serious, more deadly fifth column on American soil than ever before in the history of this Nation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am conscious of this fact. However, being an American citizen brought up on the Bill of Rights, I have long ago decided that when it comes to questions of making up my own mind, the realm of philosophy, politics, and moral ideas, as an American and while I can read what Government experts or anybody else say, my duty is to study these problems as carefully as I can from objective sources and come to my own conclusions. In the realm of philosophy, politics, I hardly consider police agents and people of that sort as experts. I would much rather go back to the original sources of Marx, Engels, Lenin, make objective decisions for myself, whether I am for or against them. People in Nazi Germany fell into the habit of letting their minds be made up for them by the official decisions of their government. I think it has been the whole spirit of our country that you should listen to what experts in your government say but read the stuff yourself and make up your own mind for yourself and that is what I tried to do.

Mr. ARENS. Have you made a study, then, of the operations out of the consulates and embassies of this Government of espionage agents in the pay and under the discipline of the Communist conspiracy?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no expert information. I read the newspapers like anybody else.

Mr. ARENS. Have you made a study of the current Communist political subversion campaign?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; I have no expert information. For the last year and a half I have been quite disinterested in politics.

Mr. ARENS. Have you made a study of any Communist colonization program, whereby they are now sending into heavy industry, people who have been trained in training schools of revolution who efface all identities of themselves for the purpose of colonizing in heavy industry? Have you made a study of that?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no expert information. I read what was reported in newspapers of this committee. But for the last year, a year and a half I have become much more disinterested in politics than I used to be. I have occupied myself in the field of literature and I expend most of my time writing a book so I have no expert knowledge of this.

Mr. WILLIS. Let me ask you this question, and I am not going to debate or characterize it, either way, for the information of this committee. You are aware of the fact that they use colonization without putting any interpretation on it. You are aware of that, aren't you?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; I am aware of it.

Mr. WILLIS. In fact, let me ask you this, very frankly. I meant to ask you it a while ago; I am going to ask you now. With your educational background that you related, and your knowledge of theoretical communism, everything else, did you consider yourself in later years engaged in the type of work that you performed—you said you studied to be a machinist—is that something of a definition of colonization, isn't that about the type they use? If they were not one, isn't that about the thing they use, in all honesty?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No. In all honesty I could not have been colonized in 1949 when I became a machinist, because I had just been expelled from the Communist Party. The Communists had orders not even to associate with me, but I will answer about colonization as I knew it when I was a leader of the party.

Yes, certainly, a Communist urged members to go to work in important factories and things of that sort, they could persuade them to do so and the reasons for it were quite simple and obvious. There was a big unionization drive going on in this country at that time and the Communist Party was, I think it is now, judged to be true by all labor historians, the Communists played quite a big role in organizing the CIO in the beginning, although they were kicked out, and Communists made every attempt to get their members to go to work in big factories where organizations were ahead, when organizers were needed, and so on.

Mr. WILLIS. And place them in posts of leadership, and so on.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Not necessarily.

Mr. WILLIS. I think that is the essence of what we have been——

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think in all honesty the Communists are quite willing to say, "Let the weight of the chemicals fall according to their weight." If the workers would elect somebody who happened to be a Communist to an office, fine; if they wouldn't elect them, that guy wasn't doing a very good job.

Mr. WILLIS. Proceed, Counsel.

Mr. ARENS. Did you teach in your training school force and violence as a means to obtain the objectives of communism?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No.

Mr. ARENS. Does the Communist Party?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Not in America.

Mr. ARENS. Does the Communist Party stand for the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I don't know what the Communist Party stands for now, sir.

Mr. ARENS. Now don't equivocate with me. Did the Communist Party stand for it?

Mr. ALEXANDER. When I was a member?

Mr. ARENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Did it stand for overthrow of the Government by force and violence?

Mr. ARENS. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No.

Mr. ARENS. Then were the 11 Communist traitors down in Foley Square convicted erroneously for advocating the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence?

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am sorry, sir; I don't have any legal qualifications to give an answer to that question, not a lawyer.

Mr. ARENS. You said you spoke, you taught Marxism and Leninism.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is right.

Mr. ARENS. Lenin advocated, did he not, that in essence we must use deceit, lies, anything that will further our cause? Isn't that the essence of the technique used by Lenin and advocated by Lenin?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, this is one of the reasons why I resigned from the Communist Party, because writing——

Mr. ARENS. When were you taught that?

Mr. ALEXANDER. May I continue to answer that question when I am finished?

Mr. ARENS. Go ahead.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That the writing of Lenin, Lenin having been a Russian and living in Russia most of his life, were not applicable to an open democratic system such as we had in the United States. When Lenin wrote about deceit and lies and all that sort of thing, he was talking about an underground revolution, antimonarchist movement in a Czarist country, Russia. When I was in the United States Army, I know of people who employed deceit, lies, all that sort of thing, to an incredible extent, the OSS. Our American and British underground agents in occupied countries, and certainly we, when you are fighting——

Mr. ARENS. Would you kindly answer this question? It is not responsive at all to the question. You are giving a recitation.

Mr. WILLIS. I think you have given an adequate explanation.

Mr. ARENS. Now, sir, when you taught Marxism and Leninism in this leadership training school of the Communist Party, did you teach Marxism and Leninism absent, minus, without encompassing in your instructions the deceit, the lies, and the treachery that Lenin taught and advocated and wrote?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I never advocated deceit, lies, treachery. When I began to feel that the Communist Party was engaging in that sort of thing I left it.

Mr. ARENS. You taught in Marxism, Leninism out in Seattle back in the early 1940's, didn't you?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is right.

Mr. ARENS. At that time you knew from Lenin that he taught deceit, lies, and the like, did you not?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I taught that the——

Mr. ARENS. Answer my question. Don't equivocate with me. When you taught——

Mr. ALEXANDER. What is the question, please?

Mr. ARENS. When you taught Marxism and Leninism in Seattle in the leadership training school of the Communists, did you then know that Lenin's techniques, his advocacy, his teachings encompassed and embraced lying and deceit and misrepresentation as part of the technique of communism?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I knew that to be true when operating, when Communists were working in an underground, illegal organization devoted to the overthrow of the Russian czar and that is the only way anybody has ever accomplished anything against a complete dictatorship. That is why I am so much in favor of maintaining democracy and the Bill of Rights in the United States so that I hope it will never have to have any movements that resort to lies and deceit here. People only do that when they have a complete dictatorship as our underground agents had to do.

Mr. ARENS. Did you, as of the time that you were teaching in the Lenin school, have this revulsion toward Lenins' teachings of force and violence and of deceit and treachery?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I never taught in the Lenin school, sir.

Mr. ARENS. I say when you taught in the training school.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Did I have a revulsion against lies, deceit, violence?

Mr. ARENS. Against Lenin teaching of lying, deceit, and treachery.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. I had a revulsion against them. I am sure that most men in the OSS had a revulsion against the methods they had to use. They certainly would have preferred to use the kind of methods that we can use in political life in the United States under our Bill of Rights but revulsion or no revulsion they were operating in an occupied country against Hitler. They had to use them.

Mr. WILLIS. Wait a second.

Mr. JOHANSEN. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ARENS. Do you——

Mr. WILLIS. Wait a minute.

Mr. JOHANSEN. As I understand you to testify you said that one of the reasons that you left the party was because of, and was timed to your discovery of, the advocacy and use of deceit and treachery and the advocacy of force and violence.

Mr. WILLIS. Is that right?

Mr. JOHANSEN. Is that correct?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. JOHANSEN. Was it the fact that it was used in Russia that prompted you to develop that revulsion or was it the fact that it was practiced, preached, and practiced in the United States which caused that?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, the use of it in Russia certainly forcibly brought it to my attention and I don't think it was used exactly in that way in the United States because the Communist Party never had government power in the United States like they had in Russia. But I certainly began to consider, for example, that my own expulsion from the Communist Party in 1948 was a rather inhuman and dishonest thing to do. I think the people who expelled me from the Communist Party knew quite well that I was not a FBI agent or a FBI accomplice and yet they called me that in order to expel me because I was a critic of theirs. I think this was dishonesty and deceit on their part, yes. But I don't think the Communist Party in the United States ever practiced it on any grand scale like they did in Russia, to the extent of having people killed and so on. They were never in power. It is an altogether different situation. I don't think the Communist Party, the Communist Party is made up of human beings, and no matter where you go, in what walk of life, the people are rather queer ducks, with a great number of brothers—ambitions and deceit, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. WILLIS. Of course, what we are interested in is information with regard to current operations and techniques of the Communist conspiracy in America.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. As I understand, you will not reveal names of people with whom you were associated or go into those details today; is that correct?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Not today, or I am afraid at any time, sir, at least I hope not at any time. I hope I will never bring injury to innocent people. I don't think I ever will.

Mr. WILLIS. In doing so, I want to get the record perfectly straight for all purposes, and I hope your counsel will listen, in taking that position I do not recall that you have invoked any specific constitutional provision. You do it on the basis of conscience; is that correct?

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am declining to answer this type of question, sir, on the grounds of conscience, and on the advice of my attorneys, also on all constitutional grounds which might pertain to it, except that portion of the fifth amendment which speaks of protection against self-incrimination.

Mr. WILLIS. You do not invoke?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not invoke that section of the fifth amendment which offers immunity against self-incrimination. That is the only one I do not.

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Chairman, I will make this record absolutely clear because I expect to propound a very important question on this specific issue, and I invite your attention to the explanation that I want to make now of pertinency.

This subcommittee of the Committee on Un-American Activities is here in Chicago to develop factual information which will be of assistance to it in appraising the adequacy of our existing security laws and their administration, also for the purpose of accumulating information which might be of use to it in devising amendments to existing security laws to cope with the ever-changing tactics and strategy of the Communist Party. It is obvious, sir, from your testimony here, and I will say I have all kinds of exhibits I was going to display to you respecting your own Communist Party activities, information and knowledge and techniques—it is obvious, sir, that you have a fund of knowledge of current Communist Party techniques and activities in the greater Chicago area. I say by current up to and including 1956. In order for us to determine——

Mr. WILLIS. 1956 according to his testimony.

Mr. ARENS. According to his own testimony.

According to your own testimony up until 1956. Now, it is obvious that before this committee could summon persons before it, in order to solicit from them information respecting Communist Party techniques, activities and the like, we must know the identity of those persons. I therefore now am going to ask you in a moment to give this committee the names of persons who to your certain knowledge—I don't want any innocent people that you talked about—only those persons who, to your certain knowledge in 1956, were members of the Communist Party, in the greater Chicago area, so that this committee can with that information either confirm partially or in toto, other bits of information respecting those persons and their activities or summon those persons before this committee to get additional information, all for our legislative purposes of appraising the adequacy of existing legislation and its administration or to devise amendments to existing laws.

Now, sir, with that explanation, I now ask you while you are under oath to name before this committee now the names of persons who, to your certain knowledge, were in 1956 members of the Communist Party and active as Communists in the Greater Chicago area.

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ARENS. Sir, so there will be no misunderstanding on this record, after I had just made this explanation and posed this question, you have been in consultation now with two of your lawyers; is that correct?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Correct.

Mr. ARENS. Who are appearing here with you today.

Now, would you kindly respond to the question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I would willingly stay here all day, all night, as long as the committee wants, to give them all information in my possession about Communist activities, Communist techniques up to 1956 when I had knowledge of these things. However, when it comes to identifying persons whom I knew as Communists up to 1956, I can't evade the point that I might cause those people to go through the same thing I have had to go through for the past few days, including possible loss of a job. Most people who were in the Communist Party at that time, as the committee well knows, have left the Communist Party, and are now opposed to it. The Communist Party, in your own words—pardon me, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. You see, permit me to interrupt you. I think I catch your point.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. It is for the very statement you just made—that argument cannot possibly be accepted by us. You say, as we well know, it is meaningless today. But let us form a judgment on that by digging into and being informed as to the techniques, and so on. So do you not see it is inconsistent, very difficult, and unpleasant a task to permit a witness, not necessarily you, any witness, to talk about his activities in his own way, believing, perhaps, all that that witness is saying is true, but not giving us an opportunity to check upon the truth or falsity of the witness on the stand being questioned? And then painting a picture his way and stopping short and not permitting us to form a judgment. I am implying nothing by what I have said as to the truth or falsity of your own statement. We are now discussing a very serious question of law, believe me, and I will have to order you to answer that question for that reason; and let me say this, as I indicated, we appreciate your appearance, we appreciate your task, we appreciate the position you are in. On the other hand, here is our position: This committee has been formed many years ago. The talk about its lack of legislative purpose is not uncommon to us. We hear that all the time. We have to bear the brunt of criticism and all that goes with it. But from year to year we are directed to make a report to the Congress, and we did that just last January on the work of last year, calendar year 1958. We were reconstituted and ordered to do this job. In the reformation of the committee through its financing, as far as I know, out of 435 Congressmen, I don't think there—I really don't recall one vote against ordering us to continue our legislative purpose.

As to legislation, as the opening statement indicates, this committee has made recommendation after recommendation. Some of the most delicate and penetrating security laws for good or bad, according to the judgment of various people, have been passed, and as a result of our work. The Smith Act, the Foreign Agents' Registration Act, the Communist Control Act, as I say, for good or bad, Congress voted them. We are directed to appraise them from year to year. That is our job, which is unpleasant.

Now, when they talk about legislative purpose of this committee, let us see what it means, whether it is or is not the business of Congress to legislate upon this subject of communism.

It is a painful truth that within your and my lifetime this ideology has taken over perhaps one-fourth of the population of the earth, of the world, and perhaps in physical land mass perhaps a third or more, without firing a shot. We are in trouble today. We have to vote something like $40 billion a year for national defense—national defense against whom and what? Who are the troublemakers? Who must we defend the taxpayers against—have to bleed through the nose? The Communists, of course.

Now, anyone can, with a serious face, take an oath before this committee and say, "Well, Congress is powerless to inquire into these things; the resolution is too vague for us to talk about it." I make this lengthy statement to try to impress upon you that in ordering you to answer that question I am forced to. You go halfway—your way—without giving us an opportunity to recheck, to check on what you say. Then we are led into this blind alley, and then you have this warning. The committee appreciates the extent to which you have gone; but with this explanation I will order you to answer the question, unless, of course, you wish to take advantage of the invocation of the constitutional grounds; then it ends the matter. You have a perfect right to do it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. May I consult with counsel on this? It is obviously a serious matter.

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Witness, so I just pose a question to you, and your counsel might well listen because we want this record to be absolutely clear.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is a question pending.

Mr. ARENS. I want this to go on the record now.

Do you understand, Mr. Witness, that your declination is not accepted by the committee and that the chairman of this subcommittee has ordered and directed you to answer the outstanding principal question? Do you understand that?

Mr. MARKS. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understand.

Mr. WILLIS. I am required to make that order under the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understand that. I think you have been respectful of my sincerity and I am certain respectful of yours, sir.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully must decline to answer on the grounds of conscience. In doing so I invoke all constitutional grounds for refusing to do so, including, but not limited to, the first amendment and the due process clause of the fifth amendment relating to scope of this inquiry and the power of the committee and the pertinence of the questions. There is only one constitutional ground that I am not invoking and that is the privilege against self-incrimination.

Mr. ARENS. Now, sir, just so the record can be so clear it will be ludicrous to say it is not clear, you have just conferred with your two counsels, have you not, before you gave that response?

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, certainly.

Mr. ARENS. And you have set forth the grounds for your refusal after your consultation with them, indeed, I believe you have read it after you have prepared the exact answer, is that correct?

(The witness conferred with his counsel.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. I decline to answer that question. I think it is irrelevant. The matter of the lawyer-client privilege is involved.

Mr. ARENS. All right. You still understand, now, do you not, that the committee as of this instant is continuing to insist upon the information, it is not accepting your declination? Do you understand that?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understand that and I hope that I will stand by my position for the rest of my life.

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully suggest that will conclude the staff interrogation of this witness.

Mr. WILLIS. The witness is excused.

Because of the foregoing, the said Committee on Un-American Activities was deprived of an answer to a pertinent question propounded to the said Edwin A. Alexander, relative to the subject matter which, under Public Law 601, section 121, subsection (q) (2) of the 79th Congress, and under House Resolution 7 of the 86th Congress, the said committee was instructed to investigate, and the refusal of the witness to answer the question, namely:

"Now, sir, with that explanation, I now ask you while you are under oath to name before this committee now the names of persons who, to your certain knowledge, were in 1956 members of the Communist Party and active in the greater Chicago area." which question was pertinent to the subject under inquiry, is a violation of the subpena under which the witness had previously appeared, and his refusal to answer the aforesaid question deprived your committee of necessary and pertinent testimony and places the said witness in contempt of the House of Representatives of the United States.

Other pertinent committee proceedings

The following resolution was adopted at the organizational meeting of the Committee for the 86th Congress, held on the 23d day of January 1959:

"Be it resolved, That the chairman be authorized and empowered from time to time to appoint subcommittees composed of three or more members of the Committee on Un-American Activities, at least one of whom shall be of the minority political party, and a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, for the purpose of performing any and all acts which the committee as a whole is authorized to perform."

The following is an extract from the minutes of an executive session of the subcommittee of the Committee on Un-American Activities, consisting of MORGAN M. MOULDER, chairman, EDWIN E. WILLIS, and AUGUST E. JOHANSEN, held on the 3d day of June 1995, in room 225, Old House Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

"The subcommittee was called to order by the chairman of the full committee who stated the purpose of the meeting was to consider what action the subcommittee should take regarding the refusal of Edwin A. Alexander to answer material questions propounded to him in the course of the hearings conducted by the said subcommittee in Chicago, Ill., beginning on the 5th day of May 1959, and what recommendation it would make regarding his citation for contempt of the House of Representatives.

"After full consideration of the testimony of the witness, given at the said hearing in Chicago, Ill., a motion was made by Mr. JOHANSEN, seconded by Mr. WILLIS, and unanimously carried, that a report of the facts relating to the refusal of Edwin A. Alexander to answer material questions before the said subcommittee at the hearing aforesaid, be referred and submitted to the Committee on Un-American Activities as a whole, with the recommendation that a report of the facts relating to the refusal of said witness to answer material questions, together with all of the facts in connection therewith, be referred to the House of Representatives, with the recommendation that the said witness be cited for contempt of the House of Representatives for his refusal to answer questions therein set forth, to the end that he may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law."

The following is an extract from the minutes of an executive session of the Committee on Un-American Activities, consisting of Hon. FRANCIS E. WALTER, chairman; Hon.

CLYDE DOYLE; Hon. EDWIN E. WILLIS; Hon. GORDON H. SCHERER; and Hon. AUGUST E. JOHANSEN, held on the 3d day of June 1959, in room 225, Old House Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

"The report of the facts relating to the refusal of Edwin A. Alexander to answer material questions was submitted to the committee, upon which a motion was made by Mr. DOYLE, seconded by Mr. SCHERER, and unanimously carried that the subcommittee's report of the facts relating to the refusal of Edwin A. Alexander to answer material questions before the said subcommittee at the hearing conducted before it in Chicago, Ill., on the 6th day of May 1959, be, and the same is hereby, approved and adopted, and that the Committee on Un-American Activities report and refer the said refusal to answer questions before the said subcommittee, together with all the facts in connection therewith, to the House of Representatives, with the recommendation that the witness be cited for contempt of the House of Representatives for his refusal to answer such questions, to the end that he may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law."

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 375) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives certify the report of the Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives as to the refusal of Edwin A. Alexander to answer questions before a duly constituted subcommittee of the Committee on Un-American Activities, together with all of the facts in connection therewith, under seal of the House of Representatives, to the United States Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois, to the end that the said Edwin A. Alexander may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MOULDER].

Mr. MOULDER. Mr. Speaker, the subcommittee appointed by the chairman of our full Committee on Un-American Activities met in Chicago on May 5 of this year. The hearings in Chicago were in furtherance of a project of this committee on current techniques of the Communist conspiracy in this country and the strategy and the tactics of the Communist Party and its work in this country in attempting to infiltrate into and control some labor organizations engaged in work essential to our national security. At the hearing held in Chicago on this date the witness, Edwin A. Alexander, refused to answer this question. I want to say first that the committee made a long statement—that is, I did, as chairman—explaining to this witness the purpose of the hearings and the information we were seeking in order to help us legislate on this important problem. And, among many other questions, we asked this witness as follows:

Now, sir, with that explanation, I now ask you while you are under oath to name before this committee now the names of persons who, to your certain knowledge, were in 1956 members of the Communist Party and active as Communists in the Greater Chicago area.

The witness refused to answer, claiming not the constitutional provision of protection from self-incrimination, but instead he claimed that his conscience would not permit him to answer the question. Our report shows many other important questions he refused to answer. We feel that this witness is clearly in contempt of the Congress, and we urge that he be cited for contempt.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WRIGHT BROTHERS DAY

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H.J. Res. 513) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the 17th day of December in each year is hereby designated as "Wright Brothers Day", in commemoration of the first successful flights in a heavier-than-air, mechanically propelled airplane, which were made by Orville and Wilbur Wright on December 17, 1903, near Kitty Hawk, North Carolina. The President is authorized and requested to issue annually a proclamation inviting the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. MARTIN: On page 1, line 3, strike out "in each year" and insert "1959", and on page 1, line 9, strike out the word "annually" and amend the title by striking out "in each year" and inserting "1959".

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Designating the 17th day of December 1959 as 'Wright Brothers Day'."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, December 17, 1903, was an eventful day in the history, not alone of our own country, but of the world. This date marked the beginning of a revolution in the transportation methods of the civilized world. It was on this day that the Wright brothers, Wilbur and Orville, made the first successful flights in a heavier-than-air, motor-driven aircraft near Kitty Hawk, N.C.

This historic event has not until now been officially observed as a national day of recognition for the great achievement of the Wright brothers. The resolution which I have introduced authorizes and requests the President of the United States to issue a proclamation inviting the people of our country to observe the anniversary date this December 17 with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The resolution was presented at the suggestion of the National Aeronautic Association.

The accomplishment of the famous Wright brothers was far more than a personal triumph. It placed our country in the front ranks of a worldwide change in transportation methods. It drew the continents of this planet closer together, so that today they are only hours apart instead of days or weeks. It is therefore most appropriate that the men whose genius made this revolution possible should be memorialized on the anniversary day of their success.

I have been joined in this endeavor by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK], who represents Dayton, where the Wright brothers lived, entered business together, developed their idea for a flying machine, and conducted their early experiments.

In making possible the expeditious consideration of this resolution, I wish to acknowledge the splendid cooperation of our beloved Speaker, the majority leader, my good friend Mr. MCCORMACK; Chairman CELLER of the Judiciary Committee; Mr. MCCULLOCH, the ranking minority member, and all the members of the Judiciary Committee which unanimously reported the resolution.

I believe the Nation will profit by its demonstration to the world that the country honors the enterprise and the genius of two American men whose faith in heavier-than-air flight changed the pattern of our lives.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to the House and to my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, for the action today in approving H.J. Res. 513. I joined with my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], in introducing an identical resolution known as H.J. Res. 514.

The adoption of this resolution will be especially pleasing to all the folks of our Third Congressional District in the Great Miami Valley and in particular to the citizens of the city of Dayton. Dayton has become known and acclaimed all over the world as the birthplace and cradle of aviation. Some of the most outstanding and significant developments in the entire field of aviation have had their origin and development in Dayton since the Wright brothers built their first successful airplane there. This airplane, the first one ever to fly, was powered by a very small engine and it is now displayed with great honor in the Smithsonian Institution.

The Wright brothers operated a bicycle shop on West Third Street in Dayton and it was my privilege to know them personally. As a boy I took my bike to them for service and repair.

Dayton and our Miami Valley are proud of the great achievements of Orville and Wilbur Wright and have honored them on many occasions. The anniversary of powered flight is observed each year with a significant celebration on December 17. Noted figures in the aviation field have come to Dayton for this meeting and last year we were honored to have Mr. Elwood R. Quesada, Federal Aviation Administrator, as the principal speaker.

The people of Dayton and its civic bodies have recognized the achievements of the Wright brothers not only in gatherings such as this, but also in naming landmarks after the famous brothers. A monument to the memory of the Wright brothers overlooks Wright Field at the Wright-Patterson Air Force Base. Orville Wright School is located on Wright Avenue, and a high school is named for Wilbur Wright.

It is indeed fitting to give national recognition to the Wright brothers on the anniversary of their first powered flight, and I hope that the whole Nation will celebrate the occasion as we do in Dayton.

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY ACT OF 1959

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 372 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8678) to amend the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958 to make certain adjustments in the Federal-aid highway program, and for other purposes. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Works, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to said bill except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Public Works. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Public Works may be offered to any section of the bill at the conclusion of the general debate, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of such consideration, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 372 provides for the consideration of H.R. 8678, which would amend the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958 and would make certain adjustments in the Federal-Aid highway program. The resolution provides for a closed rule that would permit amendments by the direction of the Committee on Public Works, and 2 hours of general debate.

H.R. 8678, which consists of two titles, is designed to provide a solution to some of the most pressing problems relating to our Federal highway program and to maintain this program on schedule for the next 2 years.

Title I of the bill amends the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 by decreasing the authorization for fiscal year 1961 by $500 million. It amends the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1958 by giving approval to the estimate of cost of completing the Interstate System as the basis for making the apportionment to the States of the funds authorized for the Interstate System for fiscal year 1962.

The committee has a committee amendment which it will offer under the rule and which will be voted on separately declaring it to be the intent and policy of the Congress to reimburse equitably either in money or in mileage each State for every portion of a toll or free highway, bridge, or tunnel within that State which is on the Interstate System, the construction of which has been completed subsequent to August 2, 1947, or which is either in actual use or under construction by contract, for completion, awarded not later than June 30, 1957.

Title II is designed primarily to provide additional revenue for the Federal-Aid highway program which is financed through the highway trust fund. Without legislation providing further funds for this program, it is estimated that there would be a deficit in the trust fund by the end of fiscal year 1960 of $490 million, assuming provision is made for the payment of apportionment already made.

To meet this immediate problem, this title provides for—

First. The imposition of an additional 1 cent tax on gasoline, diesel fuel, and special motor fuels for the 22-month period beginning September 1, 1959, and ending June 30, 1961. For this period, this generally will raise gasoline and related fuel taxes to 4 cents a gallon.

Second. It also provides for the allocation to the highway trust fund of 5 percentage points of the manufacturers' excise tax on passenger cars, and so forth, and of 5 percentage points of the tax on auto parts and accessories. This allocation is to be made for the 3-year period beginning July 1, 1961, and ending June 30, 1964.

An adequate highway system is necessary to our national defense and the economic development of the Nation.

All of us will agree that we never like to impose taxes. We all look forward to the day when we can reduce taxes. We cannot, under the present fiscal condition of our Government, call upon the Federal Government to continue this program at its present level without providing further necessary revenue to finance it. We must have a sound fiscal program if we are to continue to meet the highway needs of this country and to be certain that we do not cripple the economy of our Nation by causing this great program to come to a complete halt.

I urge the adoption of the resolution so that the Members of the House may consider this important legislation.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RIEHLMAN] to extend his remarks.

Mr. RIEHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIEHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will definitely vote against the proposed 1 cent per gallon increase in the Federal gasoline tax. I regret that the House Ways and Means Committee finally effected a complete reversal of its previous position and decided to recommend such an increase.

Were a tax increase the only alternative to complete collapse of the highway program, my position might well be different. If the only saving alternatives were either a tax increase or the abandonment of this program to the evils of deficit financing, I would most certainly support the former. But I am convinced that neither of these is the case. I made this known to the committee and I reemphasize my belief that there are fiscally sound solutions available without placing the burden of another tax increase on the people of this country.

The solution I would like to see, and I have introduced legislation to this effect, is a cutting back of the annual appropriation for the program and an extension of the completion date. Such a program would not hamper the ultimate goals of the highway program and would neither have required an increase in taxes nor would it have necessitated dipping into the general fund of the Treasury. Nor would it penalize the taxpayer for the shortsightedness of Congress in accelerating the highway program while disregarding the solvency of the trust fund. On July 29 the Ways and Means Committee announced that it had agreed to a substantially similar program. But, on August 13 the committee did an about-face and recommended the program that was adopted Tuesday by the Public Works Committee and is being considered here today. The Ways and Means Committee has in fact reversed its position on several occasions, lending further credence to my contention that there are several sound solutions.

I have other reservations concerning this so-called temporary increase in the gasoline tax. I am afraid this will be similar to the temporary taxes levied during the Korean war which we still pay today. I fear we will be treated in 1961 to a reenactment of that familiar scene in which we hear the plea that the temporary tax must be continued if we are to save the highway program. The fear that we will have gained another 10- to 15-year temporary tax is made greater as I read the second portion of this recommended program.

In the first place, we are attempting to establish a transfer of excise taxes that will not take effect until another Congress sits in 1961. In the second place, if that Congress chose to follow our direction, we would be taking an estimated $2.5 billion out of the Treasury over a 3-year period. The statement, "we will transfer excise taxes" sounds very nice and proper, but it is just another way of saying "we are going to dip $2.5 billion out of the general revenues." How will this $2.5 billion be made up? I doubt that other less essential expenditures will be cut back. Congress, in its characteristic search for the path of least resistance, will end up borrowing that $2.5 billion and adding it to the national debt. Should it not choose to enter into this dangerous game of transferring excise taxes, then it is certain to extend this temporary tax.

I do not believe that completion of the highway construction program by the arbitrarily set date of 1972 is of such overwhelming importance to the Nation. My position is based on the belief that the American people would prefer spreading out the highway program over a few additional years to an increase of 33⅓ percent in the Federal tax on gasoline and the expenditure from general revenues of $2.5 billion that was never intended to be spent when this program was established.

I am happy to see included in the highway bill a section declaring it to be the intent and policy of Congress to reimburse each State for highways, bridges, and tunnels included in the interstate system. I have long advocated such reimbursement and have sponsored legislation to that effect. But, I feel this intent could very well be expressed in separate legislation. The fact that it has been tacked onto this financing bill does not change my position on either the gas tax increase or the transfer of excise taxes. The bill in its entirety is still unacceptable.

We are faced with a very real and perplexing problem. The continuation of the highway program is a matter of great significance for Syracuse, for Onondaga County, and for the entire country. It is my firm conviction that there are sound solutions available that would permit this continuation. I have no doubt that the House today will adopt the bill before it, but I have no desire to be a party to that action. As long as other fiscally responsible solutions are available, I refuse to vote for higher taxes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. PELLY] for an extension of his remarks.

A TRIBUTE TO POLITICAL FORTITUDE AND MR. HALLECK

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House by a 1 vote margin sustained the veto of the President of the United States on the Public Works Appropriations bill. That vote and the taking of the yeas and nays was described immediately afterwards by one of the news wire services as a stunning defeat for the Democrats. As a Republican, I probably found this political contest more exciting and worthy of comment than those on the losing side of the battle.

But, Mr. Speaker, to me the credit for this victory should not be partisan; it belongs to certain members of both parties, and here I refer to those courageous Members who stood firm for overall economy and their convictions, and to the national interest, in spite of party pressure.

In following the dictates of conscience those individuals incurred the strong displeasure of their party leaders. Great honor is due to a certain small group of Democrats, and my admiration goes also to the Republicans who put principles over personal advantage. Here I refer to those who voted to sustain the President's veto, even though one or more of the unbudgeted projects objected to by the President was in their district and would be eliminated.

So, Mr. Speaker, I raise my voice in a sincere tribute to those of our colleagues on both sides of the aisle who displayed such political fortitude yesterday. Some say in Congress, to get along a Member should go along—meaning go along with one's party and leaders. But to me, going along with a Member's convictions and conscience is what constitutes success, and the profiles of courage that stood out yesterday were certainly gratifying.

I have one other comment, Mr. Speaker, arising from the Republican victory yesterday. The Washington Post this morning described the way our minority leader marshaled his forces and how every time the Democratic leadership persuaded one of its members to switch his vote the minority leader would send one of his members to offset it.

Again, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], demonstrated his talent for winning floor fights and legislative battles.

The record of this session in the House in my opinion will go down in history as a tribute to his leadership.

In their wisdom the American people in 1958 saw fit to put a Republican in the White House and a large Democratic majority in control of Congress. Had not the minority in the House had such an able leader the result could have been tragic, it seems to me, in many ways. However, the President and the people of this country are fortunate. Under our system we need skillful political figures and as such it is not only the members of his party who remain indebted to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], but all Americans can be thankful for the fact that to a large degree the program of the President has been enacted and administration policies sustained.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD].

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in the final analysis, the primary consideration of this Congress in the matter of new roads is to see to it that as many miles of new highways are constructed in the right places as rapidly as possible with the funds made available.

Any other consideration is secondary at this time when we are losing 36,000 American lives a year to traffic accidents.

This tragic total is expected to rise steadily in the years ahead unless our interstate highway construction program continues at its scheduled rate as a minimum.

Traffic accidents cost us $6.5 billion last year, or 12.5 cents for every gallon of gasoline consumed on our highways. completion of the Interstate System will save, at a minimum, 7,400 lives a year and will reduce property damage by some $1.3 billion.

In other words, investment in the Interstate System is going to save us $1.3 billion a year plus saving 7,400 lives. This is certainly the most profitable, the most worthy investment which our Federal Government can make on behalf of all the people of the United States. This is the most essential of all our domestic public works projects.

But in our consideration today of H.R. 8678 to amend the Federal Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958, we are faced with consideration of an amendment which I feel will provide thousands of our citizens with a detour to oblivion.

This amendment of section 104 of the proposed highway bill would change section 114 of the Highway Act so that a policy of reimbursement to toll road States would be established.

On that point, I just hope the Members of the House when they vote on this particular bill this year will keep in mind the remarks I am making today, that the proponents of the reimbursement program will put on their push next year, and see if I am not right.

This reimbursement program could cost us $4.2 billion. This amount would be almost equal to 2 full years of appropriations to continue construction of our Interstate Highway System.

This would mean that 14,800 lives would be lost needlessly. This would mean that $3.2 billion in property damage would be done on our highways if our present rate of traffic accidents continues. However, all indications are that our traffic accident rate will rise—not decrease. That our traffic fatalities will go up, not down.

May I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment. It will lead our drivers up a dead end street, a one-way trip to death.

Every cent we have available should go into new highway construction on our Interstate System. Not one cent should be diverted into State reimbursements for toll roads and other structures until such time as we have definite assurances that our Interstate Highway System will be completed as rapidly as possible.

That is the least we as Members of Congress can do for the American people. That is the least which we can do to combat the carnage and the deaths on our highways.

We should vote for the 1-cent increase in the gasoline tax. But we should reject the amendment to establish a policy for reimbursement to toll road States. There is plenty of time for us to talk about paying back those States which have toll roads as part of the Interstate System when the rest of this vital system is completed or until such time as we have assurances that enough funds are available in the Highway Trust Fund to accomplish both tasks.

Every mile of new expressways means fewer fatalities, fewer crippling injuries, fewer hospital bills and fewer hours lost at work.

Let us not divert highway funds up blind alleys. Let us build roads where they are needed as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the American people do not want Congress to pass the emergency highway act to increase gasoline taxes with this reimbursement provision included. We know full well that in 1960 the proponents of this particular provision will push to reimburse about eight States to the extent of $4.2 billion, with what I term pork barrel funds.

You are actually trading death for dollars. What you are actually doing is bailing out a lot of bondholders who have invested their money in these toll roads when frankly I believe our endeavors should be directed to building an Interstate Highway System and not making it a program of reimbursing already established toll roads.

I am not against reimbursement, for Michigan would get $195 million, but I do not believe this is the time when we should burden our interstate highway program with this added expense—not at least until the program is completed.

At this point, I would like to commend the Committee on Ways and Means and the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS], for the fine work they have done. I think it is a very difficult thing to work out a financing program, and I think the Ways and Means Committee did a fine job, but I think the provision put in here by the Public Works Committee is very disturbing and I hope the Members will vote against it when it comes up.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I yield.

Mr. FALLON. I would like to commend the gentleman on his fine statement. I do differ with him in regard to the intent or policy of reimbursement for toll roads. This is just a statement of policy. It will have to come back to the Congress when the time comes for apportionments to be made; it will have to be decided by Congress before any money can be spent for reimbursement to any particular State for these toll roads.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I would like to say to the gentleman from Maryland that he is eminently correct. Let us take a look at the proposed declaration of policy which was proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK], and read the entire declaration to find out just exactly what the House Public Works Committee did. The last provision is the important one.

I agree with the gentleman from Maryland that legislation would have to be brought in to take care of reimbursement, but that will start next year. The section to which I referred reads as follows:

> Congress further declares that after it receives the report of the study and investigation required under section 210 of the Highway Revenue Act of 1956, and the revised estimate of cost to be submitted within 10 days subsequent to January 2, 1961, under section 104(b)(5) of title 23 of the United States Code, as supplemented by section 2 of Public Law 85-899, it will take such action as may be necessary to carry out the policy established in subsection (a) of this section.

There is no doubt that they will be in here for reimbursement next year, and I think the American people should know full well that the start made next year will mean a final spending of an additional $4,200 million.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. I want to commend the gentleman for his statement in opposition to this amendment and what it will mean.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. It is a real political boondoggle; I will tell you that.

In my opinion, the proposed amendment to section 114 is completely unacceptable and has no place in this bill at this time. We should keep uppermost in our minds that every mile we add to our Interstate Highway System means lives saved in the future. That is our primary consideration, not that the Federal Government bail out bondholders who would stand to gain if this policy in section 114 should be carried out by Congress and become law.

In addition, we are faced with the prospect of an even greater Federal giveaway with no returns if this provision should become law. After the Federal Government reimburses these States for their toll roads, what would prevent these same States from continuing to collect tolls? Not a thing. In other words, these States would collect money with both hands. They would charge drivers who use these roads for the privilege of driving on them. They also would charge the Federal Government a multibillion price for the privilege of including these roads in the Interstate System.

A few States would be rolling in road money. The rest of the Nation would be suffering even more than it is now from inadequate roads, high fatality rates in traffic accidents, increased traffic congestion and the clogging of the main arteries of transportation for business and pleasure.

We should defeat this reimbursement amendment. We should build roads, not bank accounts for a select few States.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to voice my opposition to the financing features of the legislation now before us, which I regard as discriminatory in application to our citizens, depressive in terms of economic growth, and deceitful in that it purports to be based on sound fiscal policy. In so doing, however, I want to make it unmistakably clear that my opposition is not to the highway building program, as such, but rather to the financing plan which has been proposed. I favor a realistic program of expeditious highway development, with as little abatement as possible. I also favor financing that program on a fair and equitable pay-as-you-go basis.

There are three major benefits to be derived from an adequate national highway system.

First. Such a system would be conducive to achieving the optimum in national economic potential. Commerce, agriculture, labor, and industry will all contribute to a more productive America if geographical areas in our Nation are linked by a modern highway system.

Second. We will be promoting highway safety, thereby lessening highway accidents and highway casualties.

Third. An adequate system will make a major contribution to national security both with respect to military defense and civil defense.

It is in consideration of these factors that I am such a stanch advocate of highway development.

But, Mr. Speaker, as essential as these objectives may be, it is also essential that they be attained within the financial framework of fair and equitable taxation that does not thwart economic growth and that meets the criterion of fiscal responsibility. I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that the bill before us does not meet the tests of fairness and equity, would thwart economic growth, and is fiscally irresponsible.

The legislation proposes a small, temporary reduction of the highway program. It also provides additional revenues for a temporary period by increasing the tax on gasoline by 1 cent a gallon. In addition, the legislation before us undertakes to pledge, on the expiration of the temporary increase in the gasoline tax, one-half of the excise tax on automobiles and five-eighths of the excise tax on auto parts and accessories. To me, this is the most incongruous part of the whole proposal.

As Members of the Congress know, I have frequently expressed my opposition to the war-imposed excise taxes on the floor of the House. I still oppose them and I protest most vigorously this attempt to cement them into the law in such a way that they cannot be reduced or repealed.

It is my privilege to represent the Sixth Congressional District of Michigan which is the heart of the greatest automobile manufacturing area in the world. The industrial capacity and economic health of this area is essential not only as a matter of local concern but is also of concern in terms of national growth and national defense potential. Almost 1 million of our employed citizens work in automobile, automotive parts and automotive tire factories. An additional 9 million people derive their employment from other phases of highway transportation. In other words, the employment of approximately 1 out of every 7 is connected directly or indirectly with automotive transportation. Automotive factories are major consumers of steel, glass, textiles, rubber, and minerals. It is essential that our automotive industry prosper and grow if our domestic economy generally is to prosper and grow. By earmarking the automotive excises for the highway trust fund we are practically assuring the permanence of these taxes which were originally imposed to retard automobile production for war purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that instead of making these taxes permanent we should be striving diligently for their earliest removal. The repeal of the automotive excise taxes would greatly stimulate automobile sales, automobile production, and automobile employment. This expansion in the automotive industry would likewise create an expansion in the basic supporting industries with a broadening of the income base, resulting in higher income tax yields. I sincerely believe that the legislation before us today will serve to thwart economic growth rather than to promote it.

I recognize that Congress is faced with a difficult and perplexing problem in its search for additional financing to maintain the Federal highway program near originally projected levels. Basically, we are confronted with a situation which was foreseeable at the time Congress waived the pay-as-you-go requirement in order to accelerate the program as an antirecession device. As far as I am concerned, there can be little question that the plight in which we find ourselves today is the direct result of what the Congress did then, for additional costs were imposed but no additional revenue was provided. As a result, we are presently faced with the specter of either providing additional financing or drastically reducing the program.

During the Korean conflict when additional moneys were needed, Congress decided to impose, for a temporary period, an additional 3 percent excise tax on automobiles, and auto parts and accessories. While this was clearly meant to be a temporary tax, it has been extended in each succeeding year and surely our memories are not so vague that we cannot recall just 6 weeks ago we extended the tax until June 30, 1960. The principal justification for this action has been that as long as there was a deficit in the general fund of the Treasury, these taxes—however undesirable—could not be reduced. Consequently, these taxes literally owe their existence to deficit financing.

Contrast, if you will, the action now being proposed with the justification previously given for retention of these taxes. The major part of these excise taxes are, on July 1, 1961, to be taken from the general fund of the Treasury and applied to the needs of the highway trust fund, at least until 1964. For myself, I fail to see the logic of a plan which pledges, 2 years in advance, revenues which have heretofore been considered so essential to the economic well-being of America and to the delicate balance of the Federal budget.

Logic certainly does not support a conclusion that these revenues, heretofore sacrosanct and irremovable, are now expendable by transfer. Past experience does not suggest that we have irretrievably passed the era of unbalanced budgets; nor does present experience confirm it. Yet we are here asked to support the withdrawal of excise tax revenue from the general fund without knowledge of the demands which may be made upon that fund in the period June 30, 1961, to June 30, 1964. The proposed diversion of excise tax revenues after June 30, 1961, is nothing but fiscal legerdemain. Perhaps worse, it constitutes account juggling while blindfolded.

But this is not the only example of faulty logic in this plan. Members will recall that the Congress is scheduled to receive a recommendation from the executive branch in January 1961 with regard to additional financing of the needs of the Federal highway program. I think it is only reasonable to ask what considerations impel us, at this time, to schedule a transfer of automotive excise taxes to take effect but 6 months after the date we are to receive the recommendations of the Department of Commerce with respect to additional methods of financing the Federal highway program. Such a determination at this time by the Congress would most certainly result in a prejudgment which the executive branch would almost be obliged to include in its recommendations. As I have said, in my judgment, instead of pledging the majority of these excise tax revenues to the highway trust program, we should be reducing them.

The Ways and Means Committee has scheduled an exhaustive study of our income tax laws this fall and I have urged the chairman on several occasions to broaden the scope of this study to include consideration of the excise tax laws. If we are to have an overall revision of our tax policy, certainly a revision of our discriminatory, inequitable excises must be included. I submit that consideration should be given to a complete overhauling of the present crazy quilt excise taxes and further suggest that careful study be given to the possible merits of a general manufacturers' excise tax which would produce revenue equivalent to present excise revenues.

I am told the legislation before us increases the revenues available to the highway trust fund by approximately $3½ billion with $2½ billion of that amount coming from the linkage of the automotive excises to the trust fund. This certainly does not meet the request of the President for a self-supporting pay-as-you-go method of financing. In his recent message to Congress, the President expressed opposition to proposals that would, in the absence of foreseeable budget surpluses, divert receipts from the general fund of the Treasury that are collective by various excises on automobiles. He said that the transfer of the automobile excise taxes to the highway trust fund would only shift the problem from the trust fund to the general fund which is already in precarious balance. It must, therefore, be concluded that this legislative proposal does not meet the test of fiscal responsibility as suggested by President Eisenhower.

Mr. Speaker, if it were possible to do so under the rules of the House, I would offer an amendment to strike section 202 of the pending bill in order to preclude the transfer of these excise taxes to the highway trust fund beginning July 1, 1961. Since under the House rules I cannot propose such an amendment, I have chosen the only method available to me by which I could protest this act. Perhaps in so doing, I can focus the attention of Members of the other body on this unreasonable and illogical proposal so that they can in turn eliminate or lessen this obvious inequity to the automotive consumers of this Nation.

Because this matter does come before us under a closed rule, I find that I have but 1 of 2 choices—to vote for or against the bill. I deeply regret the limitations of this choice and it is with great reluctance that I am forced to accept these financial features which I find so objectionable in order that the highway program, which I regard as so essential to our national economy, will not be seriously interrupted or impaired.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ABBITT].

Mr. ABBITT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this rule and to H.R. 8678 the bill to increase the gasoline and other taxes, I am unalterably opposed to any increase in the Federal tax on gasoline. I am in full agreement with an advocate the proposal that the highway program be handled on a reduced scale and extended over a longer period of time. The General Assembly of Virginia, recognizing the problems involved in this whole matter, adopted a resolution earlier this year, calling upon the Government to extend the program from the present 13 years to 20 years. It seems to me that this is the logical way to cope with the situation.

I recognize that the highway program was put at a considerable disadvantage by the so-called speedup program which was directed last year as a means of combating the recession and for this reason, I did not feel it was a good idea at the time. The basic concept of the program enacted in 1956, as embodied in the Byrd pay-as-you-go amendment, was that the highway trust fund should take care of this—apart from the general fund and apart from the idea that taxes should be increased to take care of the deficits.

I opposed the enactment of the Federal Highway Act when it was before the Congress because I felt at the time, and still feel, that it ultimately would cost the American people far more than its supporters led us to believe. It is my feeling that roadbuilding—like a lot of other things—can best be handled by the States. I am opposed to raising the Federal tax as provided in this bill.

I am convinced that the interstate highway program has been operated in a grossly negligent and inefficient manner. The funds have been dissipated and I am not willing to add to the tax burden to pay for this kind of inefficiency—and thereby underwrite it. The Comptroller General has critically assessed the operation of the program and certainly he is in a position to know—since he is the principal auditor of the Government and an agent of the Congress. His report on this subject, released recently, called attention to the fact that the program has been hurt by "a lack of top professional leadership in financial management." He said further that the program's accounts have "numerous inaccuracies and deficiencies."

He has listed case after case of mishandling of the application of funds for the States so that the whole business has been inefficient. In the case of Virginia, I am informed that the State was able to accept far less of the Federal money to which it was entitled because of a lack of matching funds. I am further informed that the same situation exists in other States and that a stretching out of the program is the approach we should take. Obviously, there are some areas where the opposite is true—where Federal funds are being used as fast as they are made available—but I do not believe that the people of the whole Nation should be forced to accept a gas tax increase to pay for it.

A good deal has been said and written about this matter but I am convinced that the vast majority of our people do not realize the magnitude of this gigantic undertaking. This is a 40,000-mile undertaking and in the beginning it was to take 13 years to complete and would require 16 years to finance. The Federal Government is paying 90 percent of the total cost estimated originally at $25 billion. The States pay only 10 percent of the total. Already the program has been expanded beyond the original concept and there is no telling where it will go. As of now it is estimated that the Federal share will be at least $36 billion.

Of course, the highway system is fine—and certainly no one would argue that the intent of the vast interstate system is good, but we must preserve fiscal solvency and fiscal common sense. We need to know where we are going and act with caution along the way.

I hope the House votes down this measure. Then we can take care of the problem by revamping the program.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MACDONALD].

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, there has been a growing concern in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts over the failure of the Congress to provide legislation to assure the continuance of the interstate highway program. As every Member of this body knows, when Congress authorized the highway construction program in 1956, and authorized annual apportionments to carry it on until its conclusion, it was thought that sufficient funds would be provided by Congress to keep the program on schedule, as the act provided.

When the Federal interstate highway program was set up by Congress we set up a separate highway fund for it. The Congress raised various taxes on motorists and directed that this money go into the highway fund. Now they tell us that this special highway fund is running short of money and that the interstate highway program will have to be curtailed next year unless something is done. This all comes about because the Federal Government found gasoline taxes easy to impose and collect and consequently has been diverting the proceeds to nonhighway uses. This state of affairs imposes a terrific burden on our highway department in Massachusetts, on the construction industry, allied businesses, the overall State economy and on motorists. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts has acted in good faith in the spirit of the 1956 act. It has presented and has set in gear a progressive program to carry out the intent of Congress as confirmed in 1957–58. I feel that unless the Congress takes definite action to continue the Federal interstate highway program, it will retard the much needed expansion of highways and expressways in the New England States that are sorely needed for the ever increasing traffic within these States.

We also know that jobs and prosperity in the highway construction industry, as well as many other industries, is at stake in the solution of this problem. Perhaps more important from the point of view of the people involved is the contribution to traffic safety which continued highway construction will make.

It seems to me that Congress has a moral responsibility to continue the interstate highway program at a level consistent with its original declaration. In order to continue this needed highway program we are being asked today to increase the Federal tax on gasoline by 1 cent per gallon for a 22-month period. This legislation also proposes to take from the general fund for a 3-year period one-half of the 10-percent manufacturers' excise tax on automobiles and five-eighths of the 8-percent excise tax on auto parts and accessories.

It might not be so bad to up the Federal gasoline tax for 1 year or so if we could feel certain that the extra penny would come off at that time. But we have seen too many taxes imposed for limited periods which never did come off. Congress just keeps extending them.

There are other ways to obtain the necessary money to finance our interstate highway program, without increasing taxes on a necessity like gasoline, which people in very modest circumstances must have these days to make a living. For example, it has been proposed that we return all the motor vehicle taxes to the special highway fund, then to balance the budget cut 1 percent from all Federal spending, except fixed charges, such as interest, veterans pensions, et cetera. This would be more than enough to fill the coffers of the highway fund and balance the budget.

While this proposal has merit I personally feel that if the Congress would reduce the 27½-percent oil depletion allowance for foreign oil imports, as I have urged many times, it would save the American taxpayers millions of dollars and thus provide the necessary $2.4 billion to finance our interstate highways program.

To illustrate, a case in point of the abuses the foreign oil depletion allowance encourages is the fabulously wealthy Arabian-American Oil Co.—Aramco. Stock in Aramco is held jointly by four oil giants—the Standard Oil Co. of California, the Texas Co., the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, and Socony Mobil Oil Co.

In 1955 Aramco had total earnings of $724 million. The income of Aramco pretax and with $260 million in costs and expenses deducted was $464 million. Did the United States get 1 cent of this in tax return? No. A percentage depletion allowance of $121,698,000 was granted. This still left the taxable income of Aramco at $348,257,000. At the standard 52 percent corporate rate, this would have returned $178,488,000 to the U.S. Treasury. However, due to the American tax laws that allow a 100 percent tax credit for taxes imposed by foreign governments on U.S. companies operating in their countries, the Saudi Arabian taxes amounting to $192 million were charged against what was owed the U.S. Government. In the final tabulation the U.S. Government, in a sense, owed $14 million to the company. At any rate, a tax deficit of $14 million was shown by the company.

Again, the same thing happened in 1956. Here Aramco had total earnings at $748 million. When costs of $268 million were deducted it left an income—before taxes and depletion allowance—of $480 million. The depletion allowance amounted to $127 million. This left at the 52 percent corporate tax rate a taxable base of $352 million. This would have resulted in a return to the Treasury of $183 million. However, the Saudi Arabian taxes amounted to $199 million, which left a tax deficit of $16 million in the favor of the company.

Thus, on paper, over a 2-year period, the U.S. Government ended up owing Aramco $30 million in tax credits.

Of far more vital importance, over this same 2-year period, the U.S. Treasury, due to the 27½-percent foreign oil depletion, lost a grand total of $99,266,000 in revenue.

It is well to remember that Aramco is but one company operating in the foreign oilfield. Considering all the companies profiting from this tax loophole the gain in tax revenues for the U.S. Treasury would run into hundreds of millions of dollars yearly.

Mr. Speaker, for the above reasons I must oppose the rule because it does not give the Members of this House an opportunity to vote on an amendment reducing the oil depletion allowance.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REUSS].

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the closed rule on H.R. 8678, and to urge that the resolution be voted down so that the Members may vote to improve H.R. 8678, the highway bill.

Part of the money to pay for the Interstate Highway System set up by H.R. 8678 is to be raised by a 1-cent increase in the Federal gasoline tax. While this may pile the costs on the business and pleasure drivers on our highways somewhat heavily, at least it is fiscally responsible, in that it does not raid the general Treasury revenues.

But the method used to raise the additional $2.4 billion needed for the highway fund over the amounts raised by the 1-cent gasoline tax increase is not fiscally responsible. It diverts money from general Treasury revenues to the highway fund, counter to the self-financing philosophy of the highway fund. If we pass this provision, we are voting for unbalanced budgets and deficits in the years ahead, when what we need are balanced budgets and surpluses.

If the closed rule is voted down, I intend to offer an amendment, set forth in yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at page 17798, which would raise the required $2.4 billion in a fiscally responsible manner, without raiding general Treasury revenues. It would do so by reducing the oil depletion allowance from 27½ percent to 15 percent for those whose income from oil and gas properties exceeds $5 million a year; to 21 percent for those whose income is between $1 million and $5 million a year; it would make no reduction for those whose income is under $1 million.

If you are a conservative, I hope you will vote down this closed-rule resolution because it prevents our voting for a fiscally responsible highway bill. We need highways, but we need to fund our highway program on a sound basis.

If you are a liberal, I hope you will vote down this closed-rule resolution in order that the Members may vote on an amendment to reduce the oil-depletion allowance. It is not fair to load all the costs of the highway program on the businessman calling on his customers, the worker on his way to work, the Sunday driver out for a weekend spin.

The oil industry, by a reasonable reduction in the depletion allowance, should also help to pay for our interstate highways. We hear much about the benefits of participating in the democratic right to pay taxes. The best way to give the oil companies a feeling of participation, a sense of togetherness, is by reducing the oil-depletion allowance.

I hope the closed rule will be voted down.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REUSS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. I am one of those who introduced a bill to decrease the oil-depletion allowance from 27½ to 15 percent. I heartily subscribe to the gentleman's argument against this closed rule, which prohibits all amendments, and I will join him in voting against its adoption.

Mr. REUSS. I thank the gentleman. I am sure the Committee on Rules can report out a rule quickly.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARR].

Mr. BARR. Mr. Speaker, the approach which the committee seems to be taking in this Federal Highway Act is a matter of deep concern to me. By raising the gas tax 1 cent, even for a period of 22 months, this Congress is in effect violating the responsibility it holds under our Federal Union to give the States certain rights to solve their problems. In my opinion this increase in the gas tax is a clear violation of the financial rights of the States.

When I came to this Congress I had very little to offer the United States except a certain background in business and finance. I want to make a flat statement that it is my considered opinion that the United States of America is over the hump in the solution of many of its financial difficulties. I also want to make a flat assertion that the financial difficulties of the States and local governments are just beginning. We can hear a lot on this floor about wasteful spending, budget busting, and deficit financing, but let us just stop and take a look at the record. At the conclusion of World War II the United States of America had a total debt of approximately $275 billion. Today that debt stands at $285 billion, or an increase of about 3 percent. We have maintained this record in spite of the fact that we fought a Korean war, rehabilitated millions of veterans, and spent about $80 billion rebuilding a destroyed Western World.

On the other hand, let us take a look at what happened to the States and local communities. Their debts at the end of World War II stood at about $13 billion. Today their debt stands at $52 billion, or an increase of approximately 400 percent and, ironically, their troubles are just starting.

Barring unforeseen catastrophes, I believe that it is in the power of our Federal Government to live within its existing tax structure, or even at a lower tax rate, and still meet our needs. We are gradually shifting a portion of our mutual security program to our allies who are now in a position to take their share of the responsibility. Our defense program should give some signs of leveling off at about the $40 billion figure that we worked on this year. Our expenditures for interest, veterans' benefits, and agriculture are probably about as high as they will go in the next decade. These items comprise the great bulk of our Federal budget. With a reasonably vigorous and growing economy, living within our means should not be too difficult.

But just take a look at the picture with State and local governments. This Nation is faced with a population explosion in the next decade. It is very probable that by 1970 we will have 50 million more people in this Nation. Cost of providing schools, police protection, fire protection, local roads, and local government are unquestionably due for a tremendous increase. I would say flatly that the States and local governments will be fortunate if they can hold their debt increase to the 400 percent figure that they established in the past 13 years.

In spite of the fact that it should be obvious to all reasonable men that relatively the financial difficulties of the United States are easing off and the financial troubles of the States are only getting started, still in this bill we are moving into an area on which the States and local governments depend heavily for their tax revenues. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this is an unconscionable and unwarranted invasion of States rights.

I am well aware that this administration insists that we must give our financial aid to many of the nations of the world that are attempting to cope with severe problems. It must be obvious to the Members of this Congress, however, that our States and cities are faced with financial problems that to me seem almost insurmountable. It is difficult for me to understand how we can go back to our constituents and tell them that we can build roads and bridges all over the world out of the existing tax structure in this country, but that if we want to build a road program that will solve our own problems, then we must get the money by invading the financial rights of State and local governments.

There is a point of diminishing returns in any tax load, and 36 Governors of this Nation are on record as stating that that point has been reached in the gas tax. Surely we will not be so irresponsible as to raise this gas tax to aggravate the financial problems of our State and local governments.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARR. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COLLIER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the financial condition and the indebtedness of the Federal Government is much better, comparatively, than that of the municipalities and the States?

Mr. BARR. I said, sir, that the financial problems of the United States over the next decade do not look as difficult as those of local governments. I also stated that in the last 13 years our debt has risen 3 percent; that of State and local governments has risen 400 percent.

Mr. COLLIER. Well, in that connection, if the gentleman will yield further, I know of no municipality or no State that is as far behind in paying its current obligations; and if we did not spend another dollar in this country starting right now and applied every cent of our tax revenue against the national debt, it would take us 5 years to pay off the national debt. If someone can show me any city or State that is in this sad financial condition, I would like to know which one it is.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARR. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FALLON. Is the gentleman aware that the chairman of the highway and safety committee of the Governors conference, Governor Ribicoff of Connecticut, has stated that the Governors have withdrawn their opposition against this 1-cent tax for this emergency period?

Mr. BARR. I was aware of that.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOOLEY].

Mr. DOOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 8678 and I address myself to the committee amendment.

New York State acted in good faith on the basis of assurances that it would be reimbursed for those highways which it constructed with its own money and on its own initiative—between August 1947 and June 1957—a program by the way which has cost the State approximately a billion dollars.

To deny approval of this amendment is, in effect, repudiating the good intentions and the avowals, if you will, of the Government of the United States.

This highway program—the national program of which I speak—is the greatest undertaking ever embarked upon by any Nation at any time in history. The efforts to drain the Pontine Marshes or to construct the pyramids were as child's play compared to the 41,000 miles of highways linking every major city in the United States.

In material, in equipment—in cost—it supersedes anything ever attempted. And because some States were courageous enough to take the initiative once the network was envisioned and tentatively approved 12 years ago, in 1947 to be exact, we should not now refuse to condone their actions by saying that the cost is too great or by inferring that the States should have dragged their heels until Federal funds were forthcoming.

This amendment merely seeks to set things right—to have the Government avow publicly that it owes a debt to the States on which it is not going to default.

Neither the erosive processes of time nor the penny-pinching tactics of the opposition can erase the fact that there were solemn assurances, carefully weighed and sincerely rendered that the Government of the United States would reimburse the States in proportionate amounts for their road construction programs.

I say in all justice we should accept this amendment and affirm the statement of policy regarding reimbursement.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOOLEY. I yield.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOOLEY] for his fine statement. I do not blame him a bit for making a strong appeal for the State of New York, in view of the fact that it is one of the eight States that would really benefit from this so-called reimbursement to the tune of nearly $800 million. The thing that I object to most strongly is not merely the declaration of policy, but the fact that as members of the Committee on Public Works, we know what is really behind it, and that the push will be on next year when we will not be able to afford it.

I should like to ask the gentleman this question: Would he have any objection—I know we cannot do it under the kind of rule that we have before us today—but would the gentleman have any objection to waiting until such time as the trust fund can afford to pay, or after completion of the interstate highway program?

Mr. DOOLEY. Personally I have no such objection, but I think there should be a reaffirmation of the Government's policy of paying the money that is due. Time is not of the essence here; it may not be next year, as the gentleman suggests, but a little longer. But the policy should be reaffirmed now, the policy that it should be paid.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Will the gentleman join me in trying to do what may be done in getting that amendment?

Mr. DOOLEY. I should be glad to.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OSTERTAG].

Mr. OSTERTAG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSTERTAG. Mr. Speaker, the Federal interstate highway program will provide a highly important network of 41,000 miles of safe and efficient superhighways to connect all the major areas of our country. This Interstate Highway System is vital to the military and civil defense of our Nation and to the proper and full development of our economy. It is needed to provide adequately for the ever-increasing automotive traffic as our country moves rapidly toward a population of 200 million people.

Therefore, I firmly believe that Congress must act now to remove the financial roadblocks which are threatening to bring construction of this important highway system to a virtual halt. This would cause acute hardship in many areas, including my own area of western New York. This situation has arisen for many reasons. But, if we do not act now the Federal Highway Administrator will not be able to make the necessary apportionment of funds to the States and new construction contracts will not be let for many months.

Today, we have been presented with the committee proposal for meeting this financial problem by providing the necessary funds or revenues which will enable the construction of the Interstate Highway System to remain on schedule. I have decided, though reluctantly, to go along with the proposal we have been offered today, because we seem to have no alternative if we wish to keep the highway program on schedule.

I cannot look with favor, however, on the proposal to increase gasoline taxes by 1 cent a gallon. The motoring public is already paying many special taxes into the highway trust fund to finance this interstate program.

Nor do I look any more kindly upon the second part of this financial plan which would divert a share of automotive excise taxes from the general Treasury into the highway trust fund. If anything, this second part is even more objectionable to me. For in reality it solves nothing. It merely makes up a deficit in the highway trust fund by creating a deficit in the general Treasury. It is robbing Peter to pay Paul.

Congress has consistently rejected this type of deficit financing during the existence of this program. It is my earnest hope that we will be able to reconsider this provision before it comes into effect in July 1961, as now scheduled.

Many months ago I introduced legislation in the Congress to provide the necessary funds through the issuance of highway revenue bonds. Under the terms of my bill, the bonds could be issued annually as needed to make up whatever funds were lacking in the trust fund. The bonds could be retired by extending the existing highway taxes for a few years beyond the present cutoff date or life of the program. This would require no new taxes on top of the existing taxes and it would not require another demand on general Treasury receipts and another pressure on the general budget. It would also make possible reimbursement to those States which built portions of the Federal Interstate System before Federal funds became available. The committee accepted this plan in part and included it in one of its earlier proposals. I regret that it was not retained in the measure which is being presented to us today; however, I do applaud and support the statement of policy in the measure before us to recognize the fairness and equity of reimbursing the States in money or in mileage for highways heretofore built or currently under construction which constitute a part of the 41,000-mile Interstate System.

Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, I favor this rule and the legislation before us.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOLLAND].

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, I received yesterday a very interesting telegram pertaining to the appropriations contained in the public works program. I shall read that telegram:

PITTSBURGH, PA., September 1, 1959.

ELMER J. HOLLAND,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D.C.:

Refer public works appropriation bill now before Congress. Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh sustains President Eisenhower's position. However, repeat however, the chamber is on record with Congress and the Appropriations Committees urging early construction of Kinzua Dam and other projects in this area. Accordingly chamber continues to maintain its position that these projects be retained and urges that every measure be taken to protect the interest and lives of the public by appropriating funds necessary to carry out the work budgeted for the Kinzua Dam and related projects.

L. ROBERT M. WACHOB,
President, Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, in 1956 the Congress enacted a comprehensive Federal highway program which, according to the then estimates, would involve the expenditure over a period of years of approximately $31 billion. Three years have now passed and this mammoth highway program is not very far out of the blueprint stage.

The pending legislation calls for the raising of a general gasoline tax in the amount of an additional 1 cent per gallon for the next 22 months in order to continue this highway program. Evidence was presented in the Rules Committee at a hearing on this bill yesterday that approximately $1,900 million of the so-called trust fund which was set aside for the Federal highway program had been diverted or applied for other commitments made by the Federal Government on State and highway construction previous to the inauguration of the present Federal highway program. Of course if this money were retained as a trust fund for the present program, we would not be in the financial difficulty we are in today and this legislation would not be necessary. When the bill was passed by the Congress 3 years ago, assurances were made that a further increase in gasoline tax for highway construction would not be made under this program. This bill is merely another effort to saddle on the backs of millions in the small income group to pay for a large Federal construction program which could be more suitably financed by some other method than through what practically amounts to a gasoline sales tax. This administration seems to believe that the most practical way of relieving financial embarrassment to itself is to inflict a small tax upon the millions who are least able to bear the burden. I mentioned to the Congress on a number of occasions the billions of dollars that are lost annually to the Federal Treasury by reason of special concessions to certain high bracket taxpayers both corporate and individual. Congressman REUSS, of Wisconsin, appeared before the Rules Committee yesterday and presented an amendment wherein a 50 percent reduction of the present 27½-percent oil depletion tax allowance if enacted could easily provide sufficient money to carry on this highway program without the necessity of the 1 cent gasoline tax. Under a closed-rule provision his amendment could not be considered by the House.

Some of the newspapers carried an ad some time ago where approximately 22 high bracket steel executives were receiving special tax considerations on stock options which they were allowed to purchase at special prices and that some of their individual annual incomes would total approximately three hundred thousand to one-half million dollars. Of course Members of Congress are familiar with the generous tax writeoffs of the construction and contract negotiations with corporations who are doing business with the Government involving billions over the years. Chairman MILLS stated that this fall a subcommittee was convening to make a study of our tax structure and no doubt a number of these tax bonanzas and special deductions considerations to high-bracket taxpayers will eventually be reduced or repealed. Until legislation is enacted by the Congress which would make our tax laws more equitable to all segments of our economy, I cannot see my way clear in good conscience to vote for legislation that will saddle an additional tax burden on the millions who purchase gas to drive cars, trucks, and farm machinery throughout our Nation when so many billions of dollars are lost to the Treasury by tax loopholes.

Seven years ago when the Eisenhower administration came into power Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey brought about an increase in interest rates that over the last 7 years has siphoned an additional 6 to 7 billion dollars from the American taxpayers. This and other fiscal policies of the White House braintrusters, including the unbridled rise in the cost of living, has finally exhausted the small bracket taxpayer.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent on the next 3 days when the House may be in session, upon the conclusion of other special orders, I may be permitted to speak on each occasion for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALTER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, although I realize there may be some who are opposed to the bill itself, I know of no one opposed to the rule, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BASS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-three Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, on this I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-one Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, on this I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8678) to amend the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958 to make certain adjustments in the Federal-aid highway program, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 8678, with Mr. JENNINGS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON] will be recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. AUCHINCLOSS] will be recognized for 1 hour.

The gentleman from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House is H.R. 8678, to amend the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958 to make certain adjustments in the Federal-aid highway program, with respect to the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways.

Before describing the adjustments proposed in the bill, I will comment briefly on the objectives of the Highway Act of 1956 and the progress we are making in attaining those objectives.

In 1956 the Congress declared it to be in the national interest to accelerate the construction of the Federal-aid highway systems, including the Interstate System, since many of these highways were, and still are, inadequate to meet the needs of local and interstate commerce and the national defense. Congress further declared it to be essential to the national interest to provide for the early completion of the Interstate System, and declared its intent that this 41,000-mile system of express highways designed to accommodate 1975 traffic be completed as nearly as practicable over a 13-year period.

We are building, then, both for today's needs and tomorrow's needs. This vast program is well underway. The roads are being built, not on a piecemeal, hit-or-miss basis, but in accordance with careful, balanced planning. Within the next few years, we will see these short stretches grow into a connected system of express highways which, with an improved system om feeder routes, will make possible a new era of highway transportation in the United States.

The Interstate System is an investment, and an unusually sound one. A number of the potential dividends are intangible; others can be measured in terms of dollars and cents. We are talking about a system with a useful life of many generations, and, on that basis, it would not be difficult to enumerate tangible benefits amounting to three or more times the cost. This is an extremely favorable cost-benefit ratio for any public works undertaking.

The Interstate System is urgently needed for the reduction of highway accident deaths. A delay of 1 year in the construction schedule will result in the needless loss of 5,700 lives, according to the National Safety Council.

The Interstate System also plays a vital part in our planning for national defense. In this connection, I wish to call the attention of the House to a brief excerpt from a letter recently received by me from Maj. Gen. F. S. Besson, Jr., Chief of Transportation, Department of the Army. General Besson, in presenting the current views of the Department of Defense on the importance of the interstate program, pointed out that two of the four general defense concepts—dispersion and mobility—can be obtained only to the degree that our transportation facilities are capable of supporting them, and that it is imperative that we use the flexibility of highways to fully exploit the concepts of dispersion and mobility. I quote now from General Besson's letter:

> Defensive and retaliatory weapons must have the greatest mobility that can be developed if they are to retain their effectiveness. The Interstate System, with its uniform characteristics, will provide arterial routes for the development of this mobility. Because of the military pressures generated by the rapid evolution in weapons systems, the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways, a relatively small system of controlled-access arterial highways, interstate in character, is of greater importance to our national defense now than ever before.

These vast benefits—defense benefits, lifesaving benefits, economic benefits—are of such great magnitude that we cannot afford to postpone them.

Every citizen of the United States benefits from the construction of these highways. We recognize, of course, that some citizens will derive greater benefits than others.

Section 210 of the Highway Act of 1956 directed the Secretary of Commerce to make a study of the benefits derived from Federal-aid highways by each class of persons using the highways or otherwise deriving benefits from the highways, and the proportionate share of highway costs attributable to each class of persons using the highways, with the object of making available to the Congress information on the basis of which it may determine what taxes should be imposed, and in what amounts, for the equitable support of the highway program. Congress will not have the benefit of the report on this study until 1961.

Meanwhile, temporary measures are necessary to prevent a costly and wasteful interruption in the highway program.

H.R. 8678 is temporary, emergency legislation. It meets the immediate problem. It leaves the way clear for a revision of highway financing legislation in 1961, when the appropriate studies will become available. The bill provides for reasonable progress during the interim period.

Title I of the bill is a result of hearings and deliberations by the Committee on Public Works. Section 102 takes into account the immediate and urgent financing problem by amending the Highway Act of 1956, as amended, to reduce the interstate authorization for the fiscal year 1961 from $2,500 million to $2 billion. Section 103 proposes a further amendment to section 8 of the Highway Act of 1958 to provide that the apportionment of interstate funds to the States for fiscal 1962 be made on the same basis as the apportionments for fiscal 1960 and 1961.

An amendment approved by the Committee on Public Works would amend section 114 of the Highway Act of 1956 to declare the intent and policy of Congress to equitably reimburse in money or in mileage each State for every portion of a toll or free highway, bridge or tunnel within such State which is on the Interstate System, the construction of which has been completed subsequent to August 2, 1947, or which is either in actual use or under construction by contract, for completion, awarded not later than June 30, 1957.

The revenue provisions of the bill are included in title II.

These provisions were drafted by the Committee on Ways and Means, after full hearings and lengthy deliberations. In its discussions, the committee kept in close contact with the members of the Committee on Public Works. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Arkansas, is deserving of the highest praise for his leadership, his open-minded approach to the problem, and his diligence in seeking a generally acceptable solution.

HAS THE ABC PROGRAM BEEN DELAYED BY THE INTERSTATE PROGRAM?

The ABC program has been advanced in line with the increased authorizations and on July 1, 1959, 3 years after the enlarged program was initiated, the ABC program was ahead of the schedule estimated in 1956 as being the rate that might be expected for it. This has been true even with the special additional $600 million program authorized in the 1958 act. The interstate program has not delayed it.

The attached table shows by States the progress in getting the ABC work underway, giving the status on July 1 of each year, 1956, 1957, 1958, and 1959. Another table shows total work underway and completed under the ABC program since July 1, 1956. Only four States show any reduction in volume of ABC work underway in 1959 compared to 1956. Nationwide the comparative figures are:

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHERER].

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Chairman, if there ever was a bill before this House which could be called a compromise measure, the Fallon bill, H.R. 8678, is such.

While it is now apparently acceptable to most of us, both in the legislative and executive branches, who have been actively working on solution of the various facets of the highway problem, it certainly is not wholly satisfactory to anyone. Assuredly I am not completely pleased even though, as the ranking Republican on the Roads Subcommittee, I joined with the gentleman from Maryland, its chairman, and introduced an identical bill based on the recommendation of the Committee on Ways and Means. The Committee on Public Works has made some minor changes in the bill before us.

Much credit for this acceptable compromise is due to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the Speaker, and the patient and long-suffering chairman of the Subcommittee on Roads, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON].

It is my feeling that many of us have been willing to retreat from some rather firmly established positions and join in this compromise because we realize that the overriding issue, that of continuing the highway program, is so vital. In 1956 when we initiated this mammoth highway program, we did so because of many compelling reasons which I am going to review very briefly. Today these same reasons exist, but there have been many more added to them by the mere fact that we have started in motion the greatest public works program in the history of the United States. I will also enumerate some of these for the House.

NEED FOR HIGHWAYS

Prior to the passage of the 1956 Highway Act, the Committee on Public Works held long and exhaustive hearings concerning the urgent need for highway construction in the Nation.

The evidence was conclusive that our highways were inadequate and outmoded; that traffic, particularly in and near the population centers, was slowing to a snail's pace; that accidents and deaths on our highways were increasing at an alarming rate, due in large part to these inadequate and outmoded highways; that the losses from accidents and excessive operating costs of motor vehicles were reaching astronomical figures.

Let us review just a few statistics involving the 41,000-mile Interstate System. Although it comprises only about 1¼ percent of the total highway mileage of America, when and if the Interstate System is completed in 1975, as now contemplated, it will carry 20 percent of the traffic.

The evidence showed that the construction of the Interstate System would save the interstate motorists $550 million each year in operating expenses, $725 million per year in accident costs, $825 million per year in commercial vehicle or truck time, or a total of direct monetary benefits of $2.1 billion per year.

The savings reach astronomical figures when we realize there would be somewhat similar gains on the remaining 98 percent of America's improved and rebuilt highways.

We are told that, if deaths resulting from accident on our highways continue at the present rate, approximately 700,000 people will be killed between now and 1975. The experts say that, if by some miracle we could today have completed the modern highways that are provided for by the 1956 Highway Act, this death rate would be cut by 35 percent; 245,000 lives would be saved.

The experts are in all probability right because over last Memorial Day weekend there was not a single fatality on the heavily traveled toll roads. It should be remembered that the new Interstate System will be built to these toll road standards.

RESULTS OF FAILURE TO ACT

In considering this legislation we must remember that any substantial slowdown in the construction schedule provided for in the 1956 Highway Act will materially reduce these savings, both in lives and in money, which I have just mentioned. Any additional cost or tax which we must now impose will be less than these losses.

Let me now quickly enumerate just some of the additional losses and hardships that will result if Congress does not act as proposed in the Fallon bill.

First. None of the $2.5 billion apportionments provided by the 1956 and 1958 acts for fiscal year 1961 can be made.

Second. Only token apportionments of the $2.2 billion provided by the 1956 act can be made for the fiscal year 1962.

Third. Twenty-five State highway departments have already stopped awarding interstate and ABC highway contracts because of Congress present delay in acting in this crisis.

Fourth. By next July, 36 State highway departments will have stopped awarding new interstate contracts.

Fifth. The loss to contractors and suppliers who have greatly expanded their organizations at the request of the Congress in order to do the job would be tremendous.

Sixth. According to the American Association of State Highway Officials, failure to go forward at the proposed construction levels would cause a loss of approximately 500 million man-hours of on-site and off-site labor in the next 4 years, resulting in an earnings loss in excess of $1 billion.

Seventh. It will mean a 9-month stoppage of all contracting for new highway construction and right-of-way acquisition.

Eighth. It will mean the delay of payment of many vouchers submitted by States for reimbursement of money already expended by them for outstanding contracts amounting to approximately $493 million this year.

Ninth. The total interstate highway construction authorized for fiscal years 1960 through 1963 will be cut nearly in two.

WHY THE CRISIS?

One of the big questions is: How did we get into this box or financial crisis? Did we not in 1956 estimate the cost of doing the job and then put aside in the trust fund sufficient user taxes so that we could complete the program in about 13 years on a pay-as-you-go basis?

Yes; this is what we thought we did, but it did not work out that way.

It was estimated by the experts in 1954 that the Federal share of building the Interstate System would be:

	Federal	State	Total
Interstate System	$25.1	$2.8	$27.9
Primary and secondary	13.4	13.4	26.8
Total	38.5	16.2	54.7

It is now estimated that the costs will be:

	Federal	State	Total
Interstate System	$36.2	$4.0	$40.2
Primary and secondary	15.7	15.7	31.4
Total	51.9	19.7	71.6

In other words, we are going to have to raise $13.4 billion more in order to complete the Interstate System.

Now some people, both in and out of the Congress, are going to look for a scapegoat. Obviously there has been some mistakes. There could not help but be a certain number in a program of the magnitude of this.

But before beginning to blame anyone, before setting up ourselves as sidewalk engineers, let us take a look at about a dozen factors which got us into the crisis in which we find ourselves today.

First. When the Ways and Means Committee in 1956 set up the financing, it was contemplated that in some of the early years of the program expenditures would exceed trust fund receipts and that during the latter part there would be years in which the receipts exceeded the disbursements.

Therefore, in the early years there might be borrowings from the contemplated surplus near the end of the program. With the tremendously increased cost, of course, there will be no such surplus.

Even if there were a surplus as contemplated, the so-called Byrd amendment was tacked onto the 1956 bill when it reached the Senate. The Byrd amendment provided that apportionments to the States could be made only to the extent that the trust fund could support the expenditures. So at the very outset we upset the financing plan by making it impossible in these early years to make the apportionments and expenditures called for in the 1956 act because, as I have pointed out, the receipts provided for in these early years were less than the proposed expenditures.

Second. The trust fund absorbed, as was not contemplated, approximately $1.5 billion of highway obligations due and owing on the effective date of the 1956 act.

Third. In 1958 Congress got the recession jitters, particularly the Senate, and provided in the 1958 act for an acceleration of the road program by $1.6 billion. This was done without providing the revenues for the trust fund to meet this increased cost.

Fourth. The Senate also added 1,000 miles to the 40,000-mile Interstate System. These are often called "political miles." Again, no revenues were provided for the trust fund to pay for this additional mileage.

Fifth. Highway standards and requirements were increased to take care of some local needs. Standards had to be increased also because, like our population, there was an unexpected and unforeseen increase in motor vehicles. Even since 1956 motor vehicle use on our highways has increased at a far greater rate than was predicted by the experts just three years ago. Today there are 70 million motor vehicles on our highways. By 1969 there will be over 100 million. Just think of it—a 40 percent increase.

Sixth. The original estimates of cost on which the 1956 Act was based were made rather hurriedly by the State highway departments in 1954. There were some miscalculations. Since 1954 construction costs and right-of-way acquisitions have increased by about 12 percent. However, in the last year they have been stabilized, and we find that some bids are lower than engineering estimates by as much as 5 percent.

We can now understand why on July 1 of this year almost $500 million now due the States for obligations already incurred could not be paid—why the apportionment of the $2.5 billion provided for fiscal year 1961 could not be made, and why next July only a token apportionment of the $2.2 billion for fiscal year 1962 can be made.

I think I have demonstrated why highway expenditures must continue at or about the level contemplated in the 1956 Highway Act. One can readily see that, even if we continue the expenditures at this level, there is going to be a substantial cutback in the actual construction program. Fewer miles will be built in the next several years because of the increased costs to which I have just referred.

DEFICIT SPENDING OR TAXES?

Now the next big questions—and the ones over which there has been the most controversy—are:

How do we replenish the trust fund?

Where and how do we get the money?

While there are numerous ways and means or schemes and plans, there really are only two basic methods:

First. We either borrow the money, or Second. We raise the necessary taxes to keep the program on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Borrowing the money means further deficit financing.

It means increasing the national debt.

It means unbalancing the budget.

It means adding fuel to the inflationary spiral which in turn increases the cost of the roads.

If revenue bonds are sold, it means that they must compete with the sale of general obligation bonds which are becoming more and more difficult to sell each day.

The transferring of automobile excise taxes which now go into the general fund has strong political appeal, but it too is just another form of deficit financing.

The only alternative to the evils of deficit financing as I have outlined them is raising the necessary revenues by some form of taxation. No one, of course, likes to put his feet to the political fire and raise taxes. But how can one with any sense of fiscal responsibility advocate that we go into more debt at this time to build these highways?

If all of the people of the United States had an opportunity, as I did, to listen to Maurice Stans, Director of the Bureau of the Budget, review the precarious financial condition of this country, if they had the opportunity of reading his recent article in the Reader's Digest entitled "Must We Delude Ourselves Into Disaster?" the verdict against any more borrowing would be almost unanimous.

The President, in his state of the Union message in January and in two subsequent messages to Congress, recommended an increase in the Federal motor fuel tax of 1½ cents per gallon for 5 years. Such a tax would keep the highway program at the level provided by the 1956 act and not require any deficit spending or borrowing.

Now there are many who oppose increasing the tax on highway users because they feel users are already paying more than their share. They argue, and with some merit, that there are those who receive benefits from these highways other than users.

In passing, however, I should point out that the new highways will be equivalent to our present toll roads; that motorists often go many miles out of their way to use the toll roads; that they are willing to pay a charge or tax amounting to some 20 to 25 cents per gallon for the privilege of using these roads.

I do not go along with the contention that no excise taxes from the great automobile industry should be used in support of the General Treasury and that all of these taxes should necessarily be earmarked for highway construction.

There are many other industries in this country which pay excise taxes to the General Treasury, none of which are earmarked or used for the direct benefit of the industry which pays them. Let me just mention a few which are in this category: transportation, jewelry and fur industries, manufacturers of sporting goods, and so forth.

THE 1961 REPORTS

We are going to settle this question—I hope once and for all—16 months from now. At that time there are two reports due this Congress, resulting from extensive and exhaustive studies and surveys.

First. These surveys will tell us whether or not the tax base for the trust fund should be broadened to include other than highway users who may receive benefits from our modern highways, such as adjoining landowners, Department of Defense, and so forth.

Second. These studies will tell us the effect that various vehicles have on the highways and the life thereof, and the standards and costs of construction made necessary to carry and support the various sizes and weights of vehicles.

Third. These studies will enable the Congress to determine the fair and equitable share of the taxes or charges that each class of highway users should pay.

Fourth. Finally, these reports will give us a revised and accurate estimate of the cost of completing the Interstate System.

One can readily see, therefore, that we have two distinct parts or phases of the highway problem confronting us:

First. The need of solving the immediate financial crisis and keeping this mammoth program somewhat on schedule.

Second. The long-range construction and financing problem which can only be solved after Congress receives the two reports I mentioned, 16 months from now. We cannot possibly solve this second phase now because we would be working in the dark. When these reports are received, those who are dissatisfied with either the construction or financing phase of the highway program can be heard.

With these reports before them, the critics of the program—in fact, all of us—can then decide:

First. Whether highway users are paying too much or too little of the cost of building and maintaining highways.

Second. Whether commercial vehicles are paying too much or too little compared to the passenger cars.

Third. Whether standards of construction, right-of-way widths, and so forth, should be changed.

Fourth. Whether the Interstate or ABC System is being discriminated against.

Fifth. Whether the formula for sharing costs between the States and the Federal Government should be amended.

I beg of you to wait for 16 months so that we can more intelligently discuss and decide these issues. Let us not attack the program now. Let us not attempt to place blame on the Bureau of Public Roads or the various State highway departments. Sure, they have made some mistakes—and who would not in a program of this magnitude? Certainly Congress has made its share of miscues, as I have pointed out before.

I believe that the Bureau of Public Roads and the State highway departments have generally done a good job under trying circumstances. Let us not discredit a good and needed road program during these closing hours of this session of Congress.

THE FALLON BILL

The Fallon bill attempts to solve only the immediate phase or first part of the highway problem. It recognizes that we must wait for the two reports I have mentioned in order to deal intelligently with the second or major part of the problem.

The Fallon bill, as I said at the beginning, is a compromise measure. While it is acceptable to most of us who have worked with this matter, I know of no one whom it satisfies entirely. Although I introduced a companion bill, I certainly am not satisfied with all of its provisions.

The Fallon bill proposes to handle the current and immediate financing problem:

First. By the imposition of a new tax for the limited time of 22 months.

Second. By deficit financing in providing for a transfer of 5 percentage points of the excise taxes on automobiles, accessories, and parts from the general fund to the highway trust fund for a period of 3 years.

The Fallon bill falls short of keeping the construction program at the levels provided in the 1956 and 1958 acts.

First. It specifically reduces the authorization for fiscal year 1961 from $2.5 billion to $2 billion.

Second. Since the Byrd amendment is retained, actual expenditures in all probability will not exceed $1.8 billion.

Third. In fiscal year 1962 expenditures will be approximately $2 billion instead of $2.2 billion as heretofore authorized for that year.

While some of us would like to keep the program at the levels previously authorized, it was necessary to compromise on the lower expenditure figures so that agreement might be reached.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR TOLL ROADS AND FREEWAYS

Some of us hoped that this highway bill could be considered solely as an emergency matter—which it is—and deal only with the financial crisis we are facing. One of the most controversial issues is the reimbursement of States that have built toll roads and freeways from State or other funds, and which highways have been incorporated into the Interstate System.

An amendment to the Fallon bill was offered in committee dealing with reimbursement. After this amendment was watered down so that it became a mere statement of policy that States would be reimbursed at some time, I reluctantly agreed to accept it.

The amendment, as originally offered in committee, would have made it mandatory that following the 1961 reports reimbursement would be made.

As I said, I would prefer that this statement of policy not be in this bill, but I accepted it as a compromise to the original amendment which was far more objectionable.

From what I have said, you can readily understand that the deficit financing provisions is not entirely agreeable to me.

However, I am satisfied that this is the best bill we can get. Much sweat, if not blood and tears, have gone into this legislation up to this point. The overriding need for continuing the highway program makes the adoption of this compromise measure absolutely necessary.

THE LOCATION OF THE INTERSTATE SYSTEM INTO AND AROUND METROPOLITAN AREAS

A review of past legislation and reports submitted to the Congress indicates that it has always been the intention from the time the Interstate Highway System was conceived to extend those highways into and through, as well as around, the principal metropolitan areas and cities. At the same time, it has been a known fact that it was not the intent of the Congress to have the Interstate System solve all of the traffic problems of the cities which are served by the Interstate System.

The National Interregional Highway Committee reported in its Interregional Highway Report of 1944—House Document No. 379, 78th Congress—that—

All facts available to the committee point to the sections of the recommended system within and in the environs of the larger cities and metropolitan areas as at once the most important in traffic service and least adequate in their present state of improvement. These sections included routes around as well as into and through the urban areas. If priority of improvement within the system is determined by either the magnitude of benefits resulting or the urgency of need, it is to these sections that first attention should be accorded.

The report on interregional highways concludes that the interregional system should be 33,920 miles in total length which included 4,470 miles of highway within cities. The total mileage of 33,920 did not include any allowance for circumferential or distributing routes required at the larger cities or auxiliary routes for the distributing or assembling of through traffic to and from the quarters of the city. It was estimated at this time that these additional routes would not exceed 5,000 miles in length for a total system length of about 39,000 miles.

The publishing and wide acceptance of the report of the National Interregional Highway Committee prompted the Congress, in the Highway Act of 1944, to call for the establishment of the Interstate System. This was accomplished in 1947 when the State highway departments, in cooperation with the Bureau of Public Roads and with each other, established the city-to-city routes of the Interstate System which were approved for designation by the Federal Works Administrator. This designation of 37,700 miles of the Interstate System included the portions extending into and through urban areas which was estimated to be about 4,400 miles in length. The difference between the 37,700 miles and the 40,000-mile system authorized, that is, 2,300 miles, was reserved for Interstate System routes into, through, and belts around metropolitan areas.

These additional routes at the urban area were designated in September 1955 and only a portion of the 2,300 miles was located within the urban area. At the time of the preparation of the first estimate of costs for completing the Interstate System, as required under section 108(d) of the 1956 Federal-Aid Highway Act, there were Interstate routes approved for a total length of 38,548 miles. Of this total mileage, 33,980 miles of the Interstate System were located in the rural area and 4,568 miles in the urban area. This accurate measurement of the length of the routes in the urban areas is only slightly above that considered at the time of the original designation of the system in August 1947.

The President's Advisory Committee on a National Highway Program, in January 1955, submitted a report on "A 10-Year National Highway Program." This report recognized the need for additional Interstate System routes into, through, and around metropolitan areas and allowed $4 billion for these routes in estimating the cost for completing the Interstate System. This procedure was necessary since the added routes into, through, and around the metropolitan areas had not been designated as yet and a more accurate route-by-route estimate was not available at that time.

After full consideration of the report on "A 10-Year National Highway Program" and considerable other information, the Congress passed the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1946, which recognized the need for providing Interstate System routes into, through, and around urban areas. The intent of the Congress is clearly expressed in section 108(b) of the 1956 Federal Aid Highway Act which states:

For the purpose of expediting the construction, reconstruction, or improvement, inclusive of necessary bridges and tunnels, of the Interstate System, including extensions thereof through urban areas, designated in accordance with the provisions of section 7 of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1944 (58 Stat. 338, there is hereby authorized.

This highway act states that it was the intent that local needs to the extent practicable, suitable, and feasible be given equal consideration with the needs of interstate commerce.

When so clearly stated in the Federal Aid Highway Act, the State highway departments and the Bureau of Public Roads would not be carrying out the intent of the act if they did not route the Interstate System through urban areas.

There can be no question that the Interstate System as conceived and designated contemplates extensions into, through, and belts around metropolitan areas. As stated previously, however, this system is not designed or contemplated to solve all of the principal urban arterial highway traffic problems. The 1956 act continued the urban arterial highway program at an accelerated rate and the 1958 act has done likewise. This is the program where the States—sometimes in cooperation with the cities or counties—pay 50 percent of the cost of the work. These are freeways, expressways at grade and major thoroughfares, which become the principal trunkline feeders to the Interstate System located in urban areas. There are a great many miles of them and they represent a vital phase of urban highway construction programs. The Interstate System work is not designed to take the place of these routes. However, they do afford, in addition to their other functions, the proper means for connecting the individual urban arterial highway systems with each other.

If modern freeways such as those constructed on the Interstate System are not provided and arterial streets are required to accommodate the same traffic volumes, it will be necessary to build two to five times as many arterial streets with the same number of lanes as the freeway which would require two to three times as much right-of-way.

The practice of providing interstate highway routes into and through the metropolitan areas not only provides an integrated Interstate System but serves both the through and local traffic by the construction of a single route. If the interstate highway routes do not penetrate a city but only extend around them, frequently another costly route would have to be constructed into and through the urban area to serve the large portion of the traffic approaching the city that is destined to the central business district. This results in the construction of two routes in place of one. Since both routes might be on one of the Federal-aid systems, the costs to the Government probably would be greater in locating the Interstate System around the metropolitan area instead of extending through the city.

Studies relating to the Interstate System have shown that roughly one-half of the traffic, cost, and revenue from the system will be in the urban areas. Of particular significance is the fact that in 1975 over 7 percent of the total vehicular travel in the United States will be on the urban portion of the Interstate System which represents only 0.1 percent of the total mileage.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHERER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Will the gentleman be so kind as to explain what the situation will be with respect to the making of contractual obligations by the States on the ABC road program—that is, the primary, urban, and secondary roads—during those fiscal periods anticipated by this bill?

Mr. SCHERER. I do not have those figures, but I understand that the reduction in ABC programs while not nearly as great as the interstate, they are going to have to suffer somewhat proportionately.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. And is it not true a great number of States have ceased to make contractual commitments for the construction of the secondary road program?

Mr. SCHERER. They have done that as of this moment.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. If this bill were not to be passed, it would do irreparable injury to all the road programs in which the Federal Government participates.

Mr. SCHERER. Not only that, but remember last year because of the recession in order to supply jobs, we accelerated this program by $1,600 million, now we are decreasing the program below the 1956 level. Look how many manhours we are going to lose, if we do not act. It is estimated there will be 500 million man-hours in on-site and off-site labor lost, if this Congress does not act. That means a loss of wages of over $1 billion in the next 4 years. Then you will remember, you gentlemen on the committee, that in 1956, the thing we worried about was whether or not the contracting industry, the material men and the State highway departments and the engineering firms of this country could actually handle this mammoth program, the largest public works program in the history of the United States. We asked these companies and begged them to expand their facilities and to spend money and to buy equipment on borrowed money. They have done this and they have kept the program up to schedule. If this program is cut now, the construction this year and next year will be cut in half, if we do not act. Then what happens to those concerns? What happens to that industry that has expanded on the promise of the Congress that this program would continue?

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHERER. I yield.

Mr. FALLON. Is it not true that the testimony before our committee showed the bill we are considering now is the very minimum to keep this program on schedule?

Mr. SCHERER. The very minimum. The construction program, the actual construction program under this bill is going to be cut, in my opinion, 30 percent because of the increased cost of this program, which I do not have the time to discuss. Therefore, you are not going to build so many miles and so your program, the actual construction program—not your dollar program—but the construction program is going to be cut by about 30 percent even under this bill. I wish I had the time to tell you why we are in this box. If I can get some time later, I would like to tell why we are caught in this financial box and what caused it. Let us not blame the Bureau of the Public Roads or the State highway officials because there have been some mistakes in construction or that there is something wrong with the standards. Let us not do that.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, let me assure you that the portion of this bill which was worked out in the Committee on Ways and Means; namely, title II, effecting the financing of the program and the highway trust fund was agreed to and resolved in the Committee on Ways and Means with what might be described as great reluctance. The membership of the Committee on Ways and Means, I presume, and I think I am correct in such presumption, is, perhaps, as acutely aware of the present burdens of taxation that are being borne by the American people, not only the motorists, but all other of our citizens, as any Members of the House could possibly be. It is never easy to raise a tax, particularly at a time when the tax burdens on all our citizens are so heavy.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, the committee was faced with the cold, hard fact that, unless some action was taken to provide additional revenues to the highway trust fund a moratorium would have to be declared not only on the interstate program but also on the ABC programs which of course include the farm-to-market roads, the primary roads, and the urban extensions. Actually, two problems were faced by the Committee on Ways and Means: First, and of most immediate importance, there is the short run problem of the deficit in the highway trust fund and the fact that, unless additional revenues could be foreseen by fiscal year 1961, absolutely no further apportionments could be made on the Interstate System during this calendar year; and second, there is a long-term problem of some $13 billion deficit in the trust fund which will occur during the life of the fund. Obviously, a solution had to be reached on the immediate problem unless we were to permit the Federal-aid highway programs to terminate. It was with the short-run problem, therefore, that the Committee on Ways and Means primarily concerned itself at this time. At the same time, however, you may be assured that we were all quite cognizant of the long-run problem and the fact that the solution which we have presented to the House of the short-term financing problem leaves the longrun problem unsolved. In other words, I will just say flatly to you here today, as I said before the Rules Committee yesterday, that members of the Committee on Ways and Means are well aware of the fact that in the early part of 1961 we will again have to face up to a very serious matter of providing additional revenues for the highway trust fund. Members of this House should understand therefore that the financing provisions contained in title II of the legislation before the House today presents an interim solution to the deficit in the highway trust fund. It does not purport in any way to provide the revenue or solve the problems over the long-term period.

The provisions of title II are quite simple and I believe are understood by Members of the House already in view of the considerable discussion which has taken place over this matter. However, I will review those provisions briefly and indicate the revenue which will be produced.

Title II provides an additional 1-cent tax on gasoline, diesel fuel, and special motor fuels for the 22-month period beginning September 1, 1959, and ending June 30, 1961. For this period, this increase will raise gasoline and related fuel taxes to 4 cents a gallon.

Additionally, title II provides for the allocation to the highway trust fund of 5 percentage points of the manufacturers excise tax on passenger cars and of 5 percentage points of the tax on auto parts and accessories. This allocation will be made for the 3-year period beginning on July 1, 1961, and ending on June 30, 1964.

The gasoline and related fuel taxes are estimated to increase revenues of the trust fund by the following figures: $383 million in fiscal year 1960, $577 million in fiscal year 1961, $75 million in fiscal year 1962; total, $1.035 billion.

The passenger car and auto parts taxes are expected to produce the following revenues: $802 million in fiscal year 1962, $831 million in fiscal year 1963, $854 million in fiscal year 1964; total, $2.487 billion.

If Members of the House will refer to page 20 of the report, you will see a detailed breakdown of the highway trust fund revenues actual and estimated from fiscal year 1957 through 1973, both under present law and under present law plus the provisions of this bill.

If Members of the House will also refer to table IV on page 22 of the committee report, you can quite readily see the magnitude of the immediate problem faced by the Committee on Ways and Means with regard to the deficit in the highway trust fund. That table shows the estimated status of the fund under existing legislation. If no change is made in existing law, it can be seen that at the end of fiscal year 1960, that is, the current fiscal year, there would not only be a deficit of $490 million in the trust fund, but also it would be impossible to make any apportionments during this calendar year for the interstate system for fiscal year 1961. Members of this House are aware that there is a 2-year lag between the apportionment and the actual expenditure. Also, that table shows clearly that by the end of fiscal year 1962, without additional legislation, there will be a cumulative deficit of $980 million in the trust fund and that in the calendar year 1960, only $500 million can be apportioned, for fiscal year 1962, for the Interstate System. In other words, the problem is real, it is immediate, and it can be solved in only a limited number of ways.

I may say to the Members of this House that the Committee on Ways and Means explored, I firmly believe, every available alternative for the answer to this immediate deficit in the highway trust fund. We considered the recommendation of the President for an increase in the Federal gasoline tax of 1½ cents to extend through fiscal year 1964; we considered the proposals for a 1-cent increase in the gasoline tax for a period of 12 months, combined with a transfer of certain of the excises from the general fund to the highway trust fund; we considered an increase of one-half cent in the gasoline tax, combined with a greater transfer of revenues to the highway trust fund from the general fund; we considered the issuance of both short-term and long-term revenue bonds in varying amounts and under varying conditions; we considered the possibility of transferring money from the general fund to the highway trust fund, combined with a suspension of the Byrd amendment; and we considered various combinations of these different approaches.

Important in all of our considerations are certain facts of life. I refer particularly to the budgetary situation for fiscal year 1960 and fiscal year 1961 and subsequent years. We were advised by Mr. Stans, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, that there is a prospect of expenditures of at least $79 billion for fiscal year 1960 and that, in his opinion, it was questionable that revenues would exceed $78 billion. If this should happen, wholly aside from the situation in the highway trust fund, instead of a balanced budget, there would be a deficit of approximately $1 billion, and, of course, any transfer of moneys from the general fund to the highway trust fund would simply increase this deficit and add to the forces of inflation.

We were told by Mr. Stans that for the fiscal year 1961 it is entirely possible that expenditures could exceed $82 billion and, of course, we do not now know what the revenues will be for fiscal year 1961.

At the present moment, we do not know what effect the steel strike and the slowdown which has already occurred in the highway program will have on revenues for the current fiscal year.

It was this anticipated budgetary situation that constituted a rock upon which a number of possible alternatives which were considered by the committee foundered. It is clear that the transfer of moneys from the general fund to the highway trust fund either during fiscal year 1960 or 1961 would only further increase the budgetary problems which we already face. Under these circumstances, our committee considered it unsound to provide for any transfer of funds prior to fiscal year 1962. We did conclude it feasible to make the prospective transfer of part of the auto excises and parts and accessories excises beginning in fiscal year 1962, since that is sufficiently far ahead that plans can be made to take it into account and plans can be made, if necessary, to adjust the situation as the future may require.

Then we decided very reluctantly that it was more responsible for us if we were to continue the road program as the public seems to desire and as I personally would like to see it go on, we would have to do contrary to what all of us wanted to do, that is, provide some increase in the gasoline tax, because we could get some money through that vehicle for the trust fund and not disturb the situation in the general fund. We are providing here for less than 22 months an increase of 1 cent a gallon in the gasoline tax.

I am concerned about an interruption in this program as long as we are uncertain about the duration of the steel strike, as long as we are uncertain about other factors that exist today that are affecting employment. If we do discontinue this program, if we do create employment in this area, do any of us have any assurance we would even get the $78 million of revenue that we think we might get this year or even that figure of revenue for the next fiscal year? Or do we think we would not be running the risk of downturn in our activity to the extent of creating more unemployment than maybe we had before?

So I urge the Members, therefore, to accept this proposition as the membership of the Committee on Ways and Means accepted it. It is a choice between what I consider to be two evils, one of having to increase taxes, and the other in the process of not doing so of discontinuing the road program at the moment and perhaps running into consequences as a result of it that might cost us far more than what is involved in this temporary increase for 22 months.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, as I said at the outset of my remarks, members of our committee were exceedingly reluctant to come to the House with the recommendation for an increase in gasoline taxes. However, we must face up to reality and recognize that if we are to have a continuation of this highway program on the scale which evidently is desired by the general public and by the Members, then, we must produce the revenues to pay for it. This is not the kind of problem that will go away by looking the other way. We cannot have our highways and not pay for them. Title II of the bill now before the Committee faces up to this problem and provides the revenues to meet the immediate deficit in the highway trust fund and title II will permit a continuation of the program which the public evidently wants and at a rate which the public evidently desires it to continue.

Let me assure the House that as far as the program and this bill is concerned, it is contemplated, it is intended, it is set forth clearly, that this tax is a temporary tax.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. The gentleman made a point and a thought occurs to me. If I am wrong, I wish he would correct me. He said that now the budget is going to exceed the estimates by $2 billion.

Mr. MILLS. No. I said on the basis of the information given us by Director Stans, it looked like we would spend a billion dollars more.

Mr. HAYS. The gentleman said he was given the information in executive session. Either the budget was not honest in the beginning or they are giving you figures in executive session they did not give us.

Mr. MILLS. Actually that could be. The difference can be explained as it was explained in executive session.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Speaking as a member of the Committee on Small Business, I would like to congratulate the gentleman for including in this bill the provision treating wholesale distributors as producers for the purposes of the gasoline tax. This will be a great help to those independent wholesale distributors and will put them on a par with the large oil company competitors.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman reaches the same conclusion that we did in the Committee on Ways and Means, that this is in the interest of small business.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the sum and substance of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1959, H.R. 8678, are that we propose to build less highway mileage with more money—money obtained by higher taxes and the diversion of general fund revenues. This result arises from the fact that this legislation requires a slowdown in highway construction, declares the intent of Congress to reimburse States for existing highway systems included within the Interstate System, raises approximately $1 billion in additional taxes through the temporary imposition of a 1-cent increase in motor fuels taxes, and diverts from the general funds of the Treasury approximately $2½ billion for trust fund purposes.

Mr. Chairman, it will be my purpose today to confine my remarks essentially to title II of the bill which is concerned with the financing aspects of the Federal-aid highway program. Title II relates to subject matter that is properly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means. It is included in this bill after having been developed by the Committee on Ways and Means in terms of policy decisions. It has been included in this bill at the request of the membership of the Committee on Ways and Means which has primary jurisdiction over this subject matter. Its inclusion in this bill is intended to facilitate floor consideration of a single bill providing for the expenditure and financing sides of Federal participation in highway development.

Mr. Chairman, I am entirely in accord with the basic objectives of the current highway program which might be succinctly summarized to be the development of an adequate highway system for our Nation to enhance our economic growth, to provide greater highway safety, to improve our military preparedness, and to enrich the recreational and educational opportunities available to our citizens. These meritorious objectives must be achieved at minimum cost and within the framework of sound financing arrangements. I do not believe the statement can be challenged that the American people want an improved highway system and are responsibly willing to pay the cost of attaining that system if they have assurance that they are getting their money's worth of highways for their tax dollar.

There are today approximately 70 million motor vehicles in operation driven an annual distance of 700 billion vehicle miles traveled. Ten years from now it is estimated that there will be nearly 100 million motor vehicles registered which will travel in excess of 1 trillion vehicle miles. Our existing highway system is inadequate to carry properly that traffic volume.

It was in recognition of the inadequacy of the then existing highway network that the Republican 83d Congress directed the Secretary of Commerce to make a comprehensive study of our highway needs in the Federal-aid Highway Act of 1954. President Eisenhower appointed an Advisory Committee on a National Highway Program which submitted its report in January 1955. In February 1955 the President transmitted to the Congress a message urging the prompt enactment of legislation designed to launch an accelerated highway program. After some political machinations and after a delay of 16 months an augmented Federal-aid highway program was finally enacted on June 29, 1956. This legislation had bipartisan support and, as advocated by spokesmen for the administration appearing before the committees of Congress in 1956, the program was established on what generally conformed to a pay-as-you-go basis.

Unfortunately, the fiscal solvency of the highway trust fund was not to be preserved for long. In 1958 the "depressionmongers" singing a gleeful ditty of "bust and boondoggle" proceeded to spend the Nation into a $13 billion deficit on programs that did not become public law until well after the start of an upturn in the economy. Included in this program of "spending ourselves rich" was a plan to boost spending for the road program by $1.8 billion without any provision for added financing. At the time this legislation was under consideration in the Congress a distinguished Member of the other body said with respect to the proposed highway acceleration program:

> It would destroy the pay-as-you-go policy for Federal highway aid established by the Highway Act of 1956, which set up the road trust fund to assure that special taxes on highway users would be used for highway construction.

Mr. Chairman, I opposed that legislation in 1958 because of my very genuine concern over what its impact would be on the solvency of the highway trust fund and because of my conviction that highway money cannot be wisely spent on the basis of an overnight decision to build a road. It was the action of the Congress last year in voting that speedup that has created the short-run financing problems confronting the highway trust fund today. Consistent with my vote of last year against unwise accelerated highway construction I will today vote against what I regard as unwise highway financing augmentation.

Mr. Chairman, for a number of reasons I find the method of highway financing that would be provided by title II of H.R. 8678 to be deficient. These reasons are summarized in the separate views which my very able and distinguished committee colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOSCH], and I filed in connection with this legislation. Those views are set forth beginning on page 28 of the report of the Committee on Public Works accompanying H.R. 8678.

I will not take the time of the House to restate or amplify on those views. I will merely point out to the House these facts: Title II does not provide for pay-as-you-go highway financing. It makes a token gesture in this direction by providing approximately 28 percent of the $3.5 billion additional revenues raised for the highway trust fund under the bill by current financing. The remaining 72 percent is raised by the commitment made today to divert from the general funds of the Treasury approximately $2.5 billion in fiscal years 1962 through 1964 for highway financing. Under no reasonable definition of pay-as-you-go can such a proposal be termed current financing. It is deficit financing pure and simple.

I do not like tax increases. I believe my record is clear on that. However, deficit financing I like even less. I am fearful that that is the course to which we are committed under this bill. I submit that the proper solution to this problem is greater utilization of highway user taxes for highway development predicated on the important condition that other Federal spending be reduced at least by the amount of any highway revenues that may be diverted from the general revenues. I regret to say that I can now foresee no prospect for lessened Federal spending in other areas so that the diversion of funds without a commensurate reduction in other spending tends to lead us to a resulting budgetary deficit.

I am also convinced, Mr. Chairman, that if the House is unwilling to deal realistically with this important matter of proper highway financing today, we have no reason for assurance that the House will be any more willing to responsibly face this issue in the future.

It is appropriate that I should state for the record in a factual manner without undertaking to introduce partisan considerations that the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means conscientiously and diligently worked to find a responsible solution to the problem of keeping our highway program in current progress. The minority members of the committee made motion after motion in support of various financing alternatives but we were unsuccessful in obtaining a majority vote. At one point in our committee deliberations on the subject, the majority had approved a proposal involving the issuance of highway bonds, the earmarking of general fund revenues, and a stretchout of the program. Upon reflection the committee subsequently marched back down the hill and wisely reconsidered its previous unwise decision. Finally the compromise solution contained in title II was approved by the committee upon the motion of my distinguished committee colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES].

I believe it can properly be said that Mr. Byrnes' sponsorship of this motion represented a last ditch bid to keep the highway program in progress through a compromise that could receive the support of a majority on the committee. There is no member of the committee who worked with greater resourcefulness and greater diligence on this matter than did the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES]. He was resolute in his endeavors to maintain the program for the national good and he was conscientious in his attempts to finance the program within the framework of fiscal responsibility. In reporting on the Republican endeavors in providing a solution to this matter, it is significant to note that while the Republican membership of the committee comprises only 40 percent of the total committee membership, the Republican membership cast 61 percent of the total affirmative votes for proposals providing a solution to the highway financing program.

My concern with title II is the same concern expressed by President Eisenhower and the same concern shared by thinking Americans everywhere that by diverting general fund revenues without a foreseeable budgetary surplus, we will almost inevitably lead the Nation into deficit financing. The President of the United States has repeatedly argued against such an expedient. The most recent instance in which he reiterated his position on this matter was his message to the Congress of August 25, 1959, in which he said:

> I must express again my objection to proposals that would, in the absence of foreseeable budget surpluses, divert receipts from the general fund of the Treasury that are collected from various excise taxes on automobiles. The transfer of these receipts to the highway trust fund would only shift the fiscal problem from the highway trust fund to the general fund, which is already in precarious balance. I should also make clear that I do not favor proposals that would finance anticipated deficits in the highway trust fund over the next several years by the issuance of bonds.

The majority-approved proposal, on its face, falls short of meeting the criteria of "pay as you go" and of avoiding the diversion of general-fund revenues for highway purposes.

The Secretary of the Treasury also warned of the risks involved in deficit financing, diversion of moneys from the general fund, and special bond financing. The Secretary stressed the importance to this country of living within our means. We must forthrightly realize that by providing for the diversion of general-fund revenues today without providing for the reduction in budgetary expenditures necessary to offset that reduction in general funds we are making a prejudgment of future fiscal policies. We are saying that we either are willing to have deficit financing or are making a decision with respect to the future priority of Government programs in saying that we will need to spend less on defense, social programs, or other Government activities.

We are in a period of the greatest prosperity in our history; the financing proposal before us today would say that even under those circumstances we will still resort to deficit financing as a means of paying for the highway program.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would say that we are dealing less than adequately with the serious problems I have alluded to in my remarks. I warn my colleagues that under title II we are providing only an unsatisfactory temporary expedient as a solution to the short-run problems confronting the highway trust fund. It is inevitable that we will have this issue again before us in the near future, and at that time we must deal realistically with the fiscal affairs of our Nation in providing a longrun solution as to how we will finance national highway development.

Mr. Chairman, I do not like tax increases. I do want new highways constructed. I do want them paid for as we go. I recognize that what we have done here is simply deferring the day when the Committee on Ways and Means must bring before this body a new tax proposal if we are to pay the cost involved in this trust fund. We should do it now. We should not wait. We should recognize that next year the expenditures of the Government are going to be as great as they are this year. We should not deliberately create a deficit by authorizing in future years the taking of money out of the general Treasury for the expenses of building our highway program today.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to give you the rundown on this highway capitulation we in Congress are making to the administration and budget. We in Congress have an obligation and duty to our constituency and our States we represent. We should not encroach upon the States, the only source of revenue that is available to the States, to meet their obligations. Congress must keep in mind the fact that substantial amounts of matching funds must be raised by the States through special highway user taxes—namely, a gasoline tax.

The proposal of the budget and administration that the highway users be saddled with additional taxes, or the highway program be cut back, is unfair. This proposal overlooks completely the history of the Federal-aid highway legislation and the fact that the highway users are still paying more than $1½ billion per year into the general fund from levies on new automobiles, trucks, buses and trailers, parts and accessories and lubricating oil, over and above the special taxes earmarked for the highway trust fund.

At the time that the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 was adopted the Federal Government was collecting from highway users, through taxes on gasoline, diesel and other special fuels, new vehicles, tires, tubes, lubricating oil, and parts and accessories, almost $3 billion per year, and was spending on highways less than $1 billion per year. Thus the highway users were paying into the general fund approximately $2 billion per year more than was being authorized for highways.

Despite these facts and, in response to the administration's arguments, that it could not afford to spend any more on highways, than was already being devoted to highways from taxes then in effect, the Congress increased the taxes on fuel, tires and tubes and new trucks, buses and trailers. In addition, it levied new taxes on tread rubber—used in recapping tires—and on trucks weighing more than 26,000 pounds. A highway trust fund was created for which these new taxes, and part of the automotive taxes already in effect were earmarked. This action still left revenues from taxes on highway users amounting to more than $1½ billion per year flowing into the general fund.

Even this was not enough, however. Under the Federal-aid program there is a time lag, between the authorization of funds for highways, and the appropriation of money to pay for expenditures, made in connection with the authorizations. Thus at the time of adoption of the 1956 act there were outstanding $1,958 million in Federal highway funds authorized by the 1954 and prior Federal-Aid Highway Acts, for which funds had not been appropriated. These authorizations were made liabilities of the highway trust fund thus relieving the general fund of obligations for them and saddling them upon the trust fund.

The trust fund as originally conceived, contemplated a balanced program over a stated number of years, with trust fund surpluses in the early years, to be made up in the middle years by advances from the general fund. The pay-as-you-go principle adopted in the final legislation changed this to a one-way concept, with trust fund surpluses available for loan to the general fund, but with the trust fund unable to borrow from the general fund.

Because the new and increased taxes brought revenues into the highway trust fund at a faster rate than expenditures, and because the previously authorized funds were made obligations of the trust fund, the Federal budget and debt situation were eased during the fiscal years 1957, 1958, and 1959. In fiscal 1957, for example, the highway trust fund had revenues of $1,482 million, and expenditures of $966 million. The general fund, of course, had no expenditures for the Federal-aid highways. Thus, the general fund was able to borrow from the trust fund, making it unnecessary to go to the public for this amount in needed funds. In fiscal 1958 trust fund income rose to $2.1 billion and expenditures also rose to $1.6 billion. The trust fund balance at the close of fiscal 1958 was $1,048 million, which was loaned to the general fund. In fiscal 1959, ended June 30, 1959, trust fund income was $2,185 million while expenditures increased to $2,709 million. This cut into the surplus accumulated in the first 2 years and left the fund with a balance of only $524 million, which was loaned, I repeat, loaned to the general fund.

It is now anticipated that expenditures in fiscal 1960, the current year, will exceed income by about $1 billion, wiping out the balance and creating a deficit of about $500 million by the close of fiscal 1960. Thus, after about 3½ years of surpluses, which were loaned to the general fund, the trust fund will need additional money. The general fund could take from the trust fund, but now, will not put the money back.

This means that the administration is looking to the Nation's highway users to pay the entire cost of the highway program through special taxes and through the same taxes to keep the Federal budget in balance. The inequity of this hardly needs discussion.

I would like permission to put in a table showing the amount of highway-user tax going into the general fund. All that need be done is to follow the principles of simple justice and equity and give the highway user a better return on his tax dollar than he is getting at the present time.

If we, those in opposition to this gas tax bill, could offer a substitute as we wanted to do, I am sure we could get a bill through to keep the highway program going at top speed, without imposing a single penny more of highway-user taxes.

Highway-user tax receipts going into the general fund for fiscal year 1958

Tax on new automobiles (10 percent)	$1,170,000,000
Tax on lubricating oil (6 cents per gallon)	43,000,000
Tax on parts and accessories (8 percent)	167,000,000
Tax on trucks, trailers, and buses (5 percent)	103,000,000
Total	1,483,000,000

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. SCHERER. The gentleman is aware of the fact that in 1960 and 1961, we are going to have these two reports available to us, which may correct some of the inequities which the gentleman spoke of, namely, that they might find there are other beneficiaries of this highway program other than the users who should help to pay these taxes.

Mr. CLARK. I agree with the gentleman. I want to add, as of this year, 1958, there was spent and put into the general fund for budgetary purposes $1,483,000,000.

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in the years immediately preceding January 1953, the Federal Government was collecting $850 million a year from gasoline taxes and was spending about $550 million of that $850 million on the building of highways. The Federal Government was diverting $300 million in each year immediately prior to 1953 to other purposes than the construction of highways including the foreign aid program. When General Eisenhower became President in January 1953 he recommended to the Congress that all gasoline taxes should be expended for the building of highways. In 1954, the McGregor bill was enacted by the Congress which provided that thereafter $850 million a year, approximately the amount of the gasoline tax, instead of $550 million, should be expended for highway construction. At that time, there was in progress what was known as the Clay Commission report. The Clay Commission report recommended an expanded highway program under which about 40,000 miles of Interstate Highway System would be built to four-lane standards with no cross traffic so that motorists could ride practically from the Canadian border in northern Maine to the Mexican border south of San Diego, a distance of 4,000 miles over divided four-lane highways. Other four-lane divided highways would run east and west, north and south across the Nation.

It was claimed by the Highway Safety Council that this system of highways when completed would reduce traffic deaths by 5,000 a year and reduce the number of persons injured in traffic accidents by 200,000 annually. Also, the expanded system of roads would provide new and additional jobs for 200,000 construction workers and for other workers in road material producing industries and for workers in road machinery producing factories.

Some have called that the Eisenhower expanded highway program. Some called it the Eisenhower-Clay expanded highway program. More properly, it should be called the Eisenhower-Clay-Fallon expanded highway program for the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON] did more than anyone in the Congress to bring about this great highway building program which is the greatest and grandest public works program ever undertaken in all the history of mankind.

That program has now come into financial difficulties.

The highway trust fund raised by gasoline, tire, and truck taxes to pay the cost of this program is running out of money. The Congress is mainly responsible for the fact that this fund is short of money.

First, the Congress added 1,000 additional miles to the system but made no provision for taxes to raise the money to pay the cost of constructing highways on this expanded mileage.

Then, secondly, Congress last year in a time of depression jitters on the claim that Federal works programs were needed to provide jobs took $1,200 million out of this trust fund and turned this extra money over to the States. Congress made no provision to replace this money from any tax source. As a result, the trust fund dwindled in size. Now there is not enough money in this fund to keep the roads program on schedule.

Also, costs of construction have increased about 12 percent, just as everything else has gone up in price. The reason for this inflation is mainly the extravagant spending, budget-busting policies of the Congress.

The trust fund is short of money. Either some way of replenishing this fund must be found or the present expanded highway program must be greatly reduced starting immediately and extending over the next several years. This will mean tens of thousands of workers will lose their jobs. Also, the time when the motorist will have needed roads will be delayed by several years. I do not want to see that calamity happen, and I am sure most of the Members of Congress do not.

The Ways and Means Committee and the Public Works Committee have worked out what they believe in their best judgment is a program that will do the job and continue this highway construction at about its present level. I am not pleased with every provision in this bill. I am somewhat disturbed by this provision that declares it to be the intent and policy of Congress to reimburse States for toll roads and freeways on the Interstate System.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may desire to the gentlewoman from Idaho [Mrs. PFOST].

Mrs. PFOST. Mr. Chairman, I am wholeheartedly in favor of legislation to keep the interstate highway program rolling ahead at full speed. There is no question of its vital importance to the entire Nation. The mail from my own State of Idaho attests to the tremendous damage that would result from any slowdown in highway Federal aid.

I joined with nine other Congressmen, however, in filing supplemental views opposing the gas tax increase insisted upon by the administration. I felt as the others did that the additional tax was not necessary to continue the highway construction program.

The Treasury is now collecting more than $1.5 billion annually in special highway user taxes on new vehicles, parts, and accessories that is not going into the highway trust fund. A portion of this money could be and should be transferred to the trust fund as soon as possible to continue the highway construction program on schedule.

There is no doubt that the administration's underlying purpose for the increase in gasoline tax is to provide a surplus in the general budget at the expense of the highway user. It is taxation for expediency only. In fact, the administration wants to impose an additional 1½ cents gasoline tax—50 percent more than that provided in this bill—and they want it for 5 years.

The bill before us calls for a 22-month period with a 1-cent increase. Under the administration proposal, motorists and highway users would bear an additional and staggering burden of more than $3 billion over the long period of 5 years—a completely unnecessary load upon the public using the highways of the Nation.

There are fairer and more equitable methods of increasing the general revenue than by imposing an additional gasoline tax. Without justice or equity to support it, the insistence upon this increased gas tax will:

First. Impose an unfair and unnecessary additional burden on the American motorist.

Second. Raise the motor freight rates in practically all sections of the country.

Third. Create additional problems for the States in their search for tax revenues.

Fourth. Continue for at least 2 years, and perhaps indefinitely, the unfair diversion of highway user taxes into the general fund.

As one alternative to raising the necessary funds to finance the highway program, I suggest eliminating the 4-percent tax credit and the $50 deduction on stock dividends. This would bring in an estimated $330 million annually.

Frankly, I see no valid reason why people who own stock and get dividends should receive preferred treatment in their income tax returns. Such a provision violates the principle of equal justice for all.

Another alternative to raise revenue is to eliminate the 27½-percent oil and gas depletion allowance in income tax. This would bring in nearly $1 billion a year. Such an allowance is obviously favoritism and in the same category with tax credits and deductions on stock dividends. It is a loophole which should be plugged in the interest of fair treatment for all our citizens.

These two alternatives would raise nearly $1.5 billion a year, as compared with the $1.035 billion to be received from the 1-cent gas tax increase over a 22-month period.

Motorists presently are digging into their pockets for nearly 10 cents in Federal and States taxes for every gallon of gas they buy. With gasoline retailing for an average of 30 cents a gallon, this means you pay nearly 30 percent in taxes. It is an incredible proportion, and a 1-cent tax increase will make this proportion even more fantastic.

Obviously, motor freight carriers are not going to absorb the increase. They will increase freight rates, and I can assure you that this will create a very real problem in my State where so many of our products are transported by truck over long distances. Higher freight rates could easily mean the difference between profit and loss for many of our people.

The administration's proposal to increase the gas tax is an iniquitous and totally unjustified move that will force the Nation's highway users not only to pay the entire cost of the Federal highway program but to provide a probable surplus for the general budget as well.

I am reluctantly voting for this bill, however, because I am fully aware of the severe economic impact of any slowdown in the highway program. I realize, too, the need to modernize our highway system is of paramount importance. But I hope the able members of the Ways and Means Committee will study not only the alternatives I have suggested above, but others which are readily available. In doing so, they can replace the increased gas tax as soon as possible with a more equitable means of financing this gigantic program.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CARNAHAN].

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend the tireless efforts of my colleagues on the Committees on Public Works and Ways and Means for bringing to the floor of the House before adjournment of this session of Congress a proposal to solve the highway financing problem. Legislation is urgently needed to provide for a continuing uninterrupted highway program.

The Missouri State Highway Commission has discontinued receiving bids for highway construction because of the anticipated delay in Federal reimbursement. The need today for an adequate continuing stabilized highway construction program is more critical than it was when Congress passed the 1956 Federal Highway Act or when it continued its approval of the highway program with the expanded 1958 Federal Highway Act. The contractors in the Eighth Congressional District of Missouri inform me that the road letting scheduled for July 30 was postponed indefinitely. A letter I received from one contractor in my district, Mr. Burl C. Ellerman of Eminence, Mo., is representative of the alarms being sounded. He wrote: "We are forced to wonder if the Congress, in the face of strikes now in program, with resultant unemployment, is fully aware of the terrific impact this situation could, and in our opinion will, deal the national economy. As the situation now stands, we will together with hundreds of other contractors engaged in road construction, be forced to suspend operations altogether due to completion of projects now under construction within the next 2 or 3 weeks; having depended on the July 30 letting for new contracts."

While many of us may feel some reluctance about the bill before us for consideration today, I am concerned that if no legislation passes the Congress in this session, the Federal Government will be placed in the position of delaying payment on current obligations, of causing an immediate moratorium, and a subsequent curtailment on interstate apportionments. It is essential that some bill dealing with this problem be approved to keep the Federal-aid highway program in operation.

The 1-cent increase in Federal gasoline tax which I reluctantly go along with, as provided in H.R. 8678 is a temporary tax applying only for the period from September 1, 1959, to June 30, 1961. Assurance is given that the additional tax will not apply in the case of gasoline used for certain nonhighway purposes or by local transit systems, and also will not apply in the case of gasoline used on the farm for farming purposes. $383 million is expected to be derived from these motor fuel taxes in the 10 months these taxes will be effective in the fiscal year 1960, and $577 million is expected to be derived in the full 12 months in which they are to be effective in the fiscal year 1961. Under this bill, the interstate highway program can be continued approximately at its present level.

Increase in any tax is not palatable to any of us but launching an important necessary highway program and then cutting it back is a breach of faith that will definitely have an adverse effect on the economic welfare of the State of Missouri as well as the Nation as a whole. I support this bill and urge that it be passed.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KLUCZYNSKI].

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a consent request?

Mr. KLUCZYNSKI. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks following those of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KLUCZYNSKI].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a consent request?

Mr. KLUCZYNSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at the end of the statement by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a consent request?

Mr. KLUCZYNSKI. I yield.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at the end of the statement by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a consent request?

Mr. KLUCZYNSKI. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at the end of the statement by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLUCZYNSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise reluctantly in support of H.R. 8678.

As a member of the Roads Subcommittee of the Committee on Public Works of the House, I have followed with deep interest the development of the Federal road program over the years and particularly since the enactment of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 which got underway the biggest public works program in the history of this country. I am aware of the many problems involved in this program and particularly the one that faces this Congress today which is the question of taking care of the deficit now existing in the highway trust fund so that the program can be kept on an even keel through the emergency fiscal period now facing us.

In 1961 when a new estimate of cost is received by the Congress and the important cost allocation study is also before us we can then take another long, sober look at the entire highway program both from a construction and financial angle. However, we must solve this financial problem that faces us today.

I have been consistently opposed to any increase in the gasoline tax and I had fervently hoped that some other solution could be reached to take care of the financial crisis existing in the trust fund but as much as I regret the fact I think the bill, H.R. 8678, that is before us today is probably the only means available to continue this program.

I am well aware of the extensive hearings held by our Committee and the Ways and Means Committee on this problem and I know that this bill now on the floor of this House represents the results of many months of arduous and difficult work by both committees.

There are many divergent views on the subject as to how this financial problem should be solved. This bill is frankly a compromise and as such I am certain no one is too happy with it, including myself. But we must have a highway program. We have made that commitment to the American people and we must continue it and on that basis I support this legislation.

I would be remiss in my duty and in my own feelings as a friend if I did not at this time take the opportunity to pay tribute to a man who has not only been a personal friend of mine but a devoted and loyal chairman. He is the man who is chiefly responsible for the fact that this legislation is before us today, a man who puts his personal beliefs second to the welfare of the country and the continuation of this vital highway program. I am proud to stand here today in the well of this House and salute a good friend, a fine Congressman, and a great chairman and I want every Member of this body to know that there is no finer chairman in this Congress nor is there anyone who has done more for the highway program than my good friend, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Works, the gentleman from New York, the Honorable CHARLES A. BUCKLEY.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLUCZYNSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BLATNIK. I want to certainly associate myself completely with the comments made regarding our distinguished chairman of the House Public Works Committee, and I would like the RECORD to show that after weeks of negotiation and discussion on this very controversial financing proposition, were it not for the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCKLEY], the Public Works Committee would not have agreed to a compromise; and it was by one vote that that compromise was turned down in the Committee on Ways and Means. We came that close to breaking the deadlock.

In discussions with the gentleman from Maryland and our able Roads Subcommittee chairman [Mr. FALLON], and with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS] it was through the initiative and the laying aside of his own serious reservations that the gentleman from New York [Mr.

BUCKLEY] made it possible to break the deadlock and provide for continuing the program, although it includes a finance section that is not very satisfactory to many of us.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending legislation, the highway bill, H.R. 8678. This bill is before this body today only after a long and difficult path. This is legislation that has been completely and minutely considered not only by my own committee, the Public Works Committee, but by the distinguished Ways and Means Committee. It is legislation that is frankly compromise. It is legislation that I support reluctantly but of necessity because of the fact that I believe a highway program is essential to the economy and welfare of this country. It is needed from many aspects, not only from the question of those who have committed millions of dollars in equipment for the construction of this System; not only to those who are gainfully employed in the industry, but also from a very important defense aspect.

I would like to point out to the House that every effort has been made by myself and other members of the Public Works Committee to go along in solving this problem. I proposed a solution that I thought was a workable one—the ½-cent gasoline tax for 1 year and then diversion of exercise taxes for the next 4 years. Further, I and other members of the committee agreed to increase the ½-cent tax to 1 cent plus diversion of excise taxes. We have finally agreed because of the need of the program to support this bill. But I trust that this gasoline tax we are now considering today will be only a temporary one, because I believe that there are other methods of financing this program, and that includes a further utilization and diversion of the $1½ billion worth of highway user taxes that are paid by the motoring public each year and that are not earmarked for the trust fund but are kept in the general fund.

In 1961 we will have another look at this program in the light of the estimate of cost report and the cost allocation study that will be submitted to the Congress by the Secretary of Commerce. At that time I hope we can finally come to an overall solution of the problem of financing the highway program, but I say to the Members of this House now that we must have a highway program and that the only answer to it as of right now in the face of the emergency facing the highway program is to support that bill. I urge its passage.

Mr. BROWN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, no one could be a stronger supporter of the Federal highway program than I. I want to see these roads built, without delay, without cutback, without argument.

I, for one, am perfectly willing to pay my share of any taxes necessary to build these roads. I know we can't have something for nothing; and I don't like to go in debt for anything.

But anyone who tells you that this Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1959 must be enacted in the form in which it is presented or the Federal highway program will fall on its face is not telling you the whole truth.

Anyone who tells you that a 1½-cent gasoline tax increase or a 1-cent gasoline tax increase is the only way or even the best way to continue the Federal highway program is not telling you the whole truth.

Actually, this Congress has been asked to increase gasoline taxes 1½ cents, because the fiscal affairs of this administration are in such a mess that the Treasury wants additional tax revenue; and they feel that the political way to get it is to increase gasoline taxes under the pretext of its being essential to carry on the highway program.

Here are the facts. In the original Federal-aid highway legislation of 1956, there was not enough tax revenue earmarked for the highway trust fund. Optimists thought there might be enough. But they knew it would be a close call, and therefore provided authority in the House bill for the trust fund to borrow from general revenue. But in the Senate, this borrowing authority was restricted by the so-called Byrd amendment. Everyone familiar with the program predicted trouble would ensue from this amendment.

The practical realists said all along that the trust fund was not ample, that early deficiencies would develop. But in order to get the program, the realists had no choice but to get things under way and hope for corrections somewhere along the line.

Now, we are face to face with the predicted deficiencies. More revenue must be earmarked for the trust fund, if this highway program is to be continued on schedule on a pay-as-you-go basis.

This can be done relatively easily.

There is more than $1.5 billion worth of excise taxes on automobiles and auto parts and accessories, and so forth. Now being collected annually which is going into the general fund.

Surely, any fairminded person would say that, if we are going to collect automobile excise taxes, a portion of the revenue derived therefrom should go for roads.

If you are not going to collect them, if you are going to abandon this form of taxation, that is another question. We might well have considered that when we altered the cabaret tax the other day, or when these taxes were renewed recently. But as a principle, if auto excise taxes are collected, why should not at least a portion of the revenue go for highways?

Right now, none of this revenue is going into the trust fund. If only one-third of it were earmarked for highways, there would be no problem continuing the highway program on schedule, without serious cutback.

But no, the administration says we cannot transfer that auto excise revenue from the general fund in 1960 or 1961. Treasury says it is desperately needed to pay for other activities of the Federal Government.

I am not surprised. It takes a rich country to afford an agricultural brainstormer like the present Secretary of Agriculture.

It takes a real bankroll to pay for all the duplicate projects that a disorganized Defense Department can devise, and our present State Department is not exactly a tight-fisted group, either. If Congress had not cut the President's appropriation requests by billions in recent years, this administration might well have needed a 5-cent gasoline tax to cover its fiscal mess.

But do not say it is essential for highways. Better management in the Defense Department, the Agriculaural Department, and the State Department could save enough to build three times the highways we are building, without any additional taxes.

The Congress will cut the President's foreign aid appropriation requests about $600 million this year alone. The highway program needs less; only $497 million to continue on schedule.

But, unfortunately, the present management in the executive departments say they are still not able to pay their bills. They say they must have more revenue.

But they do not recommend closing loopholes in the income tax structure, or rescinding the dividend income exemption, or taxing oil corporations with vast foreign holdings more realistically. They feel it is better politics to set up a hue and cry about carrying on the Federal highway program and then slip in a gasoline tax increase.

I deplore this subterfuge. I think it would be far better to lay it on the line and tell the people why this gasoline tax is being requested. If it becomes law, the people should know why they are paying it.

This new tax is being levied not to continue the highway program, as such. There are other and better ways of doing that.

We could transfer some existing auto user taxes into the trust fund, effective as soon as possible.

By this action, if we accomplished nothing else, we would straighten out the bookkeeping. We would establish the principle that, if auto excise taxes are to be collected, they should be used to build highways.

Then, having straightened that out, we could take a good square look at the general revenue fund, plug some loopholes, revamp the tax programs in general.

But no, we are not doing that. We are asked by the Administration to increase gasoline taxes 1½ cents for 5 years, on phony grounds.

In response, the Congress is preparing to pass a 1 cent increase for 22 months, an expedient tax that may well become permanent. This is a mistake, but in the closing days of the 1959 session, the House is apparently going to do it anyway.

I have fought it with every ounce of energy I possess. I tried to get a better program in committee. I have tried to get a rule where we could amend the bill. But the battle is lost in the House. We are stuck with this haphazard stopgap program; and the only reason on earth that there is for passing it is that we must have a bill, some kind of bill to send to the Senate so that they might clean it up.

Mr. Chairman, may I include along with these remarks the supplemental views of some of us on the Public Works Committee?

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF MR. EDMONDSON, MR. JOHNSON OF CALIFORNIA, MR. HARGIS, MR. BROWN OF MISSOURI, MR. SMITH OF MISSISSIPPI, MRS. PFOST, MR. CLARK, MR. BLATNIK, MR. MCFALL, MR. THOMPSON OF LOUISIANA

We are strongly in favor of the highway program. We want it continued without serious cutback.

But this additional motor fuel tax, insisted upon by the administration, is not necessary to continue the highway construction program, as such. The Treasury is now collecting more than $1.5 billion annually in special highway user taxes on new vehicles, parts, and accessories, etc., that is not going into the highway trust fund, a portion of which could be and should be transferred to the trust fund as soon as possible to continue the highway construction program on schedule.

The administration's underlying purpose for the additional 1 cent gasoline tax is to provide a surplus in the general budget at the expense of the highway user. It is taxation for expediency only. In fact, the administration wants to impose an additional gasoline tax of 1½ cents—50 percent more than the tax provided in this bill.

Furthermore, administration recommendations called for a 5-year imposition of the 1½ cents tax, as contrasted with the 22-month period provided for in the bill's 1 cent tax. Under the administration proposal, motorists and highway users would bear an additional and staggering burden of more than $3 billion over the long period of 5 years—a completely unnecessary load upon the public using the highways of the Nation.

There are more equitable methods of increasing the general revenue than by imposing an additional gasoline tax.

Without justice or equity to support it, the insistence upon this gasoline tax increase will—

(1) Impose an unfair and unnecessary additional burden upon the American motorist;

(2) Raise the motor freight rates in practically all sections of the country;

(3) Create additional problems for the States in their search for tax revenues; and

(4) Continue for at least 2 years, and perhaps indefinitely, the unfair diversion of highway user taxes into the general fund.

BACKGROUND

The proposal to increase the Federal taxes on motor fuels, in the opinion of the undersigned, is unfair and unnecessary. Some of the signers listed below have voted to report this measure favorably only because it appears to be the only way to prevent the highway construction program from being cut back sharply. It is the deep conviction of all of us that this program is so vital to our Nation's economy and national defense that it must not be stopped or slowed down unnecessarily.

We feel that administration insistence upon additional gasoline taxes as a part of this legislation is unfair to the Nation's highway users because it ignores the whole history of Federal highway legislation and taxation. The table belows shows that over the life of Federal highway program beginning in 1917 and up to the time of enactment of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956, the income from special levies on motor fuel; new vehicles; tires and tubes; parts and accessories, and lubricating oil, exceeded authorizations for highway construction by more than $17 billion. In 1955, the last full year before enactment of the expanded highway program, the yield of these taxes exceeded Federal highway authorizations by more than $2 billion.

Thus at the time that the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 was adopted, the Federal Government was collecting from highway users, through special taxes, approximately $2 billion per year more than was being authorized for highways.

Despite these facts, the Congress—at the insistence of the administration—increased taxes on motor fuel; tires and tubes; new trucks, buses, and trailers; and levied new taxes on tread rubber (used in recapping tires) and on trucks weighing 26,000 pounds or more.

Under this action the Federal Government continues to receive huge amounts of revenue for the general fund from special levies on highway users. In fiscal 1957, the excess of income from special levies exceeded authorization by $1.5 billion. And this is not the whole story.

Under the Federal-aid highway program there is a timelag between the authorization of funds for highways and the appropriation of money to pay for expenditures made in connection with the authorizations. Thus at the time of adoption of the 1956 act there were outstanding $1.958 billion in Federal highway funds authorized by the 1954 and prior Federal-aid highway acts, for which funds had not been appropriated. These authorizations were made liabilities of the highway trust fund thus relieving the general fund of obligations for them.

While this transfer of the liability for highway expenditures already authorized from the general fund to the trust fund would not have made a great deal of difference over the life of the program, under the construction and financing provisions of the House bills, it makes quite a difference over the short term especially when section 209(g) (the Byrd amendment) was added to the legislation.

The trust fund as originally conceived contemplated a balanced program over a stated number of years with trust fund receipts exceeding expenditures in the early years building up a surplus. Expenditures were expected to exceed receipts in the middle years wiping out the surplus and accumulating a deficit. The deficit was to be financed by repayable advances from the general fund. It would be liquidated in the later years of the program when receipts would again exceed expenditures. The pay-as-you-go principle adopted in the final legislation changed this to a one-way concept with trust fund surpluses available for loan to the general fund but with the trust fund unable to borrow from the general fund.

In fiscal 1957, for example, the highway trust fund had revenues of $1.482 billion and expenditures of $966 million. The general fund was able to borrow the surplus funds from the trust fund making it unnecessary to seek funds from outside sources. In fiscal 1958 trust fund income rose to $2.1 billion and expenditures rose to $1.6 billion. At the close of fiscal 1958 the trust fund balance was $1.048 billion most of which was loaned to the general fund. In fiscal 1959, ended June 30, 1959, trust fund income was $2.185 billion while expenditures increased to $2.709 billion. This cut into the surplus accumulated in the first 2 years and left the fund with a balance of only $524 million.

It is now anticipated that expenditures in fiscal 1960, the current year, will exceed income by about $1 billion wiping out the balance and creating a deficit of about $500 million by the close of fiscal 1960. Thus, after about 3½ years of surpluses, which were loaned to the general fund, the trust fund will need additional money.

The proposal to raise this needed money by increasing taxes on highway users or to reduce the highway program to a level which can be supported by the revenues from those taxes now dedicated to the highway program, also overlooks the fact that there are other beneficiaries of good highways who are not contributing 1 cent to the cost of these highways. In its Third Progress Report of the Highway Cost Allocation Study submitted to Congress on March 2 of this year pursuant to section 210 of the Highway Revenue Act of 1956 the U.S. Department of Commerce stated:

"There exists a formidable array of direct and indirect benefits resulting from Federal-aid highway improvement, in addition to benefits resulting from the actual use of such highways. Recent studies of the economic impact of highway improvement shed considerable light on the identity of the nonvehicular beneficiary groups and on the magnitude and nature of the benefits accruing to these groups. Regardless of the label affixed to these kinds of benefits—whether they be identified as an extension of vehicular benefits, transferred benefits, or nonvehicular benefits—what seems significant is that there are real and extensive beneficiary groups other than highway users as such, that reap the advantages (and perhaps shoulder the shortcomings to a limited extent in special instances) of highway improvement; and that the total magnitude of these benefits is great."

In view of the foregoing it is obvious that under the proposed increases in the fuel taxes the Nation's highway users are being called upon not only to pay the entire cost of the Federal highway program but to provide a probable surplus for the general budget as well.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, it is with a great deal of reluctance that I cast my vote in opposition to the proposal to increase the Federal gasoline tax 1 cent.

My reluctance stems from the fact that I know full well the great need for an adequate, modern highway network, and the benefit that will accrue to the people of this Nation from such a program.

I know only too well that such a program, to progress, must be adequately financed not only by the Federal Government, but by State and local governments as well.

But, Mr. Chairman, I cannot justify the further burdening of our overtaxed citizens with another so-called temporary tax. Not when our Government gives billions of dollars away each year to foreign nations. How can we in good faith give away billions of tax dollars to build roads, dams, airfields, and other projects in foreign nations, and tell our people here that you can have no public works projects, and if you want good highways you will have to pay another tax.

Mr. Chairman, the President has seen fit to veto the public-works bill, because it violates his policy of "no new starts" on public works projects. The President calls this Congress spendthrift. And yet he has threatened to call a special session if this Congress fails to give him all the money that he requests for the foreign aid giveaway program.

The people of my district are sick and tired of seeing their tax dollars used in vain attempts to buy friends and influence foreign nations. Certainly the people I represent stand ready to help any nation and any people who are in need. But they want such aid placed on a loan basis, and they want it repaid.

The people I represent have every right to expect that out of the thousands of tax dollars they pay annually, a portion of it will be used to benefit this, our own great country.

I cannot, in good conscience, vote to increase taxes on our people for a program, regardless how meritorious, while we persist in giving billions away to foreign nations.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, even though, like the overwhelming majority of the membership of this House, I am sincerely committed to support of the interstate highway construction program on the basis of the original schedule, I cannot vote for the method of financing, as provided in this bill.

Therefore, I shall vote against the bill, as written, fully realizing the political implication of such action.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is no need nor any justification for any gasoline tax increase to meet the urgent and obvious requirements of this construction program, which the people of America really want.

I shall vote against this bill which imposes this 1-cent gas tax increase for these reasons:

First. In my State of Maine we already impose a gas tax of 0.07 on our motorists plus the existing Federal tax of 0.03. The overall tax on gasoline in this country adds up to the unrealistic percentage of 41 percent, added to the retail price of gasoline. It would appear that this regressive tax is already burdensome enough, without adding another 0.01 of Federal tax, as provided by this bill.

Of course, I know this is supposed to be limited to a 22-month period on a temporary basis, but this limitation in the light of past history means very little since these tax levies have a habit of becoming permanent once they have been hung around the neck of the consumer. So, I fully appreciate the probability, if not the certainty, that this increased tax levy will become a permanent fixture of increased overhead for our people.

Second. As we know, all revenue from the 10-percent Federal excise tax on automobiles; from the 8-percent Federal tax on parts and accessories; plus one-half of the 10-percent tax on trucks and buses now goes into the general funds of the Treasury. This indicates, beyond any shadow of doubt, the general Treasury is dipping into the cash register which logically belongs to the highway trust fund.

Third. To find other means of financing the highway program, it is not too difficult to envision the needless extravagance of the current practices of those who are planning the construction schedule. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BARING] has effectively called attention to one phase of such extravagance and actual stupidity, it seems to me, when he told us recently of the horrible example in the Reno area of the unnecessary acquisition of valuable urban locations and construction of most elaborate superstructures to utilize these urban locations. Undoubtedly, this is only one of many similar mistakes of judgment, to put it mildly, in the planning of these highways which are now causing us to "jam down our throats," so to speak, this unpalatable proposal to increase gas taxes.

Fourth. Another approach to cut down on unnecessary expenditures in this highway construction can be found in the use of heavy-duty asphalt paving to replace the more expensive portland cement paving. It is estimated that this approach would save nearly $7 billion in construction outlays. There is evidence already available which shows a savings of $50,700 per mile through the use of heavy-duty asphalt in lieu of cement.

Fifth. Although we do not legislate in this House on the basis of what may be done in the other body, nevertheless, we know that this bill with its gas tax increase will run into trouble, once our action is completed, today. So, why not anticipate a bit and strike out the gas tax increase and write into law the alternatives which make more sense and which will expedite this action which we all support; namely, the continuation of the Interstate Highway construction program on its original schedule.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the highway construction program but I, just as strongly, oppose the regressive gas tax increase provided in this legislation. Therefore, since I have no other alternative, I intend to vote against this pending bill, as presented to us, here, today.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBISON].

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Chairman, it has been my privilege to have served during 2 congressional years on the House Public Work Committee under the leadership of my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCKLEY]. This year, I have particularly enjoyed the work of the Roads Subcommittee and my association with the able gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON], to whom much credit for the Federal-aid highway program must be given.

However, during the last few weeks—and I say this in all kindness—we of the minority side have felt we were pretty well relegated to the role of bystanders while our Democratic colleagues have been marching up the hill and down again in search of a sound but popular solution to the financial difficulties that have been bringing that program to a halt.

As we met last January, the storm clouds of financial distress were clearly visible on the horizon. The President, in his budget message, pointed to those clouds and recommended a 1½-cent increase in the Federal tax on gasoline as the only sound way of keeping construction of the Interstate System on schedule on a pay-as-we-go basis. Like most early storm warnings, this one was, for the most part, ignored.

In fact, our committee early this year, over the objections of the minority members, chose to pretend there was no financial trouble with the trust fund and voted to again increase the Interstate funds by $300 million for 1961.

Most of us thereafter had to resort to the newspapers to follow the protracted negotiations that then went on between my Democratic colleagues and the Ways and Means Committee. Suffice it to say, however, that after 8 months we seem now to be back to something closely akin to the original Presidential recommendation.

Mr. Chairman, I have learned that nearly all legislation represents compromise. If the measure of such compromise is the fact that no one is particularly happy, then the fact that H.R. 8678 even got this far is nothing short of miraculous. Arriving at agreement on the revenue portion of H.R. 8678 has, of course, been the main stumbling block.

Many possible alternatives to the tax provisions now contained in H.R. 8678 were presented to the Ways and Means Committee during the course of its deliberations. Eventual majority agreement on those provisions represents, I know, a hard-won decision. To the extent that certain of today's sponsors have had to reverse their previous position entitles them to our commendation for their objectivity and political courage.

However, as one who has been working and voting for economy in Government, although sometimes unsuccessfully, I am alarmed and disturbed at the prospect of even foisting such a small tax increase as 1 cent a gallon on the American motorist. I also seriously question the wisdom of creating future budgetary problems for ourselves by diverting, in 1961, such a large part of the Treasury's excise tax receipts as is here proposed.

In the very limited time available to me, however, I cannot devote more of my remarks to the wisdom of and necessity for such action. Instead, I wish to reserve any objections I may have thereto in favor of speaking about section 104 of H.R. 8678, which relates to the vexing problem of reimbursement and, to my mind, justifies my support of this proposal.

This question of providing reimbursement to those States, like New York, which have had the experience of having certain toll and free highways, bridges, and tunnels, built by them between the years of 1947 and 1957, incorporated into the Federal Interstate System, is a complex one. Our committee has had it under consideration for several years. It has previously been debated on the floor of this House, but there is still a great deal of misconception and misunderstanding about it.

In the hopes of clearing the air somewhat, may I offer the following sequence of events, with particular reference to New York, which brought this problem about:

First. Congressional approval of the so-called interstate network in 1947, allotting the originally authorized 40,000 miles of new interstate highways to the various States—New York being allotted 1,227 miles.

Second. No further congressional action until 1956, when Congress passed the 1956 Federal-Aid Highway Act, and created the trust fund for new highway user taxes to finance the construction of the 40,000 interstate miles originally authorized, plus an additional 1,000 miles added by the Senate.

Third. The fact that, in the intervening 9 years, many States, especially the more populous ones like New York, felt that they could not afford to wait for Federal action to start construction of interstate-type thruways, most of which were so costly the States could only build them on a toll-road-revenue-bond method. New York started its $1 billion thruway in 1948 and completed it in 1958.

Fourth. Meantime, the report of the Clay Commission, on which the 1956 act was based, recognized this factor, and stated that the national objective being to get roads built, in whatever fashion, the States should not be discouraged from so acting—even on a toll road basis—and should eventually be reimbursed for any such toll or free mileage that could be fitted into the planned system.

Fifth. The fact that, after 1956, it was obviously unwise to build parallel interstate roads alongside any existing toll or free roads that met interstate standards, so the various forward-looking States, like New York, were asked to take action to have their existing highways designated as part of the Interstate System—in New York's case, such mileage amounted to 568.8 miles, automatically reducing its originally allotted interstate mileage from 1,227 miles to 658.2 miles.

Sixth. The probability, though there is no direct proof of this, that those States which agreed to such a designation of their existing highways did so with the belief that the interstate mileage they thereby lost would be made up elsewhere within their borders—at least they could gain such an impression from the stated congressional intent contained in the 1956 act, to consider the question of reimbursement.

Of those 568.8 miles New York has lost, 110.9 miles are free highways built with matching Federal aid, instead of 90–10 money, and the balance of 457.7 miles are toll roads built with no Federal aid. Without the foresight and initiative New York displayed in building those roads, we would now be faced with providing her with 90–10 money to build that same mileage. Should she, and her sister States, be penalized for such initiative?

Most Federal-aid programs prove to be poor bargains for our most progressive States. Usually they contribute more than they receive, but I can think of no such other program where that contribution was more direct and specific than here. The New York roads that have so been contributed are of benefit to the people of the whole Nation. They should be paid for by the people of the whole Nation, as all other interstate roads are, instead of practically by New York alone.

It may be argued that our thruway, as a toll road, was not paid for by our people. That may be so, in a direct sense, but traffic studies show that around 85 percent of the cars using our thruway bear New York registrations, so our people, at least indirectly, are paying for our thruway and, in addition, contributing their full share of Federal taxes to build free thruways elsewhere.

The original concept of the Interstate System was for a network of free thruways. I admit that if New York is eventually reimbursed for her toll roads by 90–10 money, and those roads remain toll, it could be argued that the inequity has been then shifted to the motorists from other States who may occasionally use our thruway. This is one of the questions that will have to be solved in eventually determining upon a reimbursement formula.

This is not, of course, solely a problem affecting the people of New York, although we have the most at stake, $799.1 million. Every State, except Alaska and Hawaii, and even the District of Columbia, has lost interstate mileage. The following table, prepared by the Bureau of Public Roads, will show you the situation with respect to your own State:

Net reimbursement amounts based on 90 percent of depreciated original cost less Federal aid already paid toll and free roads

The first column indicates the reimbursable mileage, the fifth column the net reimbursable dollar amount. The net reimbursable dollar total is a large amount to be sure, $4,295.6 million, but the cost of doing equity must not be allowed to obscure the principles of equity. What is proposed here is not an eventual giveaway, but an equitable giving back of something we have unfairly taken. By passage of this bill, we will be formally recognizing that moral obligation.

For us to do so, let me remind my colleagues, would not be a new or radical step. The great majority of our Public Works Committee has always favored the principle of reimbursement. The Clay Commission favored reimbursement and so, presumably, did this administration at that time.

More importantly, this House on August 27, 1956, passed H.R. 10660, 84th Congress, which contained a section known as section 109, as originally numbered, which followed, almost word for word, section 104 of H.R. 8678, now before us. When that bill—H.R. 10660, 84th Congress—reached the Senate, however, section 109 was deleted but, in conference, it was partially restored as section 114 of the 1956 act which, in watered down language, merely declared it to be the congressional intent to determine whether or not reimbursement should be made.

My own research into this problem indicates that part of the Senate's reluctance to approve the principle of reimbursement stemmed from the fact that the Congress then did not even know how much mileage would be eligible for reimbursement nor how much such reimbursement might cost. We now have the full benefit of all such information, as contained in House Document No. 301, 85th Congress. We also have the, to my mind, somewhat dubious benefit of a subsequent report submitted by the Secretary of Commerce on February 1, 1959, pursuant to Public Law 85–845, which suggests two alternative proposals for an eventual reimbursement formula.

There are, admittedly, numerous differences of opinion among us as to how and when reimbursement can be made and how it can be financed. There should, however, no longer be any reason for delaying the establishment of the principle of reimbursement, which is called for in the interests of equity and fair play. The time to make that determination, Mr. Chairman, is now.

To do so need not and should not endanger the completion of the Interstate System. Section 104 of H.R. 8678 is so broad that any future Congress can work its own will in solving the problems involved in putting that principle into effect. In 1961, the 87th Congress will have the further benefit of two additional study reports that are now pending—a new, up-dated cost estimate for the completion of the Interstate System, and the so-called section 210 study which may enable that Congress to find ways and means for broadening the tax base for the trust fund. By that time, we should also have had ample opportunity to explore the various reimbursement formulas fully and to have resolved our existing differences.

Mr. Chairman, earlier this year I introduced H.R. 7512, and offered it as an amendment to Mr. BUCKLEY's own reimbursement bill, H.R. 6303, when the same was before our committee for consideration. My amendment was defeated there, however, and H.R. 6303 favorably reported out. I felt I then had to oppose H.R. 6303, because it ignored the overriding financial difficulties that we are attempting to resolve today. My bill, H.R. 7512, in effect, would have accomplished exactly what section 104 of H.R. 8678 now purports to do, and I am indeed grateful that our committee has seen fit to adopt the approach to this question that I earlier suggested.

I have hoped for, and would have preferred, separate action on my bill, H.R. 7512. That does not appear to be possible. I recognize that many roadblocks will still exist, even after passage of this act, before attaining the goal of reimbursement. Nevertheless, this is the first, positive step toward that goal.

The opportunity to make such step is sufficient to overcome my objections to the revenue portions of H.R. 8678, which I still reserve, and I therefore urge, Mr. Chairman, that H.R. 8678 do pass.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOODELL].

Mr. GOODELL. Mr. Chairman, I commend my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBISON] for a forceful and accurate statement. I rise to expand on some of the important points he has made.

I am aggressively and enthusiastically in favor of a Federal highway program so long as it is equitably distributed among the various States. I do not mean by this that I endorse any particular form of distribution among the States or that in such distribution we can afford to lose sight of the overall compelling interest of the country as a whole. Nonetheless, it is apparent to me at this time that there is no serious disposition on the part of the Federal highway administrators to correct the inequity which has resulted from New York State's having lost almost half of the 1,227 miles originally planned to be constructed in New York State. Other States are in very much the same position as New York. We, in New York, built the Thruway and some other roads along the route of the Federal highway system. This construction involved 568.8 miles. By the time the Federal Government got around to construction of the Federal highway program, these roads had already been constructed and the Federal Government refused to replace this mileage or reimburse New York State. The Federal highway program places a far heavier burden on New York State taxpayers than those taxpayers get back in benefits. In general, New York State pays better than 18 percent of the Federal taxes in this country and receives back approximately 6 percent of Federal aid expenditures. Under present rates New York is getting 5.4 percent of Federal highway funds. How can anyone justify such a wide disparity between taxes and benefits?

Even under the old formula which gave New York State 1,227 out of 41,000 total miles of construction, New York State was not faring very well. Now they have cut our Federal road mileage in half and are not proposing to do anything about replacing this mileage.

Let me make it clear that I am in favor of the Federal highway program. But as long as such gross injustices in the Federal program exists, I cannot vote for an increased burden on the New York State taxpayers. The present proposal for a policy declaration by the Federal Government to reimburse such States as New York for mileage already constructed is a weak proposal indeed and appears to have little likelihood of being passed in the Senate. If the House eliminates even this weak reassurance, I will surely cast my ballot against a Federal increase in the gasoline tax.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CRAMER].

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I shall spend a few minutes to discuss title I, which is under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Works. I am not too happy about title II, the method of financing, but it appears we are in the position now where we either have to fish or cut bait on this particular issue. We are going to have to provide adequate financing or we are going to have to accept responsibility for the curtailing and stopping of the road-building program which has already happened in some 25 States so far as future contracts are concerned. This stoppage will result in many millions—if not billions—in added spending should it occur now as the program is under way full blast.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is necessary to point out though with regard to financing that an amendment will be offered as a committee amendment to the bill, which was agreed to in committee and which is contained on page 2 of the bill we have before us as section 104, concerning the policy with respect to reimbursement of certain highways.

Under the present law, the 1956 act, the policy with regard to reimbursement to States for toll roads and freeways that have been constructed to standard between 1947 and 1957, the Federal Government or the Congress stated as a matter of policy that it would be discretionary in the future as to whether or not the Congress would reimburse for toll roads and freeways.

It is stated in the 1956 act "Congress shall determine whether or not reimbursement shall be made." And, I think it is important to point out that the amendment to be offered as a committee amendment takes away that discretion from the Congress and makes it mandatory that reimbursement be made. I read from the bill on page 2:

> It is hereby declared to be the intent and policy of the Congress to equitably reimburse in money or in mileage each State for every portion of a toll or free highway, bridge, or tunnel within such State which is on the Interstate System, the construction of which has been completed subsequent to August 2, 1947, or which is either in actual use or under construction by contract, for completion, awarded not later than June 30, 1957.

This takes away the congressional discretion which presently exists, for reimbursement on toll roads and freeways. As a procedural matter, I would like to point out to the House that, of course, it will require an affirmative vote of the House to accept that committee amendment at the time the amendment is offered, and I, for one, intend to vote against the amendment. As a matter of fact, today, as in the 1956 act, Congress has the authority to decide at a future date on this issue, decide when it should be done, under what circumstances, and to what extent reimbursement should be made, if at all. But, this statement of policy makes it mandatory on the part of the Congress to go ahead on reimbursement.

I am concerned about it further for this reason: What is it going to cost? The gentleman from Washington a while ago asked that question. The estimate by the Bureau of Public Roads is $4.3 billion if you retain the cutoff date of June 30, 1957, which I maintain is an arbitrary date in the first place. Why penalize the States that have made those improvements subsequent to that time? It will cost $4.3 billion, and if this date is changed to a future date, today, for instance, it would cost $6.3 billion to reimburse already existing toll facilities or freeways. One of the reasons why that is such a critical question at this time is that the program, as the result of the increased cost of construction, already has a deficit. In the program authorized in 1956 it was estimated at $25 billion, and the current estimated deficit on the already authorized program is $13 billion. Now, the proponents of this amendment would, as a matter of policy, say that it is mandatory that Congress reimburse by $4.3 billion more, making that deficit $17.3 billion. I cannot subscribe to such fiscal irresponsibility.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FOLEY].

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of my constituents in the Sixth District of Maryland, I want to commend the distinguished dean of the Maryland delegation, Mr. FALLON, for his leadership in working out a feasible solution to a complex, pressing legislative problem. This important highway program affects the safety of the lives of the people of my district and the future economic development of the Sixth District of Maryland. Moreover, it is the major essential step toward eliminating now and in the future the deplorable transportation logjam in the Washington metropolitan area. I strongly support this measure and urge the other Members of the House to do so.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOK].

Mr. COOK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Chairman, it is with great reluctance that I rise today in support of H.R. 8678. As a member of the Public Works Committee, I am a firm believer in the interstate highway program. Such a system of highways is essential to our defense and to high-day safety in general.

However, I am sorry that this program apparently can only be continued by imposing an additional gasoline tax of 1 cent per gallon for 22 months. The people of Ohio only recently received a jolt of a 2-cent increase in the State gasoline tax. The increase included in this pending bill will really be felt by my constituents.

But the States and the various road contractors are now tooled up for the construction of many miles of new highway. The jobs of many people hinge upon a continuation of the road program at as near to present level as possible. If the program is reduced now, it will have a disastrous effect upon the economy of this Nation as well as upon our highway safety program and the defense of our Nation in case of attack. Therefore, I very reluctantly will vote for passage of H.R. 8678. There apparently is no other way, at this late day of the first session of the 86th Congress, to guarantee the continuation of the interstate highway program.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DADDARIO].

Dr. DADDARIO. Mr. Chairman, we have reached a point in our deliberations in which we are faced with two unpalatable choices. The first is to discontinue, or reduce, the Federal highway program, enacted to improve the communications across this great country and vital to our commerce and travel. The second is to increase the inequities that are occasioned by the imposition of heavy Federal gasoline taxes through raising the present rate. Despite this fact many highway user taxes are now diverted from the purpose for which they could be dedicated—namely the maintenance of our road system.

This has been a serious issue since the start of the session. The Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Public Works have faced it, explored it and argued every conceivable alternative. Always in the background was implied use of executive powers to frustrate the will of the country by cutting off highway construction arbitrarily to make the point. I respect the serious and concentrated effort on the part of our colleagues on these committees to reach an agreement that would be good for all the people.

I have always opposed further and heavier Federal gasoline taxes, because I believe this is a province best left to the States. A general rise in Federal taxes would make it more and more difficult to meet local problems at the local level, which ought to be of primary concern of all of us.

Connecticut motorists now pay a total of 9 cents on each gallon of gasoline—6 cents in State tax, plus the 3 cents Federal tax. This is equal to a sales tax of 45 percent of the retail price of gasoline. The typical Connecticut motor vehicle owner pays an average of $166.20 a year in special State and Federal taxes on his vehicle and gasoline. The present Federal gasoline tax costs the people of Connecticut $23 million a year. Additional excise taxes bring the cost of Federal levies alone to $51 million.

In addition, Connecticut has never shirked its responsibilities in road building, nor expected Washington to solve its problems. As long ago as the 1920s, we began and followed through on a program to get the farmers out of the mud, by replacing our dirt roads in the secondary network. Not long ago, we completed and opened to traffic a major cross-State expressway that will be part of the Federal Interstate System—in all, we have completed about 147 miles of modern, limited access roads. The expense of those roads was borne through taxes and tolls on the people of Connecticut.

I have believed that some form of reimbursement should be provided, as the Congress indicated might be possible when it wrote the highway act. I have supported measures introduced by the gentleman from New York, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Works, to that effect. I regret that this measure has not been brought to the floor, because I believe, as the Clay committee believed, and the President initially recommended, that it would be fair play to do so. I am glad, however, that there is an amendment to this bill which declares that it is the intent and policy of the Congress to reimburse States for such construction. If this amendment is defeated it will be necessary to keep such possibility for repayment open in the future.

I know that we need improved roads in this country—improved to save lives, to allow for the growth of our economy, to improve the leisure of our people. I believe also we have other important needs that must be met—in education, in public works, in defense, in housing, in employment, in water pollution control. I do not believe we can allow the highway program alone to overshadow the entire picture.

Nevertheless, because I know and respect how thoroughly the distinguished members of the committees concerned have gone into this problem, I shall vote for the bill. I want to make the point that I made earlier when this Congress imposed increased taxes that represent a heavy burden to my State—that a big bite is involved here, and one that I do not believe recognizes the taxing resources of the separate States and the burdens upon them.

I would make one further point. In recent years, we have all been conscious of the increasing problems of mass transportation—the bus companies, the taxicab companies and others that are important to our economy and our way of living. In my district, the principal mass transportation company is facing increasing difficulties, and in some communities in the State is trying and succeeding in shutting down feeder lines and often main lines that have been uneconomical.

This is a serious problem for the entire country. Gasoline taxes are part of the operating costs of these agencies, where adequate provision has not been made. Any increase such as this one is bound to tighten the noose around the average citizen, the fellow who has to ride to his job. It is bound to increase the pressures on cities, for parking space, for street construction and repair. I am glad to see that provisions for local transit systems are contained in this bill.

In Connecticut, two surveys have recently been completed that have demonstrated the acute nature of this problem. The first was an official study of the Hartford labor market area under the direction of David Pinsky of the State labor department. It showed that about 20 percent of the 200,000 people who work in our area commute from outside the 18 towns that make it up, including some from out of State. The mass transportation facilities are particularly vital to those who travel freely within the 18 towns. Yet another survey, done by Irving Kravsow of the Hartford Courant, showed that the tightening noose about our bus facilities is posing an ever-increasing problem. I am happy to see that in raising the gasoline tax, at least, the committees have taken this into consideration.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. McDOWELL].

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I am strongly in favor of the highway program, and I think the people of Delaware support this program overwhelmingly.

But they question the need for the 1-cent increase in the gasoline tax over the next 22 months, until July 1, 1961, as proposed in H.R. 8678.

This additional tax, which the administration is insisting on for purely budget-balancing purposes, is not necessary to continue the highway-construction program.

In the report of the Committee on Public Works which accompanies this measure it is pointed out that the Treasury is now collecting more than $1.5 billion annually in special highway-user taxes on new vehicles, parts, and accessories. These huge sums are not going into the highway trust fund, and, if they were, or if only a portion of them were, there would be no need for an increase in the gasoline tax today.

The insistence of the administration upon additional gasoline taxes as a part of this legislation, indeed, is unfair to the motoring public and to all of the users of the Nation's highways.

The committee report shows that over the life of the Federal highway program, beginning in 1917 and up to the time of the enactment of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956, the income from special levies on such things as gasoline and oil, new vehicles, tires and tubes, parts and accessories exceeded authorizations for highway construction by more than $17 billion.

In 1955 alone, the last full year before enactment of the act, the yield of these taxes exceeded Federal highway expenditures by more than $2 billion.

Despite the fact that at the time of the enactment of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 these taxes were yielding the Federal Government $2 billion a year the administration insisted on increasing taxes on motor fuel; tires and tubes; new trucks, buses, trailers; and levied new taxes on tread rubber and on trucks weighing 26,000 pounds or more.

At this very moment, the Federal Government receives much more from these taxes than it spends on the highways. In fiscal 1957, the excess of income from these special levies exceeded authorizations for highway construction programs by $1,500 million.

Small wonder, then, that there is so much dissatisfaction with the measures which we are called upon to vote for today.

This bill, H.R. 8678, is manifestly unfair.

Yet, we are offered no alternative to accepting it with the provision of additional gasoline taxes.

President Eisenhower has made a great thing of his supposed need for an item veto, to enable him to reject unwelcome and unnecessary authorizations.

Here is one instance, certainly, where this House stands in desperate need of an item veto.

This item veto should work both ways, not just in favor of what the administration wants or does not want.

Another thing, under the highway program there is a lapse of time between the authorization of funds for highways and the actual appropriation of money to pay for such highway programs.

At the time the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 was adopted there were $1.958 billion in Federal highway funds outstanding which had been authorized by the 1954 and prior Federal-aid highway acts for which funds had not been appropriated. These huge authorizations were made liabilities of the highway trust fund, and the general fund was relieved of obligations for them.

This situation has been aggravated by section 209(g), known as the Byrd amendment.

Here is the reason this is so:

As originally developed, the highway trust fund receipts were to exceed expenditures in the early years of the program, thus building up a surplus. But this was to be a balanced program, with expenditures exceeding receipts as time went on. In the concluding phase of this program the receipts would again exceed expenditures.

Let us examine this for a moment.

The supplemental views with respect to H.R. 8678 filed by our colleagues, including the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMONDSON] declare that—

> In fiscal 1957, for example, the highway trust fund had revenues of $1.482 billion and expenditures of $966 million. The general fund was able to borrow the surplus funds from the trust fund making it unnecessary to seek funds from outside sources. In fiscal 1958 trust fund income rose to $2.1 billion and expenditures rose to $1.6 billion. At the close of fiscal 1958 the trust fund balance was $1.048 billion most of which was loaned to the general fund. In fiscal 1959, ended June 30, 1959, trust fund income was $2.185 billion while expenditures increased to $2.709 billion. This cut into the surplus accumulated in the first 2 years and left the fund with a balance of only $524 million.
> It is now anticipated that expenditures in fiscal 1960, the current year, will exceed income by about $1 billion, wiping out the balance and creating a deficit of about $500 million by the close of fiscal 1960. Thus, after about 3½ years of surpluses, which were loaned to the general fund, the trust fund will need additional money.

The situation is complicated by the fact that the costs involved in highway construction have gone up considerably.

The Federal Highway Administrator testified before the Committee on Ways and Means that the cost of the program as estimated in 1955 was based on incomplete data.

In addition, an increase of $1.3 billion was due to the fact that recent traffic studies showed the need for additional traffic lanes and other expensive features.

The Administrator further testified that an increase of $3.8 billion was attributable to the local needs of small cities and communities which required changes in the location of the highways in some cases and increases in the number of interchanges.

Other items not included in the 1955 estimate, such as utility relocations, provision for uniform signs on the Interstate System, and additional road lighting hiked expenses by $800 million.

A rise of $4.1 billion was due to the 12-percent rise in highway construction costs between mid-1954 and the last half of 1956.

The cost of the highway program has increased by a staggering $10 billion, with the Federal Government's share of the cost increases for the Interstate System authorized in the 1956 legislation amounting to $8.9 billion.

But there are a few other factors to be considered which account for the cost of the program zooming from $25 billion to $36 billion in the short space of 3 years' time.

This is the way the matter is explained by the Committee on Public Works in its report on H.R. 8678:

> The actual measured miles between the cities and border points used as the basis for the 1955–56 estimate were found to be 38,548 miles as compared to the figure of 40,000 miles which was authorized in the 1956 legislation, leaving 1,452 miles of the 40,000 undesignated. In 1957 the Department of Commerce designated 1,102 miles out of this 1,452 miles to specific roads, reserving the remaining 350 miles to be certain that the 40,000-mile limitation was not exceeded during actual construction. The estimated cost of the 1,102 miles already designated, and the 350 miles now held in reserve is $1.6 billion, representing a charge against Federal funds of $1.5 billion. In addition, an item of $700 million has been included to cover contingencies. Thus it was indicated that the rise of the Federal Government's share of the cost of the program from $25 billion to $36 billion for a 40,000-mile Interstate System can be accounted for by the $8.9 billion of costs attributable to the roads designated in 1956, to the $1.5 billion for the additional mileage, and to the $600 million for contingencies.

It is significant, I think, that the Committee on Ways and Means is deeply concerned with these rising costs and believes that they require careful review over the next few years.

The Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 was directed to one of the country's most pressing needs: adequate defense.

There is no question in my mind that we must intelligently plan to provide funds for the completion of the 40,000-mile Interstate System.

But, at the same time, steps must be taken to curb the reckless spending by the Bureau of Public Roads which often has purchased expensive properties at outlandish expense.

Elaborate superstructures have been built which are engineering marvels, but which may not have been needed if more careful study of the sites had been made.

At this same time the economies of our cities from coast to coast have been disrupted.

Part of the increasing cost of the highway program is due to the inordinate emphasis on speed, according to officials of the congressionally chartered National Trust for Historic Preservation. The National Trust is made up of hundreds of organizations at the National, State, and local levels. Mrs. Helen Duprey Bullock, historian of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, declares that—

> Part of the fabulous and increasing cost of this program is owing to the inordinate emphasis on speed. Routes are not infrequently selected and plotted from the air with an appalling lack of consideration of human values involved.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge the adoption of the bill.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, this is a decision which faces all of us and about which none of us can really be enthusiastic. I suppose no Member of the House could find it a more bitter pill than I find it to be, since I, along with others, had stated publicly earlier in the session that I was opposed to any increase of the gasoline tax. Yet, I have come to the conclusion that this is the only responsible way in which Congress can proceed at this juncture of our highway program.

Nobody likes to vote for a tax increase, and yet I suggest to you that you take whatever objection you might have to this bill and compare it side by side with what will happen if the bill is not enacted. If this bill is not enacted, we will most certainly come to a point, according to the testimony by the Department of Commerce, within a couple of months, when the entire Federal highway program will be brought to a grinding halt.

It would have been my choice to find another alternative, perhaps to scale the size of the program down a bit and keep it going in an orderly fashion at a somewhat reduced rate. But we do not have any choices. Our choice is either to let the program die entirely for a period of some 9 months or to enact this bill, behave responsibly and validate our obligations to the States which, acting upon those obligations, have made contractual obligations to contractors within those States to build roads.

If we do not pass this bill many of those States within 2 months are going to be in a position where they will have to default on the obligations they have assumed to the contractors. Many miles of road presently under construction will not be paid for in keeping with the terms of the contracts. Many contractors, unable to meet their own obligations assumed in good faith based upon Government commitments, would have to go out of business. Many thousands of highway workmen would suddenly be thrown out of work. Public confidence in the entire highway program would be seriously impaired.

Mr. Chairman, it boils down to this. We have bought the merchandise. We cannot send it back. The only honorable thing we can do at this point is to pay for it.

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the main question facing us today is simply this. Do we want the highway program to continue? In my judgment it is just that simple. The question is, Will we go back on the commitments that we have made to the several States? Will we stop the construction of the Interstate System of Highways that we began a few years ago?

Unless we enact this bill two things will happen. We will be going back on our word to the States because we told the States to go ahead and enter into contracts for highway construction and we would share the cost. But unless additional funds are provided for the highway trust fund, we are not even going to be able to meet our responsibility to reimburse the States on some of the ABC contracts that have been entered into.

It is not just the Interstate System that is in trouble. You have some States that are preparing now to present bills for reimbursement to the Federal Government for construction that has been completed. We are going to have to go back on our word temporarily and say, "No, we cannot give you the money today, you will have to wait 6 months or a year until this trust fund is replenished."

So the question whether we honor our word and our commitment in those cases is involved in this legislation. Also, unless we enact this legislation all of the new work on the Interstate System will have been cut off in 36 States and the District of Columbia within the year. In fact, it is cut off already in some States.

The fact is that the trust fund from which highway aid, both ABC and interstate aid, is paid is short of money.

The Senate last year in a bill which was sent to it from this House added an amendment ordering a speedup in the highway program and ordering the spending of $1.6 billion more than was contemplated under this program. No provision, however, was made for finding the money to pay the bill. I suppose we can say that that is customary. But at least that is what happened. The House agreed to the amendment in conference, the bill was signed, and the money was spent as ordered by the Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I voted against that legislation but I do not think that absolves me from responsibility as far as facing up to the facts of the situation today. The money has been spent. The fund is short. If we do not do something then the whole Interstate System comes to a grinding halt and we cannot even honor commitments that have been made to the States on which the States have gone ahead and spent money.

Gentlemen have mentioned the responsibility of the Congress. It seems to me it is our obligation when we order commitments made that we then find where the money is going to come from and provide that revenue.

We must act today because of the obligation we created last year. We are in an emergency, but this is not the only problem we have with respect to the highway program. In fact, the increased cost of the program is such that we are going to have to face up to a bigger issue 2 years from now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. We are going to have a real problem before us. If we want the program and the roads built on schedule and on time, we are going to have the real problem 2 years from now of finding about $13 billion in addition to what is now provided under present taxes. So do not think that this action today is going to lead us up a rosy road where we do not have to worry any more because we have something more facing us. But we are in an emergency now. This bill proposes to meet that emergency. Now what can you do to meet this emergency? Of course, you can do what we have already done too often. You can borrow the money. You can raid the general fund and say, "Well, we will have the general funds of the Treasury finance the deficit." But, the general fund is short, and it has to borrow. So the question you have to face today is whether you are going to borrow this money or whether you are going to raise it in current taxes. In my book, Mr. Chairman, if this Congress is going to be responsible, it will decide to stop this idea of borrowing to meet our every need. We will pay for current spending with current taxes. That is what this bill does.

Certainly it is distasteful. Nobody likes to raise taxes. But let us just remember this not only in connection with this bill, but in connection with all bills that cost money. If we are going to spend money, we are going to have to raise the taxes to pay the bills. It is always going to be distasteful. But let us remember how distasteful it is to raise taxes when we order the expenditures made.

This bill is a compromise. We have cut the program back. We have cut it back from what the Committee on Public Works anticipated being a $2.5 billion annual program. We have cut it back so that this year they are only authorizing $1,800 million, and there will be a further reduction next year. We increase taxes to provide the funds to finance the reduced program.

It is a reasonable compromise.

It is a practical compromise.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, it is a source of genuine regret to me to part company on this measure with the distinguished gentleman from New York

[Mr. BUCKLEY], the chairman of the Committee on Public Works, and the able gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON], and it is of particular regret to me to part from my own distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, whose leadership I am always anxious to follow. In the history of the Congress, there has never been a time when the Committee on Ways and Means has been chaired by one with more profound knowledge of the intricate and technical laws within the committee's jurisdiction or who has so much enjoyed the respect and admiration of his colleagues on the committee.

I agree with what the preceding speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BYRNES] has said, that at this late date there is no choice between going on with this program as planned and passing this bill. But, it is my position that, instead of raising taxes on American motorists to the tune of a billion dollars, this Congress should slow down this interstate highway program and take stock of its progress. There is need for such stocktaking. The 1956 estimate of cost of this program is $25 billion and, in the course of 3 years that has gone up $13 billion, or a 50-percent difference, and only $4 billion of that is claimed to be on account of rising costs of construction. Reports made by the Comptroller General to various committees of this Congress furnish strong evidence that some of the States are running riot on the Federal Government's 90 percent share of this interstate program.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. FALLON. In regard to the costs on the Interstate System, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that so far as the Interstate System is concerned, the cost for construction is $1,175,000 a mile under State and Federal supervision, whereas in 14 cases of completed toll roads, the cost has been $1,222,000 a mile.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman will recall that Mr. Tallamy of the Bureau of Public Roads testified to the fact of the increased cost of the estimate and stated that $4 billion of it was due to increases as the result of price rising and the rest for other reasons. The report of the Comptroller General shows that States have built roads parallel to other State roads meeting Federal standards in Kansas and New York and Ohio, New Jersey and Massachusetts.

The report of the Comptroller General says there were extravagant or political appraisals in New York, Kansas, and Indiana; and in the State of New York on one road a stretch of road of 35 miles at a cost of $24.8 million, on which the right-of-way estimates were made in a day.

There were faulty cost estimates and errors in the States of Colorado, Washington, Virginia, Ohio, California, Kansas, Georgia, Texas, New Jersey, Illinois, and Florida. It is only fair to say that the Bureau of Roads has submitted an answer to that in which it denies allegations of inefficiency and contends that other faulty practices have been eliminated, but it is significant that the Comptroller General charges that the Federal Bureau of Roads' "difficulties in financial administration stem principally from a lack of professional leadership in financial management."

There is hardly a Member of Congress through whose district these roads go who does not know of some extravagant use of the Federal funds.

I can give you an illustration in my State of Virginia where contrary to engineering advices the Highway Commission by a divided vote is asking the Federal Government to put up $37 million additional and to add 54 miles and this the Commission is doing for purely political purposes, despite advice of engineers it employed to give it advice.

Forty-two percent of this interstate money is for city thruways at a cost of $4 million a mile. These city freeways constitute only 11 percent of the system. Since the Interstate System is only 1¼ percent of American highways, 42 percent of its money is for one-tenth of 1 percent of the roads.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FALLON. It just happens to work out that while it accounts for 42 percent of the cost, it also carries 42 percent of the traffic.

Mr. HARRISON. But it is only 11 percent of the roads in the interstate highway system.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. SCHERER. I realize what the gentleman said is correct, that 42 percent of the cost goes to these city thruways.

Mr. HARRISON. Forty-two percent of the cost for 11 percent or 1¼ percent of the entire highway system.

Mr. SCHERER. The chairman of the subcommittee said that 42 percent of the traffic is there, and it accounts for 42 percent of the cost.

Mr. HARRISON. But the other State roads, the primary and secondary roads are suffering as a consequence.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. FALLON. Regarding the statement the gentleman made that the secondary farm-to-market roads are suffering because of this system, let me call the gentleman's attention to the amount of money spent by the Federal Government on secondary roads. For 1956 it was $1,869,044,000. In 1959 the estimate was for $2,823 million. That is a billion dollars more spent on those systems than in 1956.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman an additional half minute.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman takes most of my time, and I am very much complimented that he did, but I suspect the same condition exists in other States, but in my State I know that the other primary and secondary highways, the part that constitutes 98¾ percent of the American road system, is suffering and I suspect that the same condition exists in other States. In Virginia, this year, for construction of primary roads, not subject to Federal aid, not one single penny for construction is allocated.

Mr. FALLON. Let me tell the gentleman exactly how much money is being spent in the gentleman's State.

Mr. HARRISON. I am talking about primary roads.

Mr. FALLON. I am talking about primary, secondary, and farm-to-market roads. In 1956 the Federal Government and the gentleman's State combined spent over $30 million.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not say that. I do not deny that when we get into the Federal till, we have been trying to put up our share so that we could continue. But the State primary roads and the State secondary roads where Federal aid is not involved are suffering.

Now, we propose to invade the one source of revenue the States have to get their highway funds—the gasoline tax. In addition to that, in this bill, we are invading general revenue to the extent of $2½ billion. On yesterday, we in this House dealt with the President's veto of the public works appropriation bill and sustained that veto because the President said that over a 10-year period it would cost $800 million extra in public works. In this bill, we seize more every year from general revenue for public works than the public works appropriation bill had in 10 years.

In view of all this I ask: Is it right to mulct the American motorist for another billion dollars in taxes to carry on a program which the Comptroller General indicates is accompanied by extravagance and mismanagement and sacrifices the Nation's farm-to-market roads for city thruways?

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to oppose the bill before us because of the closed rule under which it comes before the House. We are given no opportunity to offer amendments to this bill.

Mr. Chairman, many of us here today would have no objections to an increased tax to finance the interstate highway program if we honestly believed that the new highways were being built for the least possible cost to the taxpayers of this country. We have a dynamic, growing country and there is no doubt that we will need a vast system on the scale now planned if we are to match the requirements of the future.

But need does not justify extravagance. No matter how badly we need any project, we should be certain that we are getting a sound return on our money, and that all due economies are being exercised. Yet the fact is that under present regulations it is altogether possible that millions and millions if not billions of unnecessary dollars will be spent on the interstate highway program.

I am referring, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that States are not required to solicit alternate bids for portland cement concrete and asphaltic type paving. A State, which will pay only 10 percent of the cost of the interstate highway running through its territory, can make the unilateral decision that a certain surfacing is preferable. Even if that surfacing costs millions of extra dollars over a comparable quality in another surfacing, the Federal Government has no right to question the State's choice unless alternate bids have been submitted.

The amendment I would propose, Mr. Mr. Chairman, would simply require the States to solicit competitive bids for both types of road surfacing, portland cement and asphalt paving. I sincerely regret that the rule for this bill does not permit me to offer this amendment, which I believe might save us untold millions of dollars in the interstate highway program.

In my own State of Massachusetts, Mr. Chairman, we recently completed a 123-mile turnpike using asphalt paving. Our saving over concrete was $15,181,335—the asphalt price was about $10½ million, while concrete would have cost us $25½ million.

Let me cite some other recent cases in which asphalt has saved the taxpayers many millions of dollars:

First. Kansas Turnpike: Engineering decision was made to use asphalt paving on 181 miles of the 236-mile toll road at an estimated saving of $3 million. No alternate bids were asked.

Second. New Hampshire Turnpike: Alternate bids were asked on this 14.7-mile toll road. Concrete bid was $6,474,809.50 and low asphalt bid was $5,233,675.50, for a saving of $1,241,134 with asphalt. This set the pattern for other New Hampshire turnpikes.

Third. New Jersey Turnpike: Alternate bids were asked on the 117.6-mile toll road. Concrete bids totaled $45,729,568 and low asphalt bids totaled $40,272,434 for an asphalt saving of $5,457,134. This set pattern for Garden State Parkway.

Fourth. Turner Turnpike, Oklahoma: Alternate bids were asked on this 88-mile toll road. Low concrete bids totaled $10,452,484 and asphalt bids totaled $9,291,364 for an asphalt saving of $1,161,120. The 88-mile extension automatically designated asphalt.

Fifth. Connecticut Expressway: Engineering decision was made to pave western 68 miles of this 130-mile superhighway with concrete and the eastern 62 miles with asphalt. Only first section on western end was opened to competitive bidding with low concrete bid for the 3-mile stretch $5,006,411; low asphalt bid was $4,728,527—a saving of $277,884 with asphalt on a stretch of 3 miles. Decision to pave with concrete on this end determined by large number of structures requiring use of concrete.

Sixth. Maine Turnpike: Alternate bids were asked on this, the first of the major asphalt turnpikes and the first turnpike project to be built with private investment funds. Low bid for concrete was $5,785,369.50; for asphalt, $4,812,-624.50—a saving of $972,745 with asphalt.

Seventh. Richmond-Petersburg, Va., Turnpike: First section on which alternate bids were asked was awarded to asphalt on basis of low bid, $4.02 per square yard for asphalt against $5.65 per square yard for concrete. This represents a saving of $50,700 over a 36-mile distance if full turnpike is paved with asphalt, as expected.

Eighth. West Virginia Turnpike: Alternate bids were asked on the first 20-mile section of this 87.6-mile toll road. Low concrete bid was $4,386,690 and low asphalt bid was $3,502,090. The demonstrated saving of $884,600 failed to influence officials who awarded the construction to concrete anyway.

Ninth. Sunshine State Parkway, Florida: This 386.5-mile toll road was designated for asphalt on basis of known savings and speed of construction.

Now there may be cases, Mr. Chairman, in which portland cement surfacings will be more economical. In that case the award should certainly go to cement. But the taxpayers are certainly entitled to the least expensive paving whenever possible.

I understand that in the past there has been dispute over the comparative quality and durability of portland cement versus asphalt paving. In this regard I wish to include at this point a letter from C. D. Curtiss, Commissioner of Public Roads, addressed to Senator FRANCIS CASE, which appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 28, 1957. This letter indicates the feeling of the Bureau that both surfacings are of high quality and that annual maintenance costs are reasonably close:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS,
Washington, D.C., July 15, 1957.

HON. FRANCIS CASE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR CASE: Your letter of June 12, 1957, with an enclosed letter of June 4 to you and a brochure on highway construction from the Asphalt Institute, has been read with interest.

We are aware of the concentrated efforts being made by advocates for the uses of various types of construction, construction materials, and construction equipment, in competition with others, and claims made of advantages or cost savings, one over the other. This is to be expected as a result of the exercise of free enterprise.

The subject submission concerns itself principally with comparisons between asphaltic concrete and portland cement concrete pavements. Excellent surfaces may be constructed of either bituminous concrete, or portland cement concrete, and there is considerable value in having the two types actively in competition.

In either case it is highly important that consideration be given to climatic conditions, subgrade soil, availability and suitability of materials, character of traffic, and other contributing factors in determining the type or types considered by engineering judgment to be the best suited to the given conditions with resultant overall economy.

As highway work is regularly awarded to contract only after public advertisement and competitive bidding, the ranges of bids received serve as a fair measure of the cost variations whether the bid invitation is on a selected type or on alternate types. These bid cost variations often represent greater difference than cost advantage differences claimed by the advocates of either type of pavement.

The actual service lives of bituminous and portland cement pavements are not the same nationwide, nor are the maintenance costs the same nationally. The true measure of cost is the annual cost arrived at by dividing the first cost plus maintenance cost by the number of years that the pavement provides a satisfactory road surface. There is considerable difference of opinion between proponents of the two types of pavements as to which has the lower annual cost because of differences in the method of calculating these costs. In general, it may be said that under comparable service conditions, and with comparable designs, the annual costs of the two types are reasonably close. We do not have available conclusive evidence that would justify taking any other position than this on a question which has long been of interest and concern to engineers.

We are not unmindful of the responsibility of public officials entrusted with the improvement of our highway system, to exercise every equitable means toward realizing the utmost economy in that accomplishment.

This Bureau's policy has been one of neutrality on pavement types, bridge types, and various other competing types of highway construction, accepting either one or another when of comparable design, but reserving this right to require adequate design of the type or types chosen, and that where comparable types are bid in competition, the award be made to the lowest bidder.

The asphalt industry has given us assurance that it now has, and will continue to provide, ample capacity to supply the types of bituminous products currently in demand and as anticipated to meet future demands for accomplishment of a long-range highway program. Assurances have been given similarly by other producers of materials required for highway construction.

We are convinced that continued use of competitive construction types, construction materials, construction equipment, and construction bidding will result in the most economic accomplishment of the long-range highway program and utilize the highway dollars provided in the best public interest.

Sincerely yours,

C. D. CURTISS,
Commissioner of Public Roads.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BALDWIN].

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 8678.

Mr. Chairman, I think we should go back and review the reason that Congress in 1956 felt that the creation of a Federal interstate highway program on an emergency basis was an absolute must. We recognized at that time that our highway needs had fallen far behind. We had gone through a period at that time when we could not keep our highways abreast of the additional traffic. We had gone through a period of expansion after World War II when we were constructing motor vehicles in great quantities and the highways were not prepared for the great burst and explosion of additional highway traffic.

There is not a man or woman in this Chamber right now who has not had the experience in his own State of being caught in a line of traffic on a two-lane highway where there had been a crash up ahead and having to wait in line for an hour or two until the crash could be cleaned off the road and the accident cleared up. That was the reason why we authorized this program as an emergency program in 1956. It was to try to keep these highways abreast of the additional traffic. This year there will be 6 million additional automobiles sold in this country. Part of them will be replacement automobiles, but many of them will be new cars on the highway. Constituents of all of us are going to lose their lives this year because of inadequate roads, we are going to have more constituents injured because of inadequate roads. This year we will probably have 38,000 people killed, and well over a millon people injured in automobile accidents. Who can measure the cost of those people who are killed or injured because of our inadequate roads?

The statistics show that when we build four-lane highways, with controlled access and divided center lines, the accident rate goes down from one-half to two-thirds. So we are saving the lives of thousands of people, we are preventing people from going through life without an arm or a leg from some motor casualty.

That is the reason for this emergency program and that reason has not changed one bit since 1956. We are going to see, and the statistics show, that when we eliminate the stop lights, and where we have no intersections, only overpasses and underpasses, and we make it unnecessary for motor vehicles to stop, we are going to save lives, we are going to save costs in gasoline consumed while cars are waiting for a change of light so that they can go again, we are going to save in accident insurance by reducing the number of casualties that occur on the highways. This is just as real today, just as needed today as it was in 1956.

There is only one alternative to the passing of this bill, and that is to allow this program to come to a complete stop for at least 9 months. I do not think there are many Members in this room who actually want to see this program come to a complete stop. The people of this country have become aware of this need, the State highway departments have put on additional engineers to meet the needs of a bill we passed in 1956, and it would not be fair to those highway departments to say to them: "You put on additional engineers that we asked you to do, but now they are not going to have anything to do for 9 months because we do not want to finance the program we authorized."

That is the issue, and I think we should meet it face to face by passing this bill.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMONDSON].

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Chairman, I am quite aware of the blood and the sweat and tears that have gone into this proposition when it was considered by the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Public Works. As a matter of fact, I have shed some myself as a member of the Committee on Public Works.

I think at this stage in today's debate you could safely say that the understatement of the day was made by the distinguished and able chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means when he said this bill was brought forth most reluctantly.

It is brought forth only because of a conviction in two committees that it is the only way this road program can be carried forward. What has not been elaborated upon here on this floor but what is a cardinal truth in connection with this bill is the simple fact that this is the only way to get a bill for one reason, and one reason only, and that is that in the White House, in the administration, there is a flat and absolute refusal to consider any other approach to this problem. Make no mistake about that. Every attempt that has been made by the Committee on Ways and Means to explore other approaches to this problem, through excise tax diversion, through a bond issue which anticipates an increase in the trust fund later on, each and every attempt to meet this problem by other ways than dipping into the pocket of Mr. John Q. Public has been met with adamant refusal by the White House. This is an Eisenhower tax increase upon the gasoline users of this country.

From the very first consideration of this measure, since last January, the administration has been saying: We want a 1½ cent further gas tax increase and we want it for 5 years.

Had the Ways and Means Committee followed the recommendation of this administration, they would be loading upon the motorists of this Nation $3,400 million more over the next 5 years than is being loaded on them by this bill.

And, only because of this adamant refusal over in the White House to consider any other approach to the problem is it necessary to vote today as we do. So, let it be made clear and let it be unmistakable that this is an Eisenhower tax increase upon the motorists and the highway users of this Nation, and it is the President and his administration who have made it imperative that we do it. This comes as the second great declaration of Republican policy to confront our visitor from over in the Kremlin. Yesterday we had policy No. 1: No new starts to meet the great problems of natural resource development in this country. That was policy No. 1 of this administration. Today we get policy No. 2, and that policy is tax the little fellow to pay the bills of the country. No matter what the other approach might be, no matter what other approaches we might have to finance this program, the administration has said we want to take it out of the motorists' pockets. And, the administration has said that in spite of the fact that today $1.5 billion of highway user taxes are going over into the general fund, in spite of the fact that the general fund tapped the trust fund to the extent of $1.95 billion back in 1956 and 1957 to pay old general fund highway obligations. In spite of these truths, the administration has said, "You cannot come to the general fund and reimburse the trust fund. You must put additional taxes on the people who drive on the highways."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I cannot go along on that approach. I honor and respect the Members who are going along with it, because I know they do it in good conscience and because they are meeting what appears to be a stone wall over in the administration that makes any other approach apparently impossible, but I, for one, cannot go along with it. I drove to a filling station this morning. I paid 30.9 cents a gallon for gas, and 9 cents of that 30.9 was for gasoline tax. That is too high a tax, and no more should be levied.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I was shocked to hear the speech, or the tirade, just recently delivered on the floor, in complete disregard for the facts of the case, in complete disregard for the committee report of what the facts in this issue are. The attempt to place it on a basis of party politics to me is quite shocking.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple issue, as a matter of fact. It is a question of where do we get the money, because the Congress, to a large extent, is responsible for the actual situation we are in today. We accelerated this highway program by about $1.6 billion in 1958. There are some of us who want highways, and I am among those who do, but who voted against the conference report in 1958, because we did not have the money.

Now, here is the situation. If we want to buy all of these fine things for our people, we have got to pay for them. Now, we cannot pay for them temporarily or postpone bills by issuing Government bonds. We have before us right now the problem we are facing on debt management, and from that side of the aisle, to all those who vote to spend and spend and spend, I say we now are at the point where we have to figure out how we are going to pay for it. The same gentlemen who voted for that are the ones who say we do not want to pay high interest. Yet it is because of the fact that we have been financing these programs through bonds through deficit financing that we have this high interest. So, we cannot do it in that fashion. We cannot issue more bonds because we are having a difficult time even marketing the bonds that we have to float now. There is only one other way, and that is to raise taxes. And, I want to say this to the members of the committee, that we are reaching the point—and this is Democrats as well as Republicans who have dug into these fiscal affairs who are telling you this, from your own side, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means—where our tax rate and our tax structure is so high now that it is badly eroding the private economy, which, after all, is the main sources of taxes. So, we are in a position where even now it is a question whether we should raise taxes. And, I sympathize with those who say if we raise more taxes through the gasoline tax, that it is a dangerous thing. That is so because our tax rate is already so high, but even more dangerous is the use of bonds.

There were only about 30 of us who stood up and warned on that point in 1958. Now we have to figure out how to pay for it. I, along with some others on the Committee on Ways and Means, voted for almost everything we could think of as a possible way of financing this ill-advised expenditure. But I want to warn on another matter. We are only solving a temporary problem, with this 1-cent tax for a period of 22 months. We are waiting until the 1961 report comes to the Committee on Public Works for a thorough study of the expenditure side of this program, to find out just what in the name of Heaven we are going to do.

If it is going to cost us $35 billion for 40,000 miles of highway instead of $25 billion that we financed and set it up for, maybe our people do want the $35 billion worth of roads. But if they do we are going to have to figure out how we are going to pay for it, or maybe the people will say we had better stretch this out or cut it out. But that problem we are not solving here today. We are only solving an immediate problem to finance the contracts for which we have already committed ourselves and to avoid the economic damage of cutting back completely a program that has already started.

If we do nothing here today not only will we default on $250 million of commitments, but we will cut the program back for a period of 9 or 10 months when nothing will be done. That will produce economic waste and economic damage.

So we will solve our temporary problem by enacting this bill today and for that reason I urge its adoption. But let no one think that we are solving the real problem. The real problem is still to face us. We are going to have to get this thing on an intelligent, pay-as-you-go basis, in my judgment.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. SCHERER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMONDSON] bitterly attacked the President's position. Has not the President retreated considerably from his position in this matter? The gasoline tax only goes for 22 months and will raise only $1 billion, whereas he agreed to transfer from the general fund excise taxes in the amount of $2.5 billion?

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. The gentleman is entirely right. And, furthermore, the President's position was only that we should get the revenue.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BARING].

Mr. BARING. Mr. Chairman, I was happy to hear the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMONDSON] finally blow the top off this debate. I have listened to some pretty mild remarks from both sides for the past 2 hours and I do not think we have even touched the issue until this time. I think that we should not kill the thief but take care of our money.

Why are we considering an increase in the gasoline tax? Where is the money that was in the highway fund? I'll tell you where it has gone.

There have been vast expenditures and expensive real estate deals through the very centers of towns as small as Reno, Nev., and there have been expensive interchanges in cities and towns and elaborate superstructures and bridges that could be avoided by proper planning. There have been tremendously high administrative costs excessive to any reasonable requirement. The President warned against expensive real estate deals, and still that is exactly what is happening today. That is where the money has gone, and that is why we are here today arguing this bill.

It is about time Congress should look over the shoulder of the Bureau of Public Roads, Bertram Tallamy and Frank Turner, to see what they are doing.

I am telling you that there is going to be a complete investigation not only in the State of Nevada, where we have already had a bitter 3-year fight, where they tried to build a Chinese wall through the center of our little town at a cost of $50 million—$50 million, gentlemen, for 4½ miles of elevated jungle. That would be nearly $10½ million per mile. The people of Reno do not want it. Eighty percent of the citizens signed petitions saying that they would rather not have any freeway at all than to have the town ruined. And why was this forced upon them? Because the Bureau of Public Roads told the board of county commissioners that they had to take a route leading to the center of Reno or have no Federal funds at all. I have telegrams signed by Frank Turner and two other Bureau engineers to prove it.

And let me remind the Congress that this happened 4 months before a public hearing was held. Part of this route was actually approved by the Bureau of Public Roads before the hearing. All this is in violation of the Federal law. But there have been further violations, not only in Reno but all over the country. In Reno there was no consideration by State or Federal officials of the economic impact on the community.

The people of Reno are fighting mad. I have had letters and telegrams from Omaha, from San Francisco, and from Sacramento, I know of a scandalous situation in New York and New Jersey that definitely should be investigated. Henry Such Smith, who has proposed the revitalization of route No. 22 in New Jersey and the Liberty Bridge across Upper New York Bay, says in this connection:

> Lack of public attention and effective means to cope with misleading or fraudulent reporting of technical and economic fact by constituted authorities and their consultants is the greatest single threat to our economy, our children, and our national security.

The entire situation approaches a national scandal and I hope that this Congress, through the Committee on Public Works, that has set up a special subcommittee to look into these matters, will make a thorough study of the activities of the Bureau of Public Roads. The people of this country are entitled to know how their money is being spent. They are taxpayers and they have to pay for all this. This is not a matter of party politics. Let us get down and clean house.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARING. I yield.

Mr. SCHERER. Does the gentleman realize that the Bureau of Public Roads only carries out the laws that this Congress enacts and that it is actually the State highway departments themselves who construct these roads and determine where they go?

Mr. BARING. The State highway departments and the Bureau of Public Roads are in cahoots all the way across the Nation.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMSON].

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, continuation of the highway program and the deficiency in the highway trust fund is not a problem that suddenly confronts us, even though it is just now coming to a real showdown. In 1958, when the temporary acceleration of the program was passed, the thinking person knew that this was going to push us into a deficiency. It is unfortunate, in my estimation, that those who pushed the depression panic button for what were, in a large measure, political purposes, a year ago prevailed.

Those of us who voted against the conference report last year which did this might well take the position that we did not contribute to the situation, so we can with good conscience vote against this bill and say that any effect as far as continuing of the highway program is no fault of ours. In this I cannot agree. The fact is that the action was taken by a majority vote of the Congress. That is water over the dam.

For the same reasons that I have voted to increase the debt ceiling, I propose to take responsible action as far as this problem is concerned. I believe in the necessity of the basic highway program, including the Interstate System, and the benefits that will accrue from it. To allow this program to disintegrate would be a national error.

It would be contrary to the public interest. We do have a present need for improved highways. Besides keeping faith with the contractors and other suppliers who have made their plans, in response to the projected program, a widely fluctuating level of construction would, in the long run, be more expensive to the taxpayer and contrary to the public interest.

In the national interest, we must have a highway program continued at a suitable level. I agree generally with the provisions of the bill, as to the level of the program. This will provide for a program over the next 4 years at an approximately level of $2 billion per year.

I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ALGER] that we should fully investigate the operations of the program. I have been concerned about this for some time. As a matter of fact, it was discussed by many of us out of order in one of the recent meetings of the full Appropriations Committee. I am convinced that there has been widespread extravagance, and perhaps even mismanagement of funds. This must be eliminated.

That is not a solution, however. We must still have the expenditures at least at the level provided in this bill, to provide an adequate system of highways within a reasonable time, even if such abuses are corrected.

This must be financed from current revenues. I am unalterably opposed to further deficit spending by any name—front door, back door, or side door, or by revenue bonds or any other name that you call it, unless the needs for national security should change.

From the time that the President's message was presented last January, I took the position that we could, if we had the political courage, provide for adequate highways and other necessary and proper functions of Government without increasing taxes or resorting to deficit spending, by a third method of reducing spending for general governmental purposes in areas where there was excessive spending.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee of the House, I worked hard and long to bring this about. The efforts of the majority of the committee with the same purpose in mind resulted in substantial reductions in spending, which would have made this possible. This is true although in many instances we have appropriated more than myself and the majority of Republicans would have preferred.

In spite of the spender efforts by some Members of this body, and altogether too often on close votes, the action of the committee was generally sustained on the House floor. Even when the phony cuts are eliminated, the total cuts amounted to $1,471 million, and even after increased back-door spending, over which the Appropriations Committee has no control, of $150 million, is considered, there is still a net reduction of $1,321 million, or almost three times the amount required for an adequate highway program without an increase in taxes.

Unfortunately, the other body did not show the same responsibility. They not only wiped out all of the House cuts, but went way over the budget requests, when the same adjustments are made.

The House conferees worked hard to bring this under control, but even after the conferences reported, we end up about even, on paper, and after the phony cuts are taken into consideration, we are over the budget requests by $1 billion or more.

So, unfortunately, with this action, and with the action of the President in picking the wrong appropriation bills to veto, the method by which our highway problems should really be solved—by reduced spending—is no longer possible. I will set this situation out in detail later, if time permits.

We must, therefore, increase taxes if we are to avoid deficit spending and still have the highway program. I am prepared to do this, in the hopes that it will provide the means of pointing out to the majority of the American people what is being done to them in the name of being done for them. I still, however, do not agree with the method of financing and the tax increases provided in this bill. I regret that the rule under which we are considering this bill does not permit the offering of amendments to change this.

In my opinion, we should vote a general tax increase, if the majority of Congress insists on raising taxes instead of reducing spending in other areas. I think it should be a general tax increase, because taxes collected from highway users on gasoline and other excise taxes already exceed the total outlay for all highways by $1.5 billion. The excess spending that is causing the deficit is in other areas, and it should be financed by general taxes. As I have sometimes put it, what we need is an antidiversion policy with respect to all highway revenues.

I believe the argument that excise taxes and gasoline taxes should pay for part of the cost of general government—by being diverted to the general fund—and all of the cost of highways, is unfair. I believe there are general public benefits from highways and if the users pay for all of the cost of the highways, they have done enough.

The fact that the highway users will pay excise taxes totaling $74 billion over the life of the program contemplated by the Highway Act of 1956, and that only a part is allocated to the highway trust fund, should, I think, carry great weight as the House deliberates what action should be taken. I think the chairman of the committee, Mr. MILLS, was right when he stated that this is a matter that needs to be given consideration before any further burden is put on those highway users who are already helping to finance the highway program.

As a matter of fact, as a member of the House Appropriations Committee, I asked Secretary of the Treasury Robert Anderson on January 21 questions with respect to the highway trust fund.

I asked that the total revenue that comes from the highway users be supplied for the record, and Secretary Anderson answered:

> You have about $1,170 billion on passenger automobiles and you have automobiles and trucks, parts and accessories, but they are in the budget sheets. For that particular item there is no gross sum. I will be glad to supply it.

The data supplied shows:

> Receipts of taxes on gasoline, diesel fuel, tires and tubes, tread rubber, the use tax on certain vehicles, and trucks (50 percent) which were transferred to the highway trust funds in the fiscal year 1958 amounted to $2,116 million. Other taxes associated with automotive products—the taxes on passenger automobiles, parts and accessories for automobiles, lubricating oils, and trucks (50 percent)—all of which have been in effect for many years, yielded $1,510 million.

This is a total of $3,610 million, and far exceeds the amount required for the highway program.

It is unconscionable to me that the motorist pays $3.6 billion in specific Federal automotive taxes when only $2.1 billion actually goes toward highway construction. If the remaining $1.5 billion which is now diverted for other purposes were rightfully spent for highway construction, it would keep the highway construction program on schedule.

The general fund gets 40 percent of automotive excise taxes now, which, in my opinion, is wildly excessive. This is why I stated during the House Appropriations Committee hearings after Secretary Anderson had given me the figures on the taxes, that "in 1956 when the Highway Act was passed, it was thought that we would be collecting this year $3.183 billion. Even before the passage of that act, we were diverting these revenues to general governmental purposes. I hate to balance a budget by increasing taxes. I think that we need an antidiversion amendment."

Some very responsible people, whose judgment I highly respect, have opposed me in this position by saying that gasoline taxes and automobile excise taxes have historically contributed to the general revenues and should continue to do so. I cannot agree with them in this respect. As a matter of fact, if you really want to go into history, highways were originally built from general funds. Although the Federal highway aid program began in 1916, it was not until 1956 that we, in the 84th Congress, established the policy that users should pay the bill, by establishing the trust fund. Although a good argument can be made for building at least a portion of them from general funds, I still believe that users should pay the total cost.

There are general public benefits from good roads other than the benefits to the highway users. A businessman may not own a car or truck, but his customers come to him over the roads. An individual citizen may not own an automobile, but the necessities of life may move to him over the highways, the economy of his community is stronger and his community is a better place in which to live by reason of good roads, and he probably will not have to look too far to see where his own job is directly related to the road network.

If there is any doubt in our minds about the general public benefits, look at the statement in the 1956 act:

> There shall be designated within the continental United States a national system of interstate and defense highways.

Defense is certainly in the public interest, and should be supported from general, rather than special, revenues.

Just to keep our history record straight, of course, the first Federal tax on gasoline was imposed long before 1956, in the year 1932, at a rate of 1 cent per gallon. Here, though, lies another reason why I question the advisability of the temporary increase in motor fuel taxes to solve our present problems. That 1932 tax was a temporary emergency tax to balance the budget for one year, and went to the general fund. Each increase was for an emergency. Temporary taxes, though, have a habit of becoming permanent.

The argument that excise taxes on vehicles, parts, lubricating oil and fuel should contribute to the general revenues because other excise taxes go to general revenues, will not stand up. General public benefits from roads more than offset any such contribution that might be claimed, and if the highway users pay all of the bills for constructing the roads, that is enough.

This amounts to a Federal antidiversion policy, and I would like to call the attention of the Members to the fact that the general public support of this principle has been quite conclusively proved. Twenty-seven States have provided for antidiversion of highway revenues by constitutional amendment. This usually involves a vote of the people. Many other States follow such a policy by legislative action. I think we can be reasonably assured that if we want to represent the majority of the people, we will adhere to such a policy at the Federal level.

I further believe that we are very close to reaching the point of diminishing returns as far as increased revenues from increased motor fuel taxes are concerned. This House is well aware of the substantial movement to the small cars, and particularly the small foreign cars. It is generally agreed that a strong motivating force behind this has been the effort to get more miles to the gallon because of the increased cost of gasoline. Further incentive to move in this direction can only reduce the tax take from highway users, but even beyond that, it might well affect the income tax from American producers and American wage earners. Still further, it could become a real threat to our economy.

When I mention cost of gasoline, I think we must recognize the general public resentment for this situation. There has been altogether too much success in making the oil industry and the service station operator the whipping boy. One of these days, the American public is going to realize the true culprit is taxes, both Federal and State, and those in Congress will be required to bear their share of the rightful blame.

At the refinery, a gallon of gasoline sells for an average price of 11.07 cents. The average tax is 9.12 cents, or 82.38 percent of the total cost. If you make the tax 10.12 cents by adding 1 cent to the Federal tax, the gasoline tax would approach a 100 percent tax. Do the motorists in your district realize this, and if not, what will be their reaction when they do?

As a matter of fact, the return to the producer for finding, developing, and lifting to the surface a gallon of crude oil is roughly the same as the Federal tax on a gallon of lubricating oil, or the Federal and State tax on a gallon of gasoline. To heap additional taxes upon the users of this commodity is, to me, unconscionable.

Let us not forget that the States have some very real tax problems. In spite of the percentage distribution of costs on the Interstate System, the States are expending substantial sums on highways and streets, and have increased requirements. Several suggestions have been made for turning revenues over to the States to meet their problems. It hardly seems proper for us to further tax motor fuels, a traditional area of State taxation, when part of the revenue is in fact going for general support of the Federal Government.

Finally, I agree with the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that after providing in the 1956 Highway Act for a study of the relative benefits which will accrue to the various user and nonuser beneficiaries of the highways, as a basis for determining the proper share of the costs to be borne by such beneficiaries, it would be untimely to increase the share of the user until the study has been completed.

Until that study is completed, or at least better facts are presented than have been to date, I will continue to support an antidiversion policy.

In the meantime, I think it is unfortunate that we are forced to vote to raise taxes on gasoline and motor fuel to provide the money for excessive spending in other areas.

One of the bills which should have been vetoed was the Health, Education, and Welfare bill, which was $259 million over the budget requests for this year alone. That will be a built-in increase in next year's budget, for it will be the basis of the request. That this has been going on is proven by the fact that the Health, Education, and Welfare money bills have increased from an appropriation of $1.7 billion in fiscal year 1951 to almost $3.5 billion for this fiscal year.

Because the majority of the Democrat Party refuses to come to grips with the farm problem, the cost of the Agriculture Department's programs has increased from $736 million in fiscal year 1951 to $4 billion this year. It is programs such as these that need to be studied with an eye to cutting down on bureaucratic irresponsibility.

What I refer to as a phony cut in an appropriation act is a cut in an item on which the spending is already authorized by Congress and sufficient funds were not provided to cover the bills as they became due. The phony cuts to which I referred earlier are these:

Department of Agriculture and Farm Credit Administration Appropriation Act: Commodity Credit Corporation: Restoration of capital impairment	$100,000,000
Department of Commerce and Related Agencies Appropriation Act: Maritime activities, operating-differential subsidies	1,250,000
Independent Offices Appropriation Act:
Civil Aeronautics Board, payments to air carriers	4,118,000
Federal Aviation Agency: Grants-in-aid for airports (liquidation of contract authorization)	2,500,000
Housing and Home Finance Agency: Annual contributions, Public Housing Administration	4,000,000
Veterans' Administration: Compensation and pensions	7,000,000
Taken from Defense Production Act funds (stock funds)	179,000,000
Development Loan Fund advance request by President for fiscal year 1961	500,000,000
Total	797,868,000

The increase in backdoor spending to which I referred in the amount of $150 million is $100 million for veterans' housing direct loans, and $50 million increased spending for public housing.

Taken together, these total $947,868,000. Apply these to the tables appearing daily on the back page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, after eliminating the supplemental appropriations, and you will see why we are approximately $1 billion over the budget.

That is why we must have additional revenues to finance the highways. I still insist, though, that we have gone over in other areas. We collect more than enough from the highway users to pay for the highway program. What we should follow is an antidiversion policy with regard to highway revenues, and if the majority are going to insist on these other programs that really throw the budget out of balance, then we ought to vote a general tax increase to pay the bills.

I would like to see this put to a test vote. Unfortunately, this bill does not permit doing such. Although I dislike being "boxed in," so to speak, I think that the highway program is of such importance and I am so opposed to deficit spending that I think we must pass this bill as a temporary means of continuing the program at a suitable level. Because the bill does not really take care of the situation for anything more than twenty-two months, next year we will have the same problem before us. At that time, I hope we can take more appropriate action.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KNOX].

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, there is possibly little left to be said that has not already been said as far as the need for this legislation. It is necessary so our Interstate Highway System and our ABC roads may proceed as Congress had intended. I regret the statement that was made by my good friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma. The gentleman in his statement certainly endeavored to shift the duty and the responsibility of the Congress by implying that this was an Eisenhower tax program. May I say this legislation is here today as a creature of the Congress—caused by the Congress and voted for by the Congress. It is our creature—we created it. In our creation of this problem, we incurred an additional expense that must be paid by the people of this Nation in expediting highway development in the 1958 Highway Act. As a consequence we are today faced with the problem of providing the necessary funds in order to continue the program. Some might say what we should do is to issue highway bonds and put this program on a bond financing basis over the period of time involved in the development of the Interstate System. I want to say to you in all earnestness that this program must be taken care of by current taxation, if we expect that we are going to be able to continue to meet our obligations. Just a few days ago, the Committee on Ways and Means was informed by the Bureau of the Budget that in accordance with the commitments the Congress has made, you are not going to have a $77 billion budget in 1960, but you are going to have an $80 billion budget. If things continue at the same rate as commitments have been made and there is not some contraction in Federal spending, we will have an $82 billion to $83 billion budget in 1961. So, therefore, how are we going to be able to divert those funds from the general fund, as provided in this legislation, and meet the obligations that we, the Congress, have incurred? This is our responsibility and we certainly should have the moral courage to pass this legislation. I might say I am just as allergic to new taxes as any Member of this House. I do not like new taxes, but I will say this. I will support new taxes when the Congress has obligated the administration to the expenditure of funds beyond the revenues that are available in order to meet the problem.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNOX. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. I know the gentleman's position in opposition to the annual multi-billion-dollar foreign-aid program. Does the gentleman know how many hundred of miles of highways we have built in foreign countries?

Mr. KNOX. I cannot give you the number of miles, but I do know we have built and extended many highways in foreign countries. I am sure that the careful study the gentleman has made of foreign aid that he probably is aware of the answer to his question.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman know of any gasoline tax that has been levied from which to obtain those funds?

Mr. KNOX. There have been no gasoline taxes levied on foreign nationals to pay for the roads paid for by foreign-aid funds.

Mr. GROSS. Those funds come out of the general funds of the U.S. Teasury; do they not?

Mr. KNOX. That is correct.

Mr. GROSS. So the talk this afternoon about the irresponsibility of going to the Federal Treasury applies only to highway projects in this country; does it not?

Mr. KNOX. The gentleman possibly is aware of the fact that I have not supported the foreign-aid program.

Mr. GROSS. Yes, I said so in the beginning and I want to compliment the gentleman for that position.

Mr. KNOX. And I want to make it clear also that while I do not favor additional taxes, I do believe it is essential that we continue our highway program with the framework of fiscal responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I commend the members of the Committee on Public Works and the Committee on Ways and Means for bringing to the floor of the Congress what appears to be a temporary solution of the dilemma in which we find ourselves on our interstate highway program. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means said he was bringing this legislation forward most reluctantly. Let me add, I am supporting it most reluctantly.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the Congress made a mistake in 1956 by not setting up a national board to control the allocation and the selection of these interstate highway routes throughout the Nation. Let me tell you a little of what is going on over in my State.

The State highway commission, the Bureau of Public Roads said, had the privilege of selecting where the route should be. In my State of West Virginia our State roads commission is seriously considering building a four-lane interstate highway through our State capital city with a population of 100,000 in which they will be forced to move 1,400 residential and business properties. It is estimated that the cost will run $36 million more than if they use a bypass choice of highway route instead of cutting it through the capital city of the State of West Virginia.

I could go on and give you numerous other instances that are happening and show you what we are doing. We have turned the management of this program over to a bunch of statehouse politicians and fat-cat real estate dealers in every State. It ought to be run by the Congress and not by the chamber of commerce. I hope that at the next session of Congress we will set up some kind of national board to control those situations.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. FALLON. May I say we have set up two special committees to investigate the very things the gentleman mentioned.

Mr. BAILEY. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time merely to express the appreciation of the members on the minority side of the Public Works Committee for the cooperation we received and the very intelligent way in which this legislation has been handled by the majority not only in the Public Works Committee but also in the Ways and Means Committee. They have brought to the floor of the House a bill that does not please everybody, but it is the result of a great deal of study, a great deal of time and thought, and I think the majority party is to be complimented on the bill they have produced.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I, too, am for the continuing of the great highway program. However I believe a 1-cent increase in gas tax would be most unfair to the highway users for two reasons. First, the highway users are already contributing more than their share. Second, we would be invading the field of the States in the taxing area. Where else can the States raise their share of the money?

I have voted against most of the subsidies proposed so far in this session of Congress. Had we removed or reduced these subsidies we would have plenty of money for our road program. Our money subsidizes roads, bridges, and public works in countries all over the world. I favor keeping some of this money here and build our highways instead of raising the tax.

My votes in this session show that I believe in policy.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes, the remainder of my time, to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ALGER].

Mr. ALGER. Mr. Chairman, fiscal responsibility can be measured not only by a balanced budget but in taxpayers getting their money's worth. There is no certainty in my mind, as there should be when increasing taxes, that, in view of increasing highway expenditures and estimates, the people are getting their money's worth in our new gigantic highway program, and that therefore higher taxes are in order.

My views on this subject are contained in the report on page 33. There is the general statement, supplemental view, separate views, and minority views, and all of these recognize the need for a continued program of highway construction. Everyone is for highways. I wrote the minority views, yet I am wholeheartedly for highways.

Simply stated, I want more for our money. My views result from my belief in the pay-as-you-go principle, and I was among those recommending this action when the present program was conceived, as a member of the Subcommittee and Committee on Public Works responsible for the expanded interstate program. Further, I believe in a balanced budget and fiscal responsibility, with a voting record to match.

Then, why oppose the tax increase since I believe in pay as you go and a balanced budget? I am opposed to the tax increase because I do not believe we are getting our money's worth. The very reason that the program is out of kilter this year is because of the antirecession spending speedup last year, which, then, I heartily opposed. The antirecession spenders recommended hurried highway contracting, but failed to provide the necessary revenue to pay for it. It was no secret then, nor is it now, that increased spending requires increased revenue and that you do not solve problems, including that of unemployment, by throwing Federal money at it. Nor was it a secret then that increased spending would require increased revenue. The success of the antirecession spenders, who failed to think about the necessary revenue, is the reason we are here now. Worse still is the inevitable result that in hurried spending, waste, mistakes, and indeed, windfalls will result, all resulting in the taxpayers not getting their money's worth.

The staggering increase of estimated cost in the interstate program of almost $12 billion in 2 years is reason enough for our demanding an accounting now, not later. Highway construction is nothing new to government at all levels, and errors, if any, for incorrect computation, should not be of such magnitude.

Or again, why did costs increase 12 percent between 1954 and mid-1956 while this great program was being shaped here in congressional committees—see House Document No. 300, 85th Congress—A Report of Factors for Use in Apportioning Funds for the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways? Why have wages gone up 5 to 7 percent under Davis-Bacon? How much has utility relocation reimbursements cost, and should this be continued or repealed? Why should the 90–10 Federal-State matching ratio result in right-of-way purchase windfalls? Why indeed should any waste or inefficiency be tolerated? Why should we rush to cover up such errors wherever they are by saddling more taxes on the taxpayer without first a detailed accounting by the Bureau of Public Roads, who should be riding herd on the States.

Yes; I am uncertain concerning the "whys" of soaring expenditures in highways and to my knowledge so are many others on the committee and of those who testified before our committee.

I, for one, will not condone or cover up uneconomical practices, nor will I assume that they are not there when hastily we decide it is easier not to analyze the cost, just up the ante of the taxpayers.

Nor should my position give any comfort to the big spenders. My position is based, as it always has been, on reduced Government spending for less essential items. When faced with Government spending programs, we must either increase taxes or reduce costs, that is, get more for our money. I am against raising taxes and for reducing the spending in less essential areas, and, most of all, for demanding our money's worth through sober study and analysis, not through hasty action.

Therefore, I propose, as found on page 35 of the minority views, these steps of action:

First. The Congress should make a careful analysis of all highway costs, particularly all cost increases. Why, for example, was there a 12-percent cost increase in interstate highways between 1954 and 1956?

Second. We should pay out of the Treasury whatever sum is necessary to make good all existing contracts. Congress must cutback on less essential expenditures.

Third. If additional revenues are required, the appropriateness of greater utilization of existing highway-user taxes for highway purposes should be considered; this should be conditioned on a lower level of general Government expenditures. In essence taxing is the expedient way; achieving lower costs is the hard but proper way.

Fourth. The Nation's road needs should be revalued on a priority basis. For example: Only highways having a traffic count beyond 5,000 or 6,000 vehicles per day should have priority to become multilane—others can be postponed; in actual construction, the basic engineering and geometric design can be accomplished now with the frills added later.

Fifth. We should budget by a yardstick of the dollar amount rather than mileage.

Sixth. We should change the 90–10 Federal-State ratio to 75–25 or some other ratio providing greater State participation in the cost of highway development. This would improve administration and construction efficiency and would tend to reduce costs attributable to right-of-way acquisitions.

Seventh. Study should be given to the implications of repeal of the Davis-Bacon wage-setting provision which has resulted in an arbitrary increase of wages of 5 to 7 percent.

Eighth. Study should be made of the implications of leaving to State determination the assumption of costs of utility relocation.

Ninth. Study should be given to a possible stretchout of the program.

In summary, I believe that providing more money at this time to continue possible wastefulness and an unsound program is wrong. The time to investigate is precisely when mistakes and inadequacies are suspected. The terrific increase of estimated cost and expenditure in highway development suggests immediate study is necessary before more money is poured into the program. At best, the study I recommend is long overdue.

I want to commend all those, including the President, for valiant efforts in balancing the budget. I, for one, am tired of footing the bill of big spenders. My program and belief is for less taxation and more value, based on facts. The facts must come from a cost analysis now of highway Federal expenditure—right now. Or we will be right back here again—same subject, same problem year after year.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HALEY].

Mr. HALEY. Mr. Chairman, I am a strong advocate of an adequate public highway system. We must have good roads and I fully recognize the need for better highways. However, I am strongly opposed to the bill under consideration because it is not a bill to provide more and better highways in the future, but rather a means to increase the tax burdens, which is already too heavy, on the backs of the motoring public.

The users of the highways, the motoring public and the truckers, have been bearing a heavy tax burden in the form of special levies on motor fuels, new vehicles, tires and tubes, parts and accessories and lubricating oil since the Federal highway program began in 1917. Yet, we have applied a very small percentage of the amount collected from these levies toward the building of better highways. In fact, up to the time the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 was adopted, the Federal Government was collecting approximately $2 billion per year more than was being authorized for highways. Even though by enacting the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958, the Congress sought to provide adequate funds for the building of a greatly improved highway system, the money set aside in the fund has not been used exclusively for the highway program. Rather, it has to a great extent been loaned to the general fund. As a result, we now find ourselves in the same condition with which we were faced before the acts of 1956 and 1958.

If the program cannot be financed under the present 3 cents per gallon rate, why was not Congress advised of that before now? Certainly, the Congress should have been informed of such conditions at the time the present tax was levied. I suggest that the present rate is sufficient because if all the income derived from the present levies were used exclusively for the highway program, we would have more than adequate funds for an excellent highway system. Does the present bill correct unsound budgeting for the highway program? No; it definitely does not.

Secondly, the committee amendment which would provide for reimbursement to the States for every portion of a toll or free highway bridge or tunnel within the State which is on the Interstate System is estimated to cost in excess of $4.3 billion. Can anyone argue without successful contradiction that this amendment will provide better highways? Certainly not, for under this reimbursement scheme, we would simply be helping the States finance the construction of highways already in existence or under construction.

To require the highway user to pay in the future for past or present construction is not to provide for future highway construction.

A third objection that I see in the bill under consideration is the fact that under the present system, money has been used toward the building of city streets which involve increased costs. Now, certainly I do not propose to eliminate city streets. The cities have been having difficulty in the financing of city roads, and I want to see that the cities are given as much assistance as possible. Nevertheless, the building of city streets falls within the function of the city. To include such city streets, at considerably higher cost than open highways, in the Interstate Highway System simply reduces the number of miles of better roads that may be built.

Finally, I strongly object to this bill because it is one of expediency. The committee report clearly reflects that fact by stating that "certain" problems have been revealed in this program with respect to which congressional action is needed. The report does not set forth these "certain" problems, but it does set forth the fact that the majority of the committee does not feel attempts to resolve "all of these problems" should be undertaken at this time. I maintain that if there are problems that need to be resolved, now is the time to do so without increasing the already heavy tax burden placed on the users of the highways. In fact, I suggest that the committee immediately take appropriate action and thoroughly investigate the whole program.

I think the American motorists have a right to know the facts concerning these problems now before being saddled with additional taxes. I think the highway user whose money has been appropriated deserves a better break than he is getting in the way of a reasonable return for his tax dollar. I suggest the Congress should take action in this matter and solve these certain problems first before taking any steps to increase the tax burden. This bill is not the solution. It is only an expedient tax measure and will only delay the solving of these certain problems to which the committee report refers.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DENT].

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak about a phase of this matter that has not already been covered.

Yesterday I received a telephone call from a gentleman out on the west coast, a man I did not know, but he happens to be a reinforcing steel producer, one of the 10 percent of steel production that is still working at this time, although there is a strike on.

There is a steel strike on, and here is a steel man having difficulty. He is having difficulty because of the importation of steel from Japan, and he has asked me to see whether or not this Congress would consider making the Buy American Act applicable to this $31 billion road program. He suggests that he cannot get relief under the escape clause, and he cannot get it because they have ruled this particular steel item has to come in with 100 percent of the producers agreeing that the tariff restriction must be raised and they cannot do that because two of the producers cannot bring in per-ton prices, due to the fact that their production of reinforcement steel is combined with their other production. Therefore, all of the producers are denied the protection, this meager protection, of the Buy American Act.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to the fact he is faced with 44-cent labor as against $3.39 labor, he is faced with a $35 per ton differential. On the day that the steel mills of this Nation were shut down the public press carried the news that 200,000 tons of steel were laying offshore from every one of the main seaports of this great Nation of ours and that the price of import steel went up exactly $9 a ton the day the strike was called.

I appeal now to the chairman of this Committee on Public Works and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to go to the Senate and appeal to the Senate for this particular phase of the law to be enacted.

With the present situation apparently stalemating the relief required by the reinforcing steel manufacturers through the Tariff Commission, there is only one hope of even a small measure of relief and that is through the mandatory application of the Buy American Act on all purchases and so forth, under the authority contained in this act for a $31 billion expenditure.

To do less than this is so patently dishonorable that this Congress will never be able to justify its failure to take cognizance of this oversight in the original legislation.

If every Member of this Congress will take time between now and January when we reconvene to read a copy of the Import Bulletin put out by the Journal of Commerce, New York, I am sure there will be a new view taken of this so-called reciprocal trades and foreign aid.

Every ship from every country is dropping its cargo onto our shores to to add to our already overstocked supplies.

When has any country survived with a trade policy that allowed competing producers to ship into its markets underpriced goods in competition with domestic production which is already producing a surplus.

When this Nation awakens it may find itself on its economic knees unable to get back on its feet.

There is a time and place for charity, but certainly not to nations that have no unemployment, lower taxes and unrestricted exploitation of its labor force.

I certainly pray that this Congress keeps its eyes open or before we know it Mr. Khrushchev will mesmerize our country into opening our markets up to their slave labor production.

I again appeal for help with the Senate committee.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MONAGAN].

Mr. MONAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting H.R. 8678.

This bill will make possible a continuation of the Federal highway program substantially in its present form and volume of construction.

The continuation of this program is vital to many areas of the Fifth District of Connecticut and in particular to the metropolitan area of Waterbury, Conn.

I regret the necessity of making any increase in taxes at this time, but it is logical to place the burden of this tax upon those who use the highways and I see no alternative other than the discontinuation of highway construction.

I am pleased that the Ways and Means Committee reduced the tax increase from 1½ cents to the presently recommended 1-cent increase. This certainly made the proposed legislation easier to support.

An added incentive to support this legislation was Governor Ribicoff's approval of it and his expressed belief that it was necessary to continue a proper long-range highway building program for Connecticut.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PUCINSKI].

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call attention to a survey conducted by the Chicago Motor Club among its 265,000 members which, if projected, would show that 90 percent of them are against this proposed tax increase because they regard the proposed increase as discriminatory.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a letter from the Chicago Motor Club, which reads as follows:

CHICAGO MOTOR CLUB,
Chicago, August 25, 1959.

The Honorable ROMAN C. PUCINSKI,
House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: A recent survey among some 20,000 of the Chicago Motor Club's 265,000 members, has proved that an overwhelming majority are bitterly opposed to any gas tax increase. The suggested Federal increase is regarded as part of a pattern developing throughout the country to "soak the motorist" to pay the entire cost of highways, to subsidize transit and some public utility interests, and other public facilities not related to highway improvement.

A projection of the 20,000 members surveyed indicates that more than 90 percent of our 265,000 members are cool to the plea that the highway program will be imperiled. They regard the proposed increase as outrageous discrimination. They believe the motorist has been overtaxed already. They assert unmistakably it is unfair for the motorist to pay the entire cost of building highways.

Highway users comprise only one of the segments of our economy which benefit directly from improved highways. Our Federal-Aid Highway System—and particularly our 41,000-mile National System of Interstate and Defense Highways which is the subject of current Federal legislation—is not being built for the benefit of highway users alone. It is being built to meet the essential needs of our growing economy, our expanding population, and civilian and national defense; and yet not one cent of defense money or general tax revenue is put into the highway trust fund to help pay for this system.

What the Chicago Motor Club is seeking is tax equity among the various classes of highway users and non-highway-user beneficiaries. Studies by agencies of the Federal Government prove that there are many areas of our economy which benefit directly from improved highways, such as real estate, commerce and trade, public utilities, recreation, and many allied industries and activities.

To accede to the administration's proposal for a 1½-cent increase (or even a compromise of 1 cent) would mean a substantial increase in the Federal gas tax, and an average of 42 percent or 47 percent tax (State and Federal) on the retail price of gasoline, before taxes, making this tax the highest on any nonluxury commodity. Even though the increase in the Federal gasoline tax is supposed to be temporary—through 1964—the history of automotive excise taxes proves that once a tax is imposed it is seldom reduced, much less repealed.

Congress itself recognized the lack of equity and fairness in the present tax structure when in the 1956 Highway Act the Department of Commerce was directed to study tax equities among the user and nonuser beneficiaries. These studies will not be completed until January 1961. That is the time to review the financing of the entire Federal-aid highway program.

In the meantime, the meet the immediate highway emergency, we advocate short-term revenue bond financing to meet deficits in the highway trust fund for 1960 and provide adequate apportionments for fiscal 1961 and 1962.

Such a financing plan has been proposed by Senator FRANCIS CASE of South Dakota, in Senate Joint Resolution 109, pending before the Senate Finance Committee. The short-term revenue bonds issued under the Case plan would be payable, both as to principal and interest, solely from the funds in the highway trust fund.

The Chicago Motor Club and the American Automobile Association have supported highway programs for a half century. At times we have recommended gas tax increases—the AAA on a national basis, the Chicago Motor Club locally. The reasons given in the paragraphs above present our reasons for opposing the proposed increased taxes.

Sincerely,

J. J. CAVANAGH.
President.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PUCINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BLATNIK. The gentleman from Illinois read a very interesting letter. I must say that the members of the Chicago Motor Club are underestimating what the highway users of America are paying. Do I understand that the members of the Chicago Motor Club state they were not in favor of having the highway users pay the entire cost of the highway program?

Mr. PUCINSKI. Would the gentleman restate that question, please?

Mr. BLATNIK. Do I understand your Chicago Motor Club members as saying they are not quite clear in their own minds that they already are paying for more than the entire cost of the highway program of America?

Mr. PUCINSKI. As I understand the result of the survey, they do not feel that the motorists should be taxed to carry this entire program which is being built as part of our national defense system.

Mr. BLATNIK. Well, let us have the RECORD show, then, for the information of your very modest members of that club, that the highway users of America are going to pay for every inch of the ABC and on the Interstate Highway System of America.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR A PAY-AS-YOU-GO ROAD PROGRAM

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, the Ways and Means Committee is to be warmly congratulated for recommending this bill.

We hear it said sometimes that committees of Congress, and Members of Congress, are inherently handicapped in trying to conduct the Government's fiscal affairs in the best and most intelligent way, simply because it is "political suicide," as they say, for Members of Congress to support unpopular tax increases—and almost all tax increases are unpopular—despite the fact that there are times and circumstances when our good judgment tells us that the country's affairs ought to be on a pay-as-you-go basis.

In bringing forward this bill, the Ways and Means Committee and the Committee on Public Works have again proven that committees of Congress, and Members of Congress, are entirely capable of acting on the best economic intelligence and judgment, and can steer the course that is in the best interest of the country despite the fact that they may alienate unthinking voters and voters who have become so enthusiastic about their particular cause that they have lost their perspective.

Clearly this is one of those times when the road program should be on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Personally, I have not studied the various ways by which the money might be raised, and possibly should be raised, to keep the program on a pay-as-you-go basis. There has been no practical alternative involving this question. Compromises have to be made, otherwise we would never have any legislation, and the practical courses which are open to us are either, first, accept this particular tax, or, second, finance the program by issuing more bonds and going further into debt.

As to a third possible alternative, which is to cut out the road program, very few people would agree to that. The country needs the roads, and needs them very badly. It would be poor economy for everybody if the program were curtailed.

As between following a pay-as-you-go policy and following a policy of going further into debt at this particular time, the choice which is in the best interest of the country is clear. If we were to go further into debt, issue more interest-bearing bonds, this would cost the taxpayers at least $2 for every dollar's worth of roads. It would mean that the taxpayers would have to pay for 82,000 miles of road to obtain 41,000 miles of roads.

And, of course, there is much more to be considered than the fact that issuing bonds would cost the taxpayers double. The Federal Government is committee to the proposition that it will conduct its fiscal affairs, and all its affairs, in ways to maintain maximum production, employment and purchasing power. This commitment is formally expressed, of course, in the Employment Act of 1946. It is a commitment to a policy on which we all pin our hopes that we can avoid serious recessions and depressions in this country and avoid all the hardships, human suffering, and threats to our system which such disasters involve.

We all recognize that carrying out this policy that the Federal Government has to conduct its fiscal affairs in ways which tend to counteract and control the ups and downs of the business cycle. It means that the Federal debt will have to be increased in periods of recession and high unemployment. But it also means paying off some of the Federal debt in boom periods. At present the economy is in a state of high production—some people call it a boom. Certainly, then this is no time to issue more debt. It is a time when the Government should be on at least a pay-as-you-go basis.

Again I congratulate the Ways and Means Committee and the Committee on Public Works. I will vote for the bill.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I have constantly taken the position that I would not support any bill that would increase taxes or that would impose additional expenses on the people.

However, in regard to this bill which provides for an additional 1 cent Federal tax on motor fuel, I must take the position that those who use the highways should pay for these highways in proportion to use of the roads instead of making a direct appropriation for this purpose for every taxpayer to pay and for their children to pay.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I am one of the great majority who believes that Uncle Sam should always keep his word. Now here is the situation. Many contracts have been entered into between the Government—Uncle Sam—and the contractors and those contracts provide that the money will be available to pay the bill as provided in such contracts. Hence, I am duty bound, as a Representative for Uncle Sam—the people—to support this bill.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the bill H.R. 8678. I do so with some reluctance because, like every Member of this body, I am anxious to see the Federal interstate highway program continued and the benefits which it brings to the various sections of the country carried out in a regular and orderly manner. But I cannot agree with the method of financing recommended by the committee. In large part this is the same old approach of putting the burden of the highway program exclusively on the motorist through still another boost of our already highly inflated gasoline taxes. But the interstate highway program benefits not only those who travel on these roads, but also those who live alongside them and those who opportunity for business profit is increased by them. For this reason it seems to me that before we make any further increase in the gas tax we ought first to explore means of shifting the burden more fairly or, even better, picking up the revenues for highway construction by careful reductions in unnecessary Government expenditures elsewhere.

In my State of New York, for example, there has been within only recent months a 2-cents-per-gallon increase in the gas tax. If this bill were to go through then our gas tax in New York State would increase to 10 cents a gallon, which would mean a tax of almost 50 percent on every gallon of gasoline. Certainly there is a point beyond which any tax ought not to go. When it comes to gas taxes, I feel that in New York State we have already reached that point.

Mr. Chairman, I have made a careful survey of my district on this matter and have invited my constituents to express their feelings to me on this tax. I can report that the response was almost 4 to 1 against any increase in the gas tax.

Moreover, the committee has just rejected an amendment to provide for the reimbursement of States like New York, which have already spent vast funds of of their own to construct superhighways without Federal aid. Without clear-cut legislative provision for adequate reimbursement to States like New York, how could I possibly vote to provide for additional Federal assistance taxes from the State which already pays 21 percent of all Federal taxes, while at the same time refusing to see that this same State of ours gets full and fair consideration.

My vote today represents my dissatisfaction with the particular solution proposed by the committee and with the conditions under which it has been presented to the House for action. I think it is clear we must learn to live within our income. If the highway program is important then I think it is time that we think of giving up some other expenditures in order to make it possible to continue the program.

I am particularly disturbed with the large percentage of taxes now being collected from the automobile owner, including excise taxes, that are still being diverted from the highway fund to other purposes. Before we vote to increase the gasoline tax I believe we should insist that all excise taxes on the motorists are turned over exclusively for highway construction purposes.

For these reasons then I intend to vote against the bill. This, I think is the proper course of fiscal responsibility. Yesterday we saw the public works appropriation bill rejected. That action makes it clear that the time is appropriate for a complete reappraisal of all our construction plans for the coming year. If we have the resources to construct highways in foreign countries, as we are proposing to do in the foreign aid program, then I find it hard to believe that we cannot construct highways in this country without raising taxes.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Chairman, the controversy over highway financing began last January when the President submitted to the Congress his budget for fiscal year 1960. In a message accompanying the budget the President said:

> In order to make highway-related taxes support our vast highway expenditures, excises on motor fuels need to be increased 1½ cents a gallon to 4½ cents. These receipts will go into the highway trust fund and preserve the pay-as-we-go principle, so that contributions from general tax funds to build Federal-aid highways will not be necessary.

In a deliberate attempt to mislead the people and becloud the issue the President and his administration have created the impression that unless the gasoline tax is increased there would not be any money for highway construction thus creating unemployment among thousands of construction workers and bankruptcy among contractors. Nothing can be further from the truth.

The Treasury Department is now collecting more than $1.5 billion annually in special highway user taxes on new vehicles, parts and accessories, that is not going into the highway trust fund. The money goes instead into the general fund which the President does not want to disturb for obvious political reasons.

There can be no doubt that the administration's underlying purpose for insisting on a gasoline tax increase is to provide a surplus in the general fund. In that way the election year budget will be in balance and the people will be able to forget about last year's $13 billion deficit—the largest in our peacetime history. And who pays for this political windfall? The average motorist—the highway user.

This tax goes against the grain of every fairminded person. A tax to be justifiable in the American scheme of things must be fair and necessary. This tax is neither. It is unfair because it falls on a select group and is not the responsibility of the entire economy and all the people. This of course should not surprise us. This administration's tax policies whether it is an increase or a decrease have always been unfair. When a tax is to be increased, as here, the burden falls on a select group. When taxes are to be decreased, as in 1954, the benefits go to a select group. But not the same groups, that is for sure.

The tax reductions of 1954 went largely to the upper income groups and giant corporations. I think in considering this tax increase before us we should think back to the tax decreases of a few years ago to bring sharply into focus this administration's attitude over who should get relief, when it is forthcoming, and who should get further burdens, when it is required in the administration's scheme of things. The following is a review of the 1954 tax cuts which was contained in a statement by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of research, AFL–CIO before the Committee on Ways and Means on the subject of general revenue revision:

REVIEW OF 1954 TAX CUTS

In 1954 the Congress overhauled the tax structure. The omnibus tax bill of that year, combined with the automatic tax cuts of January 1, 1954, were a backward, not a forward, step. The tax base was eroded substantially by many of the actions taken by Congress that year.

A quick overall look at who received the tax relief in 1954 is shocking. With the help of our associates in the Washington office of the United Automobile Workers, we have calculated the effects of the 1954 tax law on taxpayers at various income levels.

This study shows, for example, that in 1954 the total reduction in individual income taxes came to $4.6 billion. This tax relief was spread over 42.6 million taxpayers. At first glance, this seems to be a fairly generous average tax relief of $108 per taxpayer.

However, a closer look shows that the 37½ million taxpayers having adjusted gross incomes of less than $7,500 each received an average tax cut of $45, while the 18,700 reporting adjusted gross incomes of more than $100,000 had an average cut of $19,300.

This type of distribution of tax reductions means that the low- and middle-income individual's tax burden becomes greater and greater, as more and more tax relief is given to the upper income group. This trend, not only in the Revenue Act of 1954, but in many of the revenue acts over the past 10 years or more, must be reversed.

In this testimony we want to focus attention on changes in the Federal income tax, which continues to be the mainstay of the national tax system.

Individual income taxes are responsible for an estimated 52 percent of the total revenues of the Federal Government during the current fiscal year. We want to demonstrate how changes in the tax laws approved by Congress in recent years, together with interpretative rulings by the Treasury Department, have had the effect of seriously undermining the entire foundation upon which the Federal income tax rests.

The net effect of these changes has been to corrupt what used to be the simple, guiding concept of income-tax levies—namely, that after granting to each individual a basic exemption to cover his elemental needs, the remainder of each person's income should be taxed according to the individual's ability to pay.

Moreover, these special provisions and rulings tend to perpetuate each other. When one group in a particular business obtains a special advantage, others in allied or competitive industries are pressed to seek the same advantage for themselves. The result is a vicious pyramiding of demands by pressure groups for special favors which the Congress finds it difficult to resist.

Careful examination of the individual income structure makes clear that the net effect of these special provisions has been to benefit the Nation's higher income groups, particularly the recipients of dividends and capital-gains income. These are the individuals who have benefited by this specialized legislation and interpretative rulings. It is widely recognized, for example, that the height of the absurdity in this regard was reached in the famous amendment that took care of the movie magnate, Louis B. Mayer. This amendment was specifically written to provide a tax benefit to only a single individual. Extending depletion allowances to oyster shells, sand, gravel, and such other items, or proposals to include income from turkey farming as a capital gain simply undermine the whole tax structure. These are but a few of the many examples that could be cited as illustrative of the problem.

We do know with certainty that very few of the changes in tax policy made since 1945 have provided any special benefits to the average worker or union member. We know from our own knowledge, and ample statistics are available to support our belief, that with regard to some of these special provisions the average worker finds himself in the following position:

1. Dividend income: He owns little or no stock, and thus obtains no benefit from the dividend exclusion provision or the special tax credit for dividend income enacted as part of the 1954 law. Figures by the Federal Reserve Board from its 1957 Survey of Consumer Finances indicate that at least 90 percent of the average worker's income is obtained through wages and salaries. In the case of skilled workers, the figure is 94.5 percent. For semiskilled, 96.4 percent; for unskilled and service workers, 90.8 percent. The proportion of total income derived from rents, dividends, interest, and royalties combined is 1.5 percent for skilled workers, 0.4 percent for semiskilled, and 2 percent for unskilled and service workers.[1] (Undoubtedly a large part of the 2-percent figure for unskilled workers consists of rental income, rather than dividends or interest.)

Special investigations into the amount of stock which workers own show that very few workers or their families own any stock in publicly held corporations. Federal Reserve Board studies show, for example, that in early 1957 the proportion of spending units owning stock in publicly owned corporations is only 6.6 percent for skilled workers, 2.7 percent for semiskilled, and 2.9 percent for unskilled and service workers.[2]

As a matter of fact, individuals with adjusted gross incomes of between $2,500 and $5,000 receive only seven-tenths of 1 percent of their income from dividends and six-tenths of 1 percent of their income from interest, or a total of 1.3 percent of the income of this group is derived from interest and dividends.[3]

In contrast to this, individuals with adjusted gross incomes of $100,000 or more receive 37.7 percent of their income from dividends and 2.4 percent from interest, or a total of over 40.1 percent.[3]

In addition to looking at the receipt of income based upon statistics of income, it might be interesting to see who owns the stock in American corporations. The 1957 Survey of Consumer Finances,[4] made for the Federal Reserve System in cooperation with the survey research center of the University of Michigan, shows that only 11 percent of American families (spending units) own any stock whatsoever in publicly held corporations. This means that 89 percent of American families have no stock holdings at all. Of course, of those that do hold stocks, the greatest concentration is in the hands of those individuals with incomes of $10,000 or more.

The 4-percent dividend credit and the $50 dividend exclusion were written into the 1954 tax law as special provisions to aid the wealthy individuals and the limited few who own stock.

2. Depletion allowances: The average worker is not the proud owner of any oil wells. He cannot, therefore, avail himself of the very generous depletion allowance provisions of the tax law. Nor is he the owner of an establishment engaged in extraction of any type of mineral and metal, ranging alphabetically from asbestos to zircon, to say nothing of brick, clay, sulfur, gravel, and oyster shells—all of which are now covered, in one form or another, by similar if not quite as generous depletion allowances.

The benefits derived from depletion allowances are enormous. In 1954, the average corporation paid 48 percent of its income in taxes, but in that same year, 24 large petroleum companies paid only 22.6 percent of their income in taxes. Through depletion allowance deductions, these 24 companies were able to retain $645 million which otherwise would have reached the Federal Treasury.

This is just one example of the 27½-percent oil and gas producers' depletion allowance. The savings are proportionately less for the other industries whose depletion allowances run between the 27½ percent for oil and gas and the 5 percent for brick, clay, gravel, and other such building and construction items. As a matter of fact, the only excluded items from the 1954 tax code are derived from sea water, air, or similar inexhaustible items. For all practical purposes, therefore, almost every metallic and nonmetallic mineral, from A to Z, is included under the depletion allowances.

Individuals, too, can benefit from the depletion allowances. In 1947, the then Secretary of the Treasury cited the case of a person who received an income of $14.3 million between the years 1943 and 1947. He paid, however, only $80,000—or six-tenths of 1 percent in taxes.

Provision for depletion allowances unquestionably aids only the big corporations and the wealthy taxpayers. One very respected tax expert recently said: "The existence of this depletion allowance provision undermines respect for our entire tax system."

3. Capital gains: The average worker owns limited property, has limited savings, and retains these savings for security—not speculation. Consequently it is a very rare occasion when any worker receives capital gains income that would permit him to use that maximum capital gains tax rate of 25 percent.

According to the 1954 Statistics of Income, individuals with adjusted gross incomes of $2,500 to $5,000 per year received only three-eighths of 1 percent of their income in capital gains. On the other hand, those individuals with adjusted gross incomes of over $100,000 received 22.7 percent of their income in capital gains.

Individuals having a taxable income of $5,000 pay an ordinary income tax rate of 22 percent. If they earn their income through capital gains, their tax is only 50 percent of that rate, or 11 percent. However, individuals in the $5,000 bracket receive far less than 1 percent of their total income from capital gains. Consequently, the benefit they derive from this type of provision is almost nil.

On the other hand, an individual with taxable income of $100,000 who earns ordinary income above that amount would be subject to the ordinary rate of income tax—75 cents on each dollar. However, if this individual received capital gains income, instead of ordinary income, he would be paying a tax to the Government of only 25 cents on every dollar, instead of the 75 cents.

If an individual has a taxable income of $400,000, he would pay 91 cents on every dollar of additional ordinary income. But if the income is capital gains, the rate is only 25 percent.

These are exceedingly generous tax provisions that give relief only to those who have capital gains income and, in the main, these are individuals with incomes of $100,000 or more.

4. Tax privileges for higher salaried executives: The workers about whom we are talking work for others for wages or salaries. As we have indicated, this is almost their sole source of income. Moreover, they have not attained the higher levels of management where certain special types of tax benefits come into play. For example, they do not receive any type of special expense allowance or any of the other nontaxable earnings supplements available to corporation executives. Among these are: Deferred compensation, stock option plans, family partnerships, and a host of other special advantages. As one authority has stated, in discussing such tax advantages at higher income levels, "Individuals have at their disposal company cars, planes, and boats for personal use; charge off as entertainment expenses the cost of theaters, nightclubs, restaurants, baseball games, boxing matches, and other sports events; take advantage of company facilities during vacations; and finance expensive pleasure trips abroad for themselves and their families." [5]

Business Week's July 16, 1955, issue said: "But once a man has 'arrived' he can look forward to a gleaming future where some of the squeeze of taxes and inflation can be eased for him * * *. There are myriad ways by which a company can help its 'varsity team' men escape the burden of taxes and the squeeze of living costs. It can be through deferred pay bonuses, stock options plans, extralberal expense accounts, a company car at all hours, or the use of the company plane or boat."

5. Family partnerships: Family partnerships are just one example of the kind of tax gimmick that permits wealthy individuals to reduce their taxes to the Federal Government. This provision allows a businessman, under certain circumstances, to make his infant sons partners in his business. He can, therefore, combine his natural generosity with substantial tax reductions.

The following table shows the tax bill of three different income groups and the effect of the family-partnership provision:

Taxable income	Tax bill (income not divided)	Family tax bill (income divided in 2)	Family tax bill (income divided in 3)	Family tax bill (income divided in 4)
$50,000	$26,820	$20,300	$16,599	$14,460
$25,000	10,150	7,230	6,220	5,740
$10,000	2,640	2,200	2,080	2,040

As the table illustrates, without a split income, the $50,000-a-year man would have to pay $26,820 in taxes. But the split-income provision reduces his tax to $20,300. By extending the idea to a family partnership, however, he can reduce his tax to $16,599 if he has one infant son. If he is lucky enough to have two infant sons, he can bring his tax down to $14,460.

The $10,000-a-year man can reduce his taxes about 25 percent by sharing his income with his wife and two children on tax returns. But the $50,000-a-year man can save almost 50 percent in tax payments.

6. Split incomes: In 1948, Congress granted another tax bonanza to the wealthy—the split-income provision. This gave a married couple the right to file a joint return and split their total income between them, even if only one of them had received income that year. This division resulted in a tax saving, because the rates applied were on the lower brackets.

For example, instead of paying the rate applicable to $10,000 a year, the couple could split the income, file a joint return on the basis of $5,000 apiece, and pay double the tax on $5,000 a year, but less than the tax on one income of $10,000 a year.

The savings, however, was mostly for higher-income taxpayers. In 1951, for example, 83.5 percent of all the joint returns filed were for $2,000 or less taxable income. Splitting of income does not help any taxpayer who has $2,000 of taxable income or less. Therefore, only 16.5 percent of all the joint returns filed received any benefit from split incomes.

Another example illustrates how this arrangement helps the rich and how little it helps the middle-income taxpayers: A person earning $5,000 per year can reduce his taxes about 2 percent by filing a joint return; a person receiving $100,000 a year can reduce his taxes 27 percent. Furthermore, the $5,000-a-year man saves $80 in taxes, but the $100,000-a-year man saves $13,680. In other words, the person with 20 times as much income saves 171 times as much tax money.

7. Withholding tax: These are a few of the special tax provisions that are not available to the average American worker. On the other hand, the average worker does find that his Government is very efficent in collecting from him all the taxes to which it is entitled. The American system of withholding income taxes from current wages is so ruthlessly efficient that there is no chance for the taxpayer to fall behind in his payments. In fact, this withholding tax collection system has been held up as a model for other countries whose citizens are more reluctant taxpayers than Americans.

However, let the record show that this model of efficiency applies only to income derived from wages and salaries. No withholding system operates with regard to dividends, interest, or any other type of income. As a result, it is a well-known fact that a far larger proportion of taxes are wrung from $1 of wages than from any other type of income. Only a minute proportion of wage income is not reflected in tax returns while fat higher percentages for other types of income escape the eye of the tax collector.

The most recently published figures on this question cover the year 1952 and show that 95 percent of all wage and salary income was reported in that year's income tax returns. The resulting 5 percent gap in reporting wage and salary income compared to 13 percent for dividends, 61 percent for interest, and 30 percent for entrepreneurial income. These figures demonstrate that wage and salary income carries more than its fair share of the tax burden. While American workers recognize the necessity for the very efficient withholding system, they would appreciate it if the withholding system could apply with equal efficiency to all types of income other than wages and salaries.

As a result of the withholding system, as well as the many special provisions benefiting higher incomes, the impact of today's tax structure on American workers has become a problem for serious national concern. At one time the tax system extended certain favored treatment to income obtained by gainful employment, through the earned income credit eliminated in 1943. Now, however, the tax pendulum has swung completely around to the point where wage income occupies second-class status compared to other types of income. Certainly the special tax credit for dividend income, the failure to extend withholding beyond wage income, and the creation of numerous tax avoidance devices all testify to the manner in which wage income is penalized under our present tax system.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, when this administration last distributed tax benefits fully 88 percent went to business and investors and only about 12 percent to people in their individual capacity. One would think the President would go to these people now and remind them that as a result of these tax breaks their profits now are at an all time high and many of them actually realized even greater profits because of the Federal highway program and certainly huge defense contracts. But no, instead he turns to the motorist and to their elected representatives in Congress and says to them, in effect, "Either you increase the gasoline tax so I can balance my budget for the coming election year or there will not be any highways built." We are thus being blackjacked into approving an unfair and unnecessary tax increase.

There seems to be little doubt, Mr. Chairman, that this bill will pass. Many of us on the Committee on Public Works voted to report it because it appeared to be the only way to prevent the highway program from being cut back sharply. It was our deep conviction that this program is so vital to our Nation's economy and national defense that it must not be stopped or slowed down unnecessarily. But at the same time we would be remiss in our obligations and duties to the people if we did not point out that they are literally being taken for a ride. What is worse, they are even paying for it.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Chairman, I support H.R. 8678 with great reluctance. The imposition of further tax burdens upon the American people seems to have just about reached the final point.

Without this law, Ohio would face a curtailment of its highway program from $300 million a year to an annual rate of $500 million. There would be no interstate projects through fiscal 1961.

The Ohio Legislature increased State gasoline taxes this year by 2 cents a gallon to be in a position to complete its highway program and provide its share of the matching money. Ohio could not proceed if the interstate program were to be closed down through 1961.

Under H.R. 8678, the approximate apportionment of Federal aid highway funds for Ohio would total $166,500,000 for fiscal 1961 and $179,500,000 for fiscal 1962. Ohio is second only to California in the apportionment for these 2 years.

The automobiles of America are useless without adequate highways. In most communities, gasoline prices seem to be fixed by negotiated pricing systems which seem to arrange retail prices at whatever the market will bear. The imposition of a 1 cent per gallon tax for the construction and improvement of highways may well result in a 1 cent per gallon less profit for the oil producers of America.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of continuing the highway construction program on schedule; however, I am opposed to any present increase in taxes for this purpose.

This position may appear on the surface to be inconsistent, but when considered in light of and in conjunction with the overall programs of the Federal Government, I think a tax increase at this time is not justified.

Except for certain insurance and retirement programs, special taxes are not levied for any other specific governmental activity. In fact, through our ridiculous and wasteful foreign-aid program, our Government is building highways all over the world for the use and enjoyment of foreign people, but no special tax has been suggested to defray the expense of this program. Certainly our programs of domestic improvement and development should not be asked to carry a burden not similarly assessed against those programs we finance for the benefit of other countries. The highway construction program could be financed easily by the simple method of transferring the necessary funds from the foreign-aid program to the highway trust fund.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I cannot support this bill for a number of reasons. In the first place I am opposed to an increase of 1 cent per gallon in the Federal tax on gasoline, and I am equally opposed to the deception that this increase will be temporary. Everyone who supports this bill knows that it will not be terminated in 22 months; that once levied it will be continued for the foreseeable future.

I am unalterably opposed to that provision in the bill which states that it is the "intent and policy" of Congress to take over existing toll roads. This is estimated to cost in the neighborhood of $5 billion and no further thought should be given to such action until the interstate highways already in the program are constructed.

It has been stated by the proponents of this measure that it is an act of irresponsibility to go to the Federal Treasury to obtain the funds to make up the deficit in the trust funds. Yet it is proposed to take tax revenues obtained from motor vehicle operators, which are presently going into the general funds of the treasury, for highway use. This is saying, in effect, that it is somehow better to take money from a man on the way to a bank than it is to take the same money immediately after he has put it on deposit.

And is it any more an act of irresponsibility to go to the U.S. Treasury for funds to build roads in this country than it is to raid the same Treasury for hundreds of millions of dollars to build highways in foreign countries?

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of an interstate system of highways, but I am also saying that we may as well admit here and now that the program was too ambitious for the funds that could be obtained on the basis of the acceleration that was applied. Moreover, I never contemplated, and I am sure the majority of Members of Congress never contemplated, that these funds would be used to build expressways through cities where it was possible to build interstate highways at far less costs in the open country outside the cities.

For these and other reasons, Mr. Chairman, I cannot support this bill.

Mr. MACK of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I strongly support a continuation of our highway program and I believe that financing should be made available so that this program can continue at its normal rate. However, I do not believe this goal should be accomplished by placing an undue burden on a certain group of taxpayers who are already carrying more than their fair share of our tax load. While I am generally in accordance with other provisions of this bill, I oppose the 1 cent increase in the Federal tax on gasoline. In Illinois we are presently paying 8½ cents in gasoline taxes. This represents a tax load of nearly 33 percent at the retail level. I know of no other consumer commodity that is carrying a heavier tax load today. Many of our citizens who consume large quantities of gasoline are not the ones who take full advantage of our interstate highway systems. Most of these people would not benefit from these new roads because their business requires them to do most of their driving on local and State roads. This tax increase would be unfair to these thousands of persons who seldom, if ever, use the interstate highways. This tax increase which has been recommended by the President would, in my opinion, be unfairly soaking the poor to provide highways they will not use.

Furthermore, our States rely heavily on gasoline taxes to support their highways and therefore the Federal Government should not usurp this source of revenue. At the present time my constituents in Illinois pay 5 cents a gallon State tax in addition to the 3 cents Federal tax. In addition to this we have had another one-half cent increase in the sales tax this year which again places an additional burden on the lower income families in our State. Since we have this heavy tax load at this time, I am strongly opposed to any additional tax which would not only burden our consumers but would also present a difficult problem for our State if they are ever required to secure additional revenue for highway construction.

I hesitate to oppose this bill, but since an undue burden is being placed on the taxpayers of my area, I must in good conscience oppose this bill.

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I choose this opportunity to place my views on H.R. 8678 on record because of the torturing dilemma which all of us face. We all are aware that most legislation is a mixture of the necessary and the good with the unnecessary and the bad. I must confess, however, that there is more of all of these in this bill than I have seen in any bill on the floor in this session. The bill is a Jekyll-Hyde Siamese twin. Title I is Dr. Jekyll in that it provides the needed continuity in the vital Federal-State highway program. Title II is Mr. Hyde, in that the method of financing is a temporary increase of 1 cent for 22 months in the gas tax. I do not know if this abnormal creature is the inevitable result of having the Public Works Committee as the father and the Ways and Means Committee as the mother, but I do not welcome future progeny of this couple.

I felt so strongly that a surgical operation on this Siamese twin should at least be explored that, along with 36 other Members of the House, I rose to ask for a rollcall on the closed rule governing the debate, which prevents any amendments other than those of the Public Works Committee. Unfortunately, we were several votes short of enough to force a rollcall. Had we prevailed, we might have forced adoption of a rule that would have allowed the consideration of alternative means of financing.

What makes the gas tax approach particularly aggravating is the fact that highway users have, ever since the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956, been paying more than enough to keep the highway trust fund solvent. The general fund transferred almost $2 billion of liabilities to the highway trust fund back at the beginning of 1956, $516 million in 1957, and $1 billion in 1958. This was a total of over $3½ billion.

No wonder the highway trust fund presently needs reimbursement to the tune of $490 million for fiscal year 1960.

Mr. Chairman, I would not object to these transfers if there were reciprocity, if the general fund would recognize an obligation to return at least part of these advances to the highway trust fund. Not to return these funds—at least to the extent necessary to avoid a gas tax increase—is to penalize a fragment of our people.

Yet we are unable to sever Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. What do we do? Destroy both or save both? If we destroy both, we have the satisfaction of preventing an annoying, burdensome, and basically unjustified—even if only temporary—addition to the gas tax. But at what cost?

Mr. Chairman, we should be realistic enough to accept the fact that if we vote down this bill, we have acquiesced in the cessation of work for another year on the highway program.

Already in my own State of Maine bulldozers are idle, preparatory gravel is washing away, contractors are unable to take advantage of the few remaining weeks of workable weather, and our State highway commission is unable to commit any new work.

The cost of delay is simply too much to tolerate. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the task of painful responsibility is to support this measure. The Dr. Jekyll will do more good than the Mr. Hyde will do harm.

I might add that I was disappointed when, on our recent teller vote, the Committee amendment failed. The amendment would have shown the intent of Congress that eventually States should be reimbursed for toll or free highways built after 1947. We in Maine have gone out on a limb to construct our toll highway from Kittery to Augusta, without waiting for the Federal-State program. We built it at a cost far less than would be the case today. We should not be penalized for this initiative.

ADDITIONAL GASOLINE TAXES UNFAIR

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to any further increase at this time in the Federal gasoline tax. We all want to keep the highway construction program moving ahead, but additional highway-user taxes are not justified. As a matter of fact, highway-users are already paying a disproportionately high share of our Federal revenues.

As matters now stand, the traveling public is already paying more that $1½ billion annually into the Federal Treasury in taxes on cars, trucks, parts, accessories, oil, buses, and trailers that is above and beyond the special taxes earmarked for the highway trust fund.

In 1956, when the Highway Act was passed, taxes on gasoline, vehicles, tires, tubes, oil, parts, and accessories were pouring $3 billion into the Federal Treasury, of which only $1 billion was spent annually on highways. In other words, highway-users were paying in $3 to the Treasury for every $1 that was expended for highway construction.

Despite this fact, with the enactment of the 1956 Highway Act, Congress increased taxes on fuel, tires, tubes, trailers, buses, and trucks, and established a new tax on tread rubber and heavy trucks. The highway trust fund was then established for which the new taxes and a portion of the existing automotive taxes were designated. Even after this enactment, however, more than $1½ billion in highway-user taxes continued to go into the general fund of the Treasury.

In spite of this unfair burden on highway-users, the temptation to grab highway trust fund revenues for other purposes was too great. Congress intended that the trust fund revenues should accumulate for several years before the construction program had reached the point where great outlays would be needed to pay the bills for construction. Instead of that procedure being followed, $1.9 billion in highway authorizations going back to previous years for which Congress had not yet appropriated funds was transferred from the general fund to the trust fund as a deficit. Thus, the newly created trust fund was immediately handed a deficit of nearly $2 billion.

Additional raids on the highway trust fund helped make the Federal budget look better in 1957, 1958, and 1959 when large amounts of the highway trust funds were taken out and added to the general fund.

In fiscal 1957, the highway trust fund had revenues of $1.4 billion and expenditures of $966 million—the surplus being loaned to the general fund.

In fiscal 1958 the trust fund took in $2.1 billion with expenditures of $1.6 billion. At that point a balance of $1.048 billion in the trust fund was transferred to the general fund.

In fiscal 1959, trust fund expenditures for the first time exceeded revenues with revenues coming to $2.185 billion and expenditures to $2.709 billion. This reduced the balance in the trust fund to half a billion dollars.

In fiscal 1960, with expenditures expedited to exceed revenues by $1 billion, it is clear that the trust fund will finish the year with a deficit of half a billion dollars. It is equally clear that this shortage stems from the fact that the trust fund has been bled by the Treasury instead of permitting 3½ years of surplus highway-user revenues to accrue for the expanding highway expenditures of more recent months.

It is grossly unfair for the administration to ask for another 50 percent increase in Federal gasoline taxes when we are already diverting highway-user taxes to keep the general budget in balance instead of putting it into road construction.

I appreciate the fact that the committee has reduced the proposed increase from 1½ cents per gallon to 1 cent and established a termination date 22 months hence. But it is unfair to make any further gas tax increase at all.

Furthermore, increases in the Federal gasoline tax pose a threat to revenues badly needed by our State governments. The States depend upon their gas tax to assist them in matching their portion of the highway matching program.

How then are we to keep the highway building program on schedule without raising gas taxes again?

The first answer that comes to mind is that any time we stop diverting even a third of the highway-user taxes now going into the general fund, we will have ample funds to more than meet any indicated deficit in the trust fund. This should be done.

If it is then argued that this will create a new deficit in the general fund, this points up the urgent need for tax revision to plug some of the glaring loopholes in our present tax structure. One such loophole is the stock dividend credit which lets more than $300 million slip away from the Treasury to those who least need such highly favored treatment. It is regrettable that a move to close this loophole, led by Senator EUGENE MCCARTHY of Minnesota earlier in this session, was not successful.

There are other even more obvious loopholes that let hundreds of millions of tax dollars escape at the expense of the average taxpayer. Consider, for example, the cleverly written tax language that enables American oil interests with large foreign holdings to escape practically the entire Federal income tax on their foreign operations. This is a competitive threat to oil companies in the United States who have no foreign production and it deprives Uncle Sam of badly needed revenues from those who least need to avoid taxation. The two tax loopholes that I have suggested closing would alone take care of any deficit caused by making proper use of our highway-user revenues. Furthermore, such tax revision would be in the best interest of American businessmen and other taxpayers who need tax consideration.

I will support a highway financing bill that is fair to the American people and I know that we have ample time to pass such a bill before adjournment. The bill before us is not a good bill and I shall oppose it.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, in closing, there were several Members on the floor very critical in regard to how the program was being administered in their particular States. I can say without fear of contradiction that in connection with this program, the largest program of public works that the world has ever witnessed, it has been my observation that the complaints and the criticism about this program have been very few.

And, in regard to the comments relative to State highway departments, I might say in my long association with them I have never met a more capable, more dedicated, and honest group of men than the members of the highway departments of these United States. Now, there might be a few exceptions.

Mr. Chairman, if this program is not carried forth here today, it will be a real tragedy not only the safety of the people of this country but to our national economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired. All time has expired.

Under the rule, the bill is considered as having been read for amendment.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY PROGRAM

SECTION 101. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1959."

SEC. 102. REVISION OF AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR INTERSTATE SYSTEM.

Subsection (b) of section 108 of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 is amended by striking out "the additional sum of $2,500,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the additional sum of $2,000,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1961,".

SEC. 103. EXTENSION OF APPROVAL OF ESTIMATE OF COST OF COMPLETING INTERSTATE SYSTEM.

Section 8 of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1958, as amended, is hereby further amended by striking out "the fiscal years ending June 30, 1960, and June 30, 1961." and inserting in lieu thereof "the fiscal years ending June 30, 1960, 1961, and 1962."

TITLE II—INTERNAL REVENUE CODE AND HIGHWAY TRUST FUND AMENDMENTS

SEC. 201. TEMPORARY INCREASE IN MOTOR FUEL TAXES, ETC.

(a) GASOLINE.—Section 4081 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to imposition of tax on gasoline) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) TEMPORARY INCREASE IN TAX.—On and after September 1, 1959, and before July 1, 1961, the tax imposed by this section shall be 4 cents a gallon."

(b) DIESEL FUEL AND SPECIAL MOTOR FUELS.—

(1) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—Section 4041 of such Code (relating to imposition of tax on diesel fuel and special motor fuels) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) TEMPORARY INCREASES IN TAX.—On and after September 1, 1959, and before July 1, 1961—

"(1) if (without regard to this subsection) the tax imposed by subsection (a) or (b) is 3 cents a gallon, the tax imposed by such subsection shall be 4 cents a gallon, and

"(2) if (without regard to this subsection) the tax imposed under paragraph (2) of subsection (a) or (b) is 1 cent a gallon, the tax imposed under such paragraph shall be 2 cents a gallon."

(2) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—The second sentences of subsections (a) and (b) of such section 4041 are each amended by striking out "in lieu of 3 cents a gallon".

(c) FLOOR STOCKS TAX AND REFUNDS ON GASOLINE.—

(1) TAX.—Section 4226(a) of such Code (relating to floor stocks taxes) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) 1959 TAX ON GASOLINE.—On gasoline subject to tax under section 4081 which, on September 1, 1959, is held by a dealer for sale, there is hereby imposed a floor stocks tax at the rate of 1 cent a gallon. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall not apply to gasoline in retail stocks held at the place where intended to be sold at retail, nor to gasoline held for sale by a producer or importer of gasoline."

(2) DATE FOR PAYMENT OF TAX.—Section 4226(d) of such Code (relating to due date of taxes) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "; except that the tax imposed by paragraph (5) shall be paid at such time after November 30, 1959, as may be prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate".

(3) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 4226(c) of such Code (relating to definition of dealer, etc.) is amended by striking out "section 6412(a)(3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 6412(a)(4)".

(4) REFUNDS.—Section 6412(a) of such Code (relating to floor stocks refunds) is amended by renumbering paragraph (3) as paragraph (4) and by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) GASOLINE HELD ON JULY 1, 1961.—Where before July 1, 1951, any gasoline subject to the tax imposed by section 4081 has been sold by the producer or importer and on such date is held by a dealer and is intended for sale, there shall be credited or refunded (without interest) to the producer or importer an amount equal to the difference between the tax paid by such producer or importer on his sale of the gasoline and the amount of tax made applicable to such gasoline on and after July 1, 1961, if claim for such credit or refund is filed with the Secretary or his delegate on or before November 10, 1961, based upon a request submitted to the producer or importer before October 1, 1961, by the dealer who held the gasoline in respect of which the credit or refund is claimed, and, on or before November 10, 1961, reimbursement has been made to such dealer by such producer or importer for the tax reduction on such gasoline or written consent has been obtained from such dealer to allowance of such credit or refund. No credit or refund shall be allowable under this paragraph with respect to gasoline in retail stocks held at the place where intended to be sold at retail, nor with respect to gasoline held for sale by a producer or importer of gasoline."

(d) CREDITS AND REFUNDS.—

(1) TAX PAYMENTS CONSIDERED OVERPAYMENTS.—Section 6416(b)(2) of such Code (relating to special cases in which tax payments are considered overpayments) is amended—

(A) by striking out "at the rate of 3 cents a gallon" each place it appears in subparagraphs (H), (I), and (J) and inserting in lieu thereof "at the rate of 3 cents or 4 cents a gallon";

(B) by striking out "1 cent for each gallon" in subparagraph (H) and inserting in lieu thereof "1 cent (where tax was paid at the 3-cent rate) or 2 cents (where tax was paid at the 4-cent rate) for each gallon"; and

(C) by striking out "at the rate of 1 cent a gallon;" at the end of subparagraphs (I) and (J) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "at the rate of 1 cent a gallon where tax was paid at the 3-cent rate or at the rate of 2 cents a gallon where tax was paid at the 4-cent rate;".

(2) GASOLINE USED FOR CERTAIN NONHIGHWAY PURPOSES OR BY LOCAL TRANSIT SYSTEMS.—Subsections (a) and (b)(1)(A) of section 6421 of such Code (relating to gasoline used for certain nonhighway purposes or by local transit systems) are each amended by striking out "1 cent for each gallon of gasoline so used" and inserting in lieu thereof "1 cent for each gallon of gasoline so used on which tax was paid at the rate of 3 cents a gallon and 2 cents for each gallon of gasoline so used on which tax was paid at the rate of 4 cents a gallon".

(e) COLLECTION OF GASOLINE TAX AT WHOLESALE DISTRIBUTOR LEVEL.—

(1) TREATMENT OF WHOLESALE DISTRIBUTOR AS PRODUCER.—The first sentence of section 4082(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to definition of "producer" for purposes of tax on gasoline) is amended to read as follows: "As used in this subpart, the term 'producer' includes a refiner, compounder, blender, or wholesale distributor, as well as a producer."

(2) WHOLESALE DISTRIBUTOR DEFINED.—Section 4082 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) WHOLESALE DISTRIBUTOR.—As used in subsection (a), the term 'wholesale distributor' includes any person who—

"(1) sells gasoline to producers, to retailers, or to users who purchase in bulk quantities for delivery into bulk storage tanks, and

"(2) is registered and bonded with respect to the tax imposed by section 4081.

Such term does not include any person who (excluding the term 'wholesale distributor' from subsection (a)) is a producer or importer."

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE. — The amendments made by paragraphs (1) and (2) shall take effect on January 1, 1960.

SEC. 202. TRANSFERS TO HIGHWAY TRUST FUND.

(a) TRANSFER.—Section 209(c) of the Highway Revenue Act of 1956 (relating to transfer to Highway Trust Fund of amounts equivalent to certain taxes) is amended by renumbering paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) EXCISE TAX ON AUTOMOBILES, PARTS AND ACCESSORIES, ETC.—There is hereby appropriated to the Trust Fund, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, amounts equivalent to that portion of the taxes received in the Treasury after June 30, 1961, and before July 1, 1964, under subsection (a)(2) (tax on passenger automobiles, etc.) and (b) (tax on parts and accessories) of section 4061 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 which is equal to the amount which would have been so received if the tax rate under each such subsection had been 5 percent in lieu of the applicable rate."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (4) (as renumbered by subsection (a)) of such section 209(c) is amended by striking out "paragraphs (1) and (2)" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1), (2), and (3)".

(2) FLOOR STOCKS REFUNDS.—Section 209(f) of the Highway Revenue Act of 1956 (relating to expenditures from Highway Trust Fund) is amended—

(A) by striking out the heading to paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(4) 1972 FLOOR STOCKS REFUND.—"; and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) 1961 FLOOR STOCKS REFUNDS ON GASOLINE.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay from time to time from the Trust Fund into the general fund of the Treasury amounts equivalent to the floor stocks refunds made before July 1, 1962, under section 6412(a)(3)."

The CHAIRMAN. No amendments are in order except amendments offered by the Committee on Public Works. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 4, after "1956" insert "as amended."

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that that is not in order.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 10, strike out "Sytem" and insert "System."

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, of course, I rise in support of this amendment. I think we will all support the amendment. The amendment on the reimbursement to States contained in this bill as an amendment is certainly a very necessary and vital feature of this type of legislation. I fought for this when I had the honor to serve on the House Public Works Committee. All we were able to succeed in doing at that time was to give recognition that the Secretary of Commerce would make a study and a survey as to the cost of the reimbursement to the States.

I want to digress for a moment to say this: I have listened to much debate this afternoon and the tirades against the administration insofar as the highway program is concerned and the conduct of it and of the lack of money that is necessary under this program.

Let me say this to those who are criticizing the legislation and the need for a 1-cent increase in the tax today. This legislation is not the administration's legislation in its original form in 1956. I say that if the Congress had adopted the President's recommendation in the Clay report we would not be in this position today of asking for additional taxes to carry out the program. The legislation adopted in 1956 by the committee, by the Committee on Ways and Means, and then enacted into law by the Congress was the baby of the Congress. At that time there were those of us who knew there was not sufficient money that would be produced under that legislation. At that time it was clearly enunciated that the President's program to establish a board, and a bond issue and a trust fund and to issue bonds for the construction of 41,000 miles of the highway program would have been financed to its conclusion. However, the House did not see fit to accept the recommendation of the administration and the plight we find ourselves in today to support the 1-cent increase in tax to bring in additional revenue partially to finance the program, rests on the shoulders of the Congress and not of the administration.

I heard the gentleman take the floor a few minutes ago and talk about a steel manufacturer on the west coast complaining about the importation of steel from Japan, interfering with the U.S. steel market. That is just too bad, because I remember when the late Dan Reed, that most esteemed gentleman from the State of New York, fought to amend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act several years ago to protect the production of steel and other products in the United States, was voted down by that side of the House. And today they are crying about the importation of products from foreign countries that are causing and will cause unemployment in our own country. The low tariff program is a program of the Democratic Party. If we are going to talk about tariffs and unemployment, let the boys over on the Democrat side do something about it. They have control of the House; they have control of the Congress. Let them bring in some legislation to protect the workers of America. I am for it, and I was for it when Dan Reed offered his amendments on the floor of this House. But do not cry about it today when you have the power to correct.

I do not like this 1 cent gasoline tax. But I am sincerely hoping that it will be passed by this House in order to keep this program going which is so vitally necessary. Also that the bill will contain a provision to reimburse those States, like the State of New York, that has expended over a billion dollars on the Interstate System to provide highways badly needed.

I sincerely hope the legislation will be passed.

Mr. MORRIS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JENNINGS). The Chair will state to the gentleman that only 5 minutes is permitted in support of the amendment and 5 minutes in opposition. Five minutes has been consumed in support of the amendment. Therefore, the Chair cannot recognize the gentleman at this time.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment, on page 2, line 17, insert:

"SEC. 104. POLICY WITH RESPECT TO REIMBURSEMENT FOR CERTAIN HIGHWAYS

"Section 114 of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 114. POLICY OF CONGRESS TO REIMBURSE FOR CERTAIN HIGHWAYS.

" 'It is hereby declared to be the intent and policy of the Congress to equitably reimburse in money or in mileage each State for every portion of a toll or free highway, bridge, or tunnel within such State which is on the Interstate System, the construction of which has been completed subsequent to August 2, 1947, or which is either in actual use or under construction by contract, for completion, awarded not later than June 30, 1957.' "

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the principal reason this legislation is before Congress today is that the Congress, in April 1958, voted to take an extra $1.2 billion out of the trust fund. That depleted the fund.

To reimburse the toll road States as this amendment proposes will cost $4,357 million. Where is that enormous sum of money coming from? No provisions have been considered to raise the money to pay for reimbursement of the toll road States for these toll roads.

If we attempt to pay the toll road States for their roads by a gasoline tax that will require a 1-cent additional tax on gasoline not for 22 months, as this bill proposes, but a 1-cent tax for 6 to 8 years.

We raided the highway trust fund once in 1958 to make work projects. If we raid it again to make reimbursement for toll roads, we will be right back where we are now with the trust fund busted again and trying to develop new tax sources on motorists to pay for these toll roads and freeways.

The cost of this amendment according to the Bureau of Public Roads is $4,357 million which is what will be needed to reimburse the toll road States. Of this $4,357 million, $2,833 million will go to eight toll road States.

New York State will receive $799 million from this reimbursement. Eight States with only 11 percent of the Nation's area will receive 65 percent of all the reimbursement funds and the other 42 States with 89 percent of the Nation's area will receive only 35 percent of this reimbursement sum.

New York State will receive $799 million which is as much reimbursement money as will go to 32 other States of the Nation.

Connecticut will receive $278 million to reimburse her for toll roads and free roads, which she has built.

New York will receive $799 million while New Hampshire will receive only $700,000.

New York State will receive $799 million and Nevada will get only $800,000.

New York State will receive $799 million and Vermont will get $1 million.

New York State will receive $799 million and North Dakota will get $1,700,000.

New York State will receive $799 million and Montana, $2,600,000.

New York State will receive $799 million and Idaho, $3,400,000.

New York State will receive $799 million and South Carolina, $3,200,000.

New York State will receive $799 million and Arkansas, $3,700,000.

New York State will receive $799 million and South Dakota, $3,700,000.

New York State will receive $799 million while Iowa will get $3,900,000.

Mississippi will get $4,700,000.

Wisconsin will get $5,900,000.

Mr. Chairman, this reimbursement provision has no place in this particular bill which is to meet an emergency situation.

The District of Columbia with only 4.8 miles of interstate highways, which she has built, will receive $5,400,000 under this provision for the 70 square miles within the District as against Wisconsin receiving $5,900,000 for that State of vast area.

The little State of Rhode Island will receive $10 million or about twice as much money as the great State of Wisconsin.

This provision has no place in this highway bill. It should not be considered until further investigations are made and reports received on it from the Bureau of Public Roads. This particular provision of the bill should be voted down. This is an emergency bill to keep the highway program rolling at its present level. It is not a bill to distribute vast sums to toll-road States and thereby lay the foundation for the need of levying new and additional taxes which Federal buying of the Nation's toll roads surely will necessitate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. I would like to point out to the committee that this amendment only preserves the right of the future Congresses to consider the equity of reimbursement. Much has been said that this only goes to the question of toll roads. There are approximately 10,000 miles that will be considered for reimbursement and only 1,950.2 miles on toll roads. So every State in the Union almost without exception will have to be given the consideration that it was extended in the Highway Act of 1956, when we extended equitable consideration to the Western States providing a formula up to 95 percent of the total cost of the Interstate System to be borne by the Federal Government.

I would like to point out that in addition this is only giving the future Congresses the right to give consideration to the equitable redistribution of mileage lost under the formula of the 1956 act.

Mr. ROBISON. I thank the gentleman for his contribution and would like to point out to the House one thing, that while many quarrels have been started here between the States on various subjects this year this is the first time one has been started with the State of New York as the principal target.

This amendment apparently is being opposed on the ground that it is nothing but a giveaway. It is not a giveaway; it is a giving back of something which was wrongfully taken from the people of the State of New York as well as the other major progressive States of the Nation. Let me point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that on August 27, 1956—I was not here then, of course—but on that date I would remind the rest of you that this House passed H.R. 10660, of the 84th Congress, which contained a section known then as section 109 as originally numbered in that bill, which almost word for word follows section 104 in the bill now before us; and before you decide that you are now in favor of penalizing the initiative of the progressive States of the Nation, I suggest that you determine how you voted back in 1956.

Mr. DOOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DOOLEY. Is it not a fact that this is simply a reaffirmation of the act of 1956, and that the $799 million which is coming to the State of New York is merely reimbursement of money spent between 1941 and 1957 for which she could reasonably expect to be reimbursed? Failure to reenact this would be very bad.

Mr. ROBISON. The gentleman is correct.

Much has been made of the fact that this amendment calls for reimbursement to the extent of $4.2 billion. Much is also made of the fact that a large portion of that figure is going to go to the State of New York. Let me ask you this: Is it a fact, Mr. Chairman, that we have now reached the point where the cost of doing equity is going to blind us to the principles of equity?

Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that what is being done to the State of New York in this instance is something that is almost always done to us in every Federal-aid program, but not with as specific a contribution as we have been called upon to here make. This is the time to begin to right that wrong.

This amendment, as you know, and as has been so well explained, merely establishes the principle of reimbursement. This Congress or future Congresses hold in their hands the method of determining how that reimbursement is to be made.

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON. I yield.

Mr. CRAMER. Is it not a fact—and I will say to the gentleman that with all respect I differ with him, but is it not a fact that under the 1956 bill there is discretion to do exactly what the gentleman is suggesting with regard to reimbursement, but it is discretionary and not mandatory?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired, all time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAYS moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I come from a State which would benefit by this proposed amendment if we were reimbursed, but I say that it is morally wrong and completely indefensible. There have been a lot of speeches made today about these toll roads and the necessity of including them in the system and so forth and so on, but if you pass this amendment you are taxing the people not singly but twice, because you are soaking the people who ride over the roads and pay the tolls, for you ride up to the toll gate and have to pay for the privilege; and after they get the thing paid for by the people who use them you are going to turn around and soak the people of the United States in a gasoline tax and give them the money over again. If you can defend that, I cannot. If you can defend that to the people of your district, you just go right ahead and defend it, but I am not going to, and I have received plenty of letters from my State wanting me to support the amendment.

I think this amendment is wrong; I think it is out of place, and I think it ought to be defeated.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield.

Mr. BUCKLEY. What about the freeways?

Mr. HAYS. That is a different proposition, if they are really freeways which have been built and are incorporated into the system. That is quite different from toll roads.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. There are 153 miles of free roads in the gentleman's State of Ohio that would qualify for incorporation into the Interstate System. The same principle would apply to those roads are would apply to the toll roads.

Mr. HAYS. No, it would not, because the people are not paying for the road twice. It is a free highway and you incorporate it, that is one thing; but if it is a toll road and you incorporate it, that is another thing again. The gentleman knows that as well as I do.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. This preserves the right of Congress——

Mr. HAYS. This says nothing about the right of Congress; this says it is the intent of Congress.

Mr. GROSS. And the policy of Congress.

Mr. HAYS. It declares the policy and it puts the Congress in the position that if you do not give the money back someday people can say: "OK, we were misled. The Congress said we were going to do it. Now you are reneging on the promise."

If you had not made the promise in the first place, you do not have to renege.

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Chairman, I will attempt to say what I think the issues are in regard to this amendment, and they are as follows:

We are talking about changing the act passed in 1956, which simply states, as a matter of policy, that Congress shall determine "whether or not" to reimburse the States for freeways and toll road facilities. This amendment unquestionably takes away that discretion from this body in the future to make that determination. When all the facts are known, when in 1961 it is reported what the total cost is going to be, it will be $13 billion in excess of the 1956 estimate of $25 billion; when we know in addition to that where the money should equitably come from to finance the proper sources of road user tax on a permanent finance basis. I say the amendment is premature because that time is when we should determine when we know what the cost is going to be, when we can look at the whole picture and what the proposals are before us, in determining whether or not to reimburse. That is what we have authority to do under the present legislation.

This amendment makes it mandatory and would cost $4.3 billion with the present arbitrary 10-year cutoff of 1947 to 1957. If the period of time is extended to the present time it would be $6.3 billion when we know we have the facts and a $13 billion deficit already. I say that is not fiscal responsibility.

It is time that the Congress should have the opportunity to make the decision at the proper time in 1961 when we know all the facts. It has no place in this legislation. It was intended to be an extension of the present law insofar as authorization is concerned.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. The gentleman from Florida says this is premature consideration of this problem. I wonder if he found objection to the committee report of 1954?

Mr. CRAMER. I am glad the gentleman mentions the Clay report of 1954, because the Clay report of 1954 did not say reimbursement should be given, except after the Interstate System was fully funded, and that we might not have any objection to it at a future time.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. We are preserving the same principle, the right of a future Congress to decide that question. That is all this does.

Mr. CRAMER. The statement of policy requires the States in the future to be reimbursed and does not leave discretion to the Congress to decide that.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. We have been having great difficulty in trying to find revenue to take care of a billion and a half of additional expenditures put on this program last year. Where are we going to get the $4½ billion additional if this proposal is adopted?

Mr. CRAMER. The gentleman points out what the critical issue is and what the cost is going to be. I say that is aggravated even further by the fact that 2 years from now, which is the time when we should properly consider this issue, we are going to find unquestionably that the increased cost of the program is an additional $13 billion, meaning we will have a $17 billion deficit to make up if we pass this committee amendment.

I say that is not fiscal responsibility, and I say further if you complain about this 1-cent tax increase, being the method of financing the bill under this proposal, you will far more reason to complain when we try to find $17 billion to finance the deficit in 1961. This is not the time to make this provision mandatory.

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ROBISON. Will the gentleman tell me whether or not in his opinion if this is passed and this Congress eventually finds a method of reimbursement, that method could not possibly prescribe that the toll roads would be free?

Mr. CRAMER. I may say to the gentleman that, of course, that would be a fine step in the right direction, but all the bills that have been introduced so far have been to the contrary.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, early in the session, after the President delivered his state of the Union message to the Congress, urging 1½ cents increase in the Federal gasoline tax to keep the interstate highway program on a pay as you go basis and after sensing that Members would be reluctant to pass legislation affecting this much of an increase, I introduced a bill, H.R. 4389, which would have transferred from the general fund to the highway trust fund the $1.5 billion of excise taxes from automobile parts and accessories.

I am happy that the bill under consideration today embodies in effect part of my proposal. Of course, I must say, Mr. Chairman, that I am in general agreement with those who have spoken before me who would like to see these wartime imposed excise taxes eliminated altogether on automobiles, trucks, parts, and accessories. Since there is so little likelihood of their elimination at this time, it seems only appropriate that the automobile owner paying them should derive some direct benefit by way of better roads on which to drive his automobile. It is still my belief that these excise taxes should be done away with whenever the budget picture improves to the point where we can live with this loss of revenue.

I support the 1-cent-a-gallon increase in tax called for in this bill on the strength of its termination date in 1961 after which the slack in revenue will be taken up in transfer of the excise taxes from the general fund to the trust fund. I am confident that the majority of constituents of my district would much prefer to see the highway-construction program proceed on schedule on a pay-as-you-go basis rather than resorting to further deficit financing. It is true that I represent an area which has already benefited and stands to benefit more in the future from this program by virtue of the heavy earth-moving machinery industry manufactured in my district and which is so vital in the construction of the Interstate Highway System, but I believe the general public throughout the length and breadth of this land is becoming more and more aware that we get only from Government what we pay for and that we cannot expect to continue the roadbuilding program without adequate financing.

The arguments advanced by the distinguished chairman and ranking member of the Ways and Means Committee are sound and in keeping with good business principles. I support the position of the committee in its method for financing the continuation of the program but have a reservation relative to the reimbursement to the States for their toll roads even though we in the State of Illinois would stand to benefit to the tune of better than $400 million.

In view of the critical budget picture I just do not see how we can give serious thought at this time to reimbursing the States and local governments for these expenditures when all of them are in much better financial shape than is the Federal Government itself. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding to me at this time for these few thoughts, and sincerely hope the Committee will see fit to pass the bill to assure our keeping the highway construction program on schedule.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I must point out some facts regarding my protest vote against the 1-cent-a-gallon increase in the gas tax. By closing off debate and not allowing amendments on the question of where we are going to get money to pay for the highway program, the American people lost and the special interests won. I want it clearly understood that I am in favor of the continuation of the interstate highway program. I am opposed to the procedure by which it became impossible to discuss on the floor of Congress the method of financing it.

Many Members of Congress were in support of alternative methods of taxation to the one proposed. The 1-cent-a-gallon tax increase will injure many people in very modest circumstances who consider gasoline a necessity for their livelihood. It is my feeling that Congress should have considered an amendment to the gas tax bill which would have reduced the 27½ percent oil depletion allowance for foreign oil imports. The Members of the Congress were aware that such an amendment was to be introduced by Congressman HENRY REUSS, of Wisconsin, had amendments been in order. This would have saved the American taxpayers millions of dollars and thus provided us with $2.4 billion necessary to finance our interstate highway program. If the Congress had supported a plan which would have reduced the oil depletion allowance from 27½ to 15 percent, the gasoline tax would not have had to be raised and the little taxpayer would not be hurt.

I am very sorry that one of the true beneficiary groups of the new highway system, the billion-dollar oil companies, are able to escape the tax burden which other people, not in oil, have to pay.

Another interesting paradox is that American foreign aid funds are being used abroad to build highways without an additional gas tax being imposed in those countries, while in America—to finance our own roadbuilding program—we are called irresponsible if we do not immediately impose an additional 1-cent gas tax.

The American people have been sadly misled on the problem of raising the gas tax so that highway construction would continue. The administration has diverted moneys collected from the Federal highway fund for other purposes. There is at least $1.2 billion a year which belong in the Federal highway fund which is not getting there. Furthermore, there is no reason why, if taxes must be raised in this area, we must exclude taxing the fat oil companies by continuing to give them tax advantage after tax advantage while the average American must carry a heavier tax burden.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS].

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BROOMFIELD) there were—ayes 87, noes 144.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. BLATNIK and Mr. MACK of Washington.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 98, noes 170.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further committee amendments?

If not, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JENNINGS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 8678) to amend the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958 to make certain adjustments in the Federal-aid highway program, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 372, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. ROBISON. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROBISON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Works.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 243, nays 162, not voting 30, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means have until midnight tonight to file a report, along with supplemental or individual views, on the bill H.R. 9035, relating to the interest rate on savings bonds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

NET OPERATING CARRYBACKS RESULTING FROM RENEGOTIATION

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R.

2906) to extend the period for filing claims for credit or refund of overpayments of income taxes arising as a result of renegotiation of Government contracts, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House he read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 1105)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2906) to extend the period for filing claims for credit or refund of overpayments of income taxes arising as a result of renegotiation of Government contracts, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2906) to extend the period for filing claims for credit or refund of overpayments of income taxes arising as a result of renegotiation of Government contracts, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment added to the bill as passed the House a new section 2, directing the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate to allow credit or refund to Dexter Phillips and Jeanette H. Phillips of an income tax overpayment for the calendar year 1951, to the extent such overpayment was attributable to the erroneous inclusion in their gross income for such year of the amount received by Dexter Phillips in final distribution of his grandfather's estate. The House recedes.

AIME J. FORAND,
CECIL R. KING,
RICHARD M. SIMPSON,
NOAH M. MASON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2906, as it passed the House, extended the period of limitation for filing claims for credit or refund for overpayments of income taxes arising as a result of a renegotiation of Government contracts. The general rule relating to claims for credit or refund of income taxes is that such claims must be filed within 3 years from the time the tax return is filed or within 2 years from the time the tax is paid.

H.R. 2906, as it passed the House, changed this by providing that the period for filing a claim for credit or refund for the overpayment of taxes, to the extent attributable to the creation of, or an increase in, a net operating loss carryback resulting from the elimination of excessive profits by a renegotiation of a Government contract is not to expire before the end of 1 year after the month in which the agreement or order for the elimination of the excessive profits becomes final. This means for example, that in a situation where a renegotiation case is in the Tax Court the taxpayer will have a total of 1 year and 90 days within which to file a claim for credit or refund. This is true because 90 days is allowed after a Tax Court decision within which an appeal may be taken and the language of the bill provides 1 year after the agreement or order for the elimination of excessive profits becomes final within which to file a claim for credit or refund.

The Senate added an amendment providing a tax credit or refund involving an overpayment of income taxes of $383.64 by Dexter Phillips and Jeanette H. Phillips. The House conferees accepted this Senate amendment because of the equity involved. Briefly, the Phillipses filed a timely refund claim for their overpayment of taxes. The Inter-Revenue Service erroneously disallowed this refund claim. By the time the error on the part of the Internal Revenue Service was discovered the time for filing a refund claim had expired. In effect, a timely refund claim was filed and had the Internal Revenue Service handled the claim properly the refund would have been made in the ordinary course of events.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the conference report on H.R. 2906.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have concurred with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in urging the House to approve the conference report on H.R. 2906.

It will be recalled that the House-passed version of this legislation extended the period for filing claims for credit or refund of overpayments of income taxes where such overpayments result from renegotiation findings with respect to Government contracts. The Senate action on this legislation resulted in the adoption of an amendment to provide that notwithstanding any period of limitation otherwise applicable the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate is authorized to allow a credit or refund on behalf of certain designated taxpayers to the extent that such overpayment is attributable to the erroneous inclusion in gross income for 1952 taxable year of an inheritance received by the taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment is meritorious and has been made necessary by an erroneous position taken by a representative of the Internal Revenue Service. It is appropriate that the House conferees have concurred in this Senate amendment.

SOCIAL SECURITY COVERAGE FOR CERTAIN STATE AND LOCAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 213) to provide additional time within which certain State agreements under section 218 of the Social Security Act may be modified to secure coverage for nonprofessional school district employees, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 1107)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 213) to provide additional time within which certain State agreements under section 218 of the Social Security Act may be modified to secure coverage for nonprofessional school district employees, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 213) to provide additional time within which certain State agreements under section 218 of the Social Security Act may be modified to secure coverage for nonprofessional school district employees, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the text of the bill added a new section 2, amending section 218(p) of the Social Security Act so as to include California, Kansas, North Dakota, and Vermont among the States (listed in such section 218(p)) which are permitted to extend old-age, survivors, and disability insurance coverage (under their agreements with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare) to services performed by State and local employees in policemen's and firemen's positions covered by State or local retirement systems. This amendment does not require the coverage of policemen or firemen in the four newly specified States, of course, or automatically bring any of them within the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program; coverage under such a program would still require appropriate action by the State government and acceptance by the members of the retirement system involved. The House recedes.

The Senate amendment to the text of the bill also added a new section 3, permitting the agreement entered into with the State of Oklahoma under section 218 of the Social Security Act to be modified (at any time before 1962) so as to make it applicable to services performed in policemen's positions under a State or local retirement system by individuals who are ineligible on the date of enactment of the bill (or, if earlier, when last employed in such positions) to be members of such system, where the State before 1959 has made payments to the Treasury (representing amounts equivalent to employment taxes, as provided for under section 218(e)(1)) with respect to some part of the services performed in such positions by the individuals involved. Any such modification would apply to all services performed by such an individual after the date of enactment of the bill, as an employee of a city or other political subdivision to which the modification applies, in a policeman's position covered by a retirement system of which he is ineligible (at the time he performs such services) to become a member (and subject to the right of the State under section 218(c)(7) to designate whether or not his coverage shall continue in the event he subsequently becomes eligible for membership in such a system). The modification would also apply to any such services performed before the date of enactment of the bill, to the extent that payments to the Treasury under section 218(e)(1) were made (including payments which were returned to the State before the date of enactment of the bill or the date the modification was entered into, if the State repays the refunded amounts to the Treasury within the normal reporting period prescribed under section 218(e) for additional payments resulting from modifications of State agreements) with respect to such services at the time or times established pursuant to law. The House recedes.

The Senate amendment to the title of the bill was designed to reflect in the title the changes made by the amendment to the text of the bill discussed above. In view of the action taken by the conferees on the latter amendment, the House recedes.

W. D. MILLS,
AIME J. FORAND,
CECIL R. KING,
RICHARD M. SIMPSON,
NOAH M. MASON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, as may be recalled the House passed H.R. 213 unanimously on March 23, 1959, and in the form in which it passed the House the purpose of the bill was to provide an additional period of time within which certain State agreements under section 218 of the Social Security Act may be modified to secure coverage for nonprofessional school district employees.

The Senate amended this bill in several respects, and the conferees, as is indicated by the statement of the managers on the part of the House, concluded that the Senate amendment should be agreed to.

The amendments are as follows:

California, Kansas, North Dakota, and Vermont would be added to the list of States in section 218(p) of the Social Security Act which are permitted to extend old-age, survivors, and disability insurance coverage under agreements with the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to policemen and firemen in positions covered by State and local retirement systems. As the Members know, this coverage can only be extended by a written referendum wherein the persons affected vote in favor of such coverage.

Another amendment would permit the agreement entered into with the State of Oklahoma under section 218 to be modified so as to make it applicable to services performed in policemen's positions under a State or local retirement system by individuals who are ineligible on the date of enactment of the bill or when last employed in such positions to be members of such retirement systems. This provision would apply only in those cases where the State before 1959 has made payments to the Treasury with respect to part of the services performed by such individuals.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have joined with the able chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in urging the House to agree to the conference report on the bill H.R. 213.

It will be recalled that as this legislation passed the House its purpose was to allow the modification of certain State agreements entered into with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to provide for old-age and survivors insurance coverage for nonprofessional school district employees. The House-passed legislation allowed an additional period of time in which the agreements could be modified to accomplish this purpose.

The Senate has amended this legislation to include the States of Oklahoma, Kansas, North Dakota, and Vermont in the list of States which are allowed to extend old-age and survivors insurance coverage to services performed by employees of such State or political subdivisions thereof in any policemen's or firemen's positions covered by a State or local retirement system. Under present law there are 12 States which are permitted to extend coverage to policemen and firemen; the list includes Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Maryland, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Washington, and Hawaii. It should be made clear that the coverage extended to policemen and firemen in any of these States only becomes available after a referendum and a vote in favor of such coverage by the employees affected.

The House conferees have concurred in this Senate amendment.

FREE IMPORTATION OF TOURIST LITERATURE

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 2411) to amend paragraph 1629 of the Tariff Act of 1930 so as to provide for the free importation of tourist literature, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

"SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph 1720 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (19 U.S.C., sec. 1201, par. 1720), is amended to read as follows:

"'PAR. 1720. Models of inventions and of other improvements in the arts, to be used exclusively as models, or exclusively as exhibits in exhibitions at any college, academy, school, or seminary of learning, any society or institution established for the encouragement of the arts, science, or education, or any association of such organizations.'

"(b) Paragraph 1807 of such Act, as amended (19 U.S.C., sec. 1201, par. 1807), is amended to read as follows:

"'PAR. 1807. (a) Original paintings in oil, mineral, water, vitreous enamel, or other colors, pastels, original mosaics, original drawings and sketches in pen, ink, pencil, or watercolors, or works of the free fine arts in any other media including applied paper and other materials, manufactured or otherwise, such as are used on collages, artists' proof etchings unbound, and engravings and woodcuts unbound, lithographs or prints made by other hand transfer processes unbound, original sculptures or statuary; but the terms "sculpture" and "statuary" as used in this paragraph shall be understood to include professional productions of sculptors only, whether in round or in relief, in bronze, marble, stone, terra cotta, ivory, wood, metal, or other materials, or whether cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand from the solid block or mass of marble, stone, alabaster, or from metal, or other material, or cast in bronze or other metal or substance, or from wax or plaster, or constructed from any material or made in any form as the professional productions of sculptors only, and the term "original", as used in this paragraph to modify the words "sculptures" and "statuary", shall be understood to include the original work or model and not more than ten castings, replicas, or reproductions made from the sculptor's original work or model, with or without a change in scale and regardless of whether or not the sculptor is alive at the time the castings, replicas, or reproductions are completed. The terms "painting", "mosaic", "drawing", "work of the free fine arts", "sketch", "sculpture", and "statuary", as used in this paragraph, shall not be understood to include any articles of utility or for industrial use, nor such as are made wholly or in part by stenciling or any other mechanical process; and the terms "etchings", "engravings", and "woodcuts", "lithographs", or "prints made by other hand transfer processes", as used in this paragraph, shall be understood to include only such as are printed by hand from plates, stones, or blocks etched, drawn, or engraved with hand tools and not such as are printed from plates, stones or blocks etched, drawn, or engraved by photochemical or other mechanical processes.

"'(b) Original works of the free fine arts, not provided for in subparagraph (a), subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe as to proof that the article imported represents some school, kind, or medium of the free fine arts. The term "original works of the free fine arts" as used herein shall not be understood to include any article of utility or for industrial use.'

"(c) Paragraph 1809 of such Act, as amended (19 U.S.C., sec. 1201, par. 1809), is amended to read as follows:

"'PAR. 1809. (a) Works of art, collections in illustration of the progress of the arts, sciences, agriculture, or manufactures, photographs, works in terra cotta, parian, pottery, or porcelain, antiquities and artistic copies thereof in metal or other material, imported in good faith for exhibition purposes within the territorial limits of the United States by any State or by any society or institution established for the encouragement of the arts, science, agriculture, or education, or for a municipal corporation, and all like articles imported in good faith by any society or association, or for a municipal corporation, for the purpose of erecting a public monument, and not intended for sale nor for any other purpose than herein expressed; but bond shall be given, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, for the payment of lawful duties which may accrue should any of the articles aforesaid be sold, transferred, or used contrary to this paragraph within five years after the date of entry hereunder and such articles shall be subject at any time within such five-year period to examination and inspection by the proper officers of the customs: Provided, That the privileges of this subparagraph (a) shall not be allowed to associations or corporations engaged in or connected with business of a private or commercial character.

"'(b) In connection with the entry of works of art and other articles claimed to be free of duty under this paragraph, surety on bonds may be waived in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"'(c) Articles entered under this paragraph may be transferred, subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, from an organization specified in subparagraph (a) to another such organization or temporarily to a commercial gallery or other premises for exhibition and not for sale.'

"(d) Paragraph 1811 of such Act, as amended (19 U.S.C., sec. 1201, par. 1811), is amended to read as follows:

"'PAR. 1811. (a) Works of art (except rugs and carpets made after the year 1700), collections in illustration of the progress of the arts, works in bronze, marble, terra cotta, parian, pottery, or porcelain, artistic antiquities, and objects of art of ornamental character or educational value which shall have been produced prior to the year 1830, subject to such regulations as to proof of antiquity as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. Picture frames classifiable under this subparagraph may be entered at any port of entry.

"'(b) Violins, violas, violoncellos, and double basses, of all sizes, made in the year 1800 or prior year.

"'(c) Ethnographic objects made in traditional aboriginal styles and made at least fifty years prior to their date of entry, subject to such regulations as to proof of antiquity as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.'

"(e) Paragraph 1812 of such Act, as amended (19 U.S.C., sec. 1201, par. 1812), is amended to read as follows:

"'PAR. 1812. Gobelin and other handwoven tapestries fit only for use as wall hangings, and valued at not less than $20 per square foot.'

"(f) This section shall become effective with respect to merchandise entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption on or after the thirtieth day after the date of enactment of this Act."

"SEC. 3. (a) Paragraph 1631(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (19 U.S.C., sec. 1201, par. 1631(a)), is further amended by inserting 'book binding or cover,' after 'book,'.

"(b) The amendment made by this section shall apply with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption during the two-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and to articles covered by entries or withdrawals which have not been liquidated or the liquidation of which has not become final on such date of enactment."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, in the form in which it passed the House of Representatives, the purpose of H.R. 2411 was to amend paragraph 1629 of the Tariff Act of 1930, a free list provision, by adding at the end thereof a new subparagraph covering tourist literature issued by certain groups and which relates chiefly to places or travel facilities outside the continental United States. As may be recalled, the House bill passed the House of Representatives unanimously on March 23, 1959.

The Senate added two amendments to the House bill. Each of the Senate amendments is identical to separate bills on the same subject which have just recently been unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means and which have already passed the House of Representatives.

First, the Senate added an amendment to provide for the temporary free entry of certain bookbindings imported for the covering of books. The language of this amendment is identical to H.R. 4576 as it passed the House of Representatives on August 18, 1959. As may be recalled, I explained on the floor at that time that H.R. 4576 would amend paragraph 1631(a) of the free list of the Tariff Act of 1930 to include therein book bindings or covers and to provide for the duty free treatment of such imports for a period of 2 years from the date of enactment of the bill. The Senate amendment which has been added to H.R. 2411 will accomplish this same purpose.

Second, the Senate added language to H.R. 2411, the purpose of which, as I understand it, is to liberalize the definition of "works of art" which may be imported duty free so as to include modern art forms and to ease restrictions on the importation of articles of educational or artistic value which are meant for exhibition and not for sale.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that approximately a week ago the House passed H.R. 6249 which was introduced by our colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the Honorable LEE METCALF, and which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means, with certain amendments. The language of the Senate amendment on this subject is identical to the language which was reported by the Committee on Ways and Means in connection with H.R. 6249, by Mr. METCALF, and which was passed by the House of Representatives on August 25, 1959.

The House committee report which accompanied H.R. 6249 explained in considerable detail the purpose of the bill, H.R. 6249, as it was reported from the Committee on Ways and Means. Inasmuch as the language of the Senate amendment to H.R. 2411 is identical to the language of H.R. 6249, as reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, it is my understanding that the purpose of the Senate amendment is precisely the purpose expressed and explained in the House committee report on H.R. 6249.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON] may extend his remarks at this point and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have joined with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to urge that the House agree to the Senate amendments to H.R. 2411. This legislation as it passed the House provided for the free importation of certain tourist literature relating to places or travel facilities outside the continental United States.

The Senate passed version of this legislation included amendments to provide for the free importation of models of inventions, works of art, to be used for exhibition purposes by States and certain societies and institutions. A further Senate amendment would allow for the temporary free entry of certain bookbindings imported for the covering of books.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my remarks on the highway bill inserted in the body of the RECORD during the debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENTS TO SOIL BANK ACT

Mr. BREEDING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the body of the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREEDING. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced legislation to extend the period of time during which the Secretary of Agriculture may enter into conservation reserve contracts under the soil bank program and to provide for a gradual expansion of the acreage which can be brought into the program.

Under my bill, the effective date of the program would be extended through 1965. The following goals would be established:

	Acres
1961	36,000,000
1962	44,000,000
1963	52,000,000
1964	60,000,000
1965	68,000,000

The bill also prohibits more than 50 percent of the tillable acreage of any farm from being put into the program. This will prevent situations whereby entire farming areas are removed from production, thus creating a serious condition for merchants and suppliers in small towns which serve nearby farming areas.

The bill retains the present $5,000 limitation on the annual payments under any one contract.

I realize time is rapidly running out on the present session of Congress. However, I introduced the bill so it could be referred to the House Agriculture Committee. I hope when we return in January that this legislation can be placed high on the agenda of the committee.

It is none too soon to be giving serious thought to the future of the program. If it is continued, it should be on a scale large enough to make possible a significant reduction in production and relieve some of the overproduction which presently plagues the country.

I trust it will be possible for the Agriculture Committee to go into the problem thoroughly soon after Congress reconvenes.

EXTENSION OF REFINANCING LOAN AUTHORITY

Mr. GRANT submitted a conference report and statement on the bill, H.R. 7629, to make permanent the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans under section 17 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, and for other purposes.

REPORTING AT ITS BEST

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the body of the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, Fidel Castro is a much misunderstood and misrepresented man. William Attwood, the foreign editor of Look Magazine, has written an article about Castro in the current issue of Look. It is by far the best appraisal I have seen of Fidel Castro.

The article is political reporting at its best. Editor Attwood did a superb job of digging out his facts, and of interpreting them. I sincerely hope Castro will read, ponder and heed Mr. Attwood's conclusions.

Based on my knowledge of Castro and Cuba, I find this report to be a balanced and an honest presentation.

So far—

Attwood writes—

the situation is not as bad as some of the scare stories you read. There are still some hard-working professionals in the Cabinet. And it is certainly inaccurate to say that Cuba is virtually a Communist dictatorship. The press, through sadly lacking in courage, is free to print what it likes. There are no collective farms, no iron curtain. No one is being tortured by the secret police—as they were less than a year ago under Batista. There is no Soviet ambassador telling a puppet government what to do. And the circulation of the Communist paper, Hoy, is barely 5,000 in a nation of 6 million.

But, he goes on to point out, "you can smell a police state in the making." He believes Castro's knowledge of the outside world is woefully limited. He thinks the real tragedy of Fidel Castro is "that he could have done so much for his country had he been less impatient and less confused."

Attwood says we have no business lecturing Cubans. Castro is their problem. "Castro means well," Attwood writes, "He has good intentions." Salvation for Castro and for Cuba may well come if Castro realizes in time that his best contribution is not as the top administrator.

No one should discount Castro's great contribution to Cuba and all Latin America. He led a revolution that overthrew a cruel and greedy dictator. He did away with a police state and brought individual freedom to Cubans.

Without lecturing Castro I repeat what I have said many times publicly and to him personally: Presidential and congressional elections should be held before the end of 1960 and the exact date should be announced immediately. More than anything, his government needs an organized and legitimate opposition.

William Attwood's article is a valuable contribution to Cuban-American relations. It is gratifying to know that it will be read by millions of persons in both countries and elsewhere in a world that will, as Attwood points out, have to deal in the immediate future with other leaders like Fidel Castro.

Under unanimous consent previously granted, I am inserting the text of Mr. Attwood's article and his interview with Fidel Castro:

THE TRAGEDY OF FIDEL CASTRO

(By William Attwood)

The undisputed boss of Cuba is doing what comes most naturally to him. He is talking his head off about the revolution to a group of his worshipful friends. The scene is the Agrarian Reform Institute—one of Fidel Castro's pet projects—and the meeting is one of those improvised, semiofficial bull sessions that he gets into a dozen times a day. As usual, he is doing most of the talking, because very few people interrupt the boss in Cuba today.

This makes it hard to have a conversation with Castro, even if you're lucky enough to catch up with him. In some ways, it's harder to find the man, now that he's Prime Minister, than it was a year ago, when he was still hiding from Batista's troops in the Sierra Maestra Mountains. He is seldom in his office. His daily schedule changes from hour to hour as he rushes around the city and countryside. He sleeps when he feels like it, at odd hours and in a variety of beds. Sometimes he just disappears. I pity any Martian landing in Havana and asking a Cuban, "Take me to your leader."

More than a week went by before I cornered him—in the presidential plane. Together, we flew to Camaguey. On the way back, late at night, we got to talking about other chiefs of state I had met. For once, Fidel Castro was actually listening. He seemed especially interested in President Gamal Abdel Nasser of the United Arab Republic, and wanted to know if I detected a resemblance between them. "You're a lot alike," I said, "except you're much more disorganized."

He leaned back and nodded. "I know," he said. "I try to do too much." His cigar glowed in the dim light of the cabin. Then he bent forward and held my arm. "But remember, I am an emotional man."

Fidel Castro is emotional, all right, if by that you mean idealistic, impatient, impulsive, thin-skinned, erratic, and naive. He is also a skilled manipulator of crowds, a compulsive talker who has little sense of time and not much need of sleep and—at times—a lonely looking man with bewildered eyes. Like most emotional men, he is in deeper trouble than he probably suspects.

There is nobody quite like him in politics today, and it's important that we Americans try to understand him. We are living in a revolutionary generation, when people who never had much to look forward to are no longer accepting their fate; and Castro is a product of this generation, one of its angry young men. We can expect to see many more, in Asia and Africa as well as in Latin America. They'll be emotional, too, and nationalistic. Chances are they'll also be anti-American, if only because we Americans, who haven't needed a revolution in 180 years, now seem to stand for the status quo, for stability, for anybody—even dictators—who won't rock the boat.

A CONQUERING HERO

Castro and his kind are born rockers of boats. As a symbol of resistance to a brutal and corrupt dictatorship, he was a living legend and a national hero before turning 30. When he drove into Havana with his barbudos last January, he was a knight in shining armor, leading an army with banners. He was like De Gaulle in liberated Paris. He could do no wrong.

Now, 8 months later, the armor is tarnished; the banners, wilting. Former associates are calling him a Red or plotting his assassination. His expressive face often wears a hunted look.

What happened?

What happened, first of all, is that a great many propertied people who looked forward to an old-fashioned political change of regime are now shocked to discover that they are in for a new-fashioned, full-fledged (though jerry-built) social and economic revolution.

Others who did favor a real revolution are disenchanted by Castro's slapdash military rule and government-by-crony. They expected him to be an efficient executive, forgetting that he never ran anything in his life but a backwoods conspiracy.

This attempt by inexperienced idealists to remake Cuban society has thus resulted in 8 months of confusion, disorganization and creeping economic paralysis. Capital needed for industrialization plans is frozen or fleeing the country as one hastily conceived decree follows another: Feudal landholdings meant that agrarian reform was needed—but not to the extent of hurting production; rent gouging meant that controls were needed—but not to the extent of halting new construction; tax evasion meant that new legislation was needed—but not to the extent of discouraging investment by excessive corporate levies.

So far, the situation is not as bad as some of the scare stories you read. There are still some hard-working professionals in the Cabinet. And it is certainly inaccurate to say that Cuba is virtually a Communist dictatorship. The press, though sadly lacking in courage, is free to print what it likes. There are no collective farms, no iron curtain. No one is being tortured by the secret police (as they were less than a year ago under Batista). There is no Soviet ambassador telling a puppet government what to do. And the circulation of the Communist paper, Hoy, is barely 5,000 in a nation of 6 million.

The fact remains that when you sniff the air in Cuba, you can smell a police state in the making. Dangerous slogans are beginning to appear, such as, "Friendship ends where duty begins" (totalitarian double talk for "Denounce your neighbor"). "Youth patrols" of grade-school kids are being given military training. The death penalty can now be imposed for such vaguely worded crimes as incitement to terrorism or robbing the Treasury. The right of habeas corpus was only recently restored—and arbitrary arrests by the military police are not uncommon. Anyone who publicly criticizes Castro runs the risk of being branded a "counterrevolutionary," in the same way that the late Senator Joseph McCarthy used to pin the Communist label on his critics.

All this so-called revolutionary vigilance causes apprehension. So the critics who dare not speak up eventually begin to plot, the plots are discovered, and the vigilance gets more drastic. And the clumsy, vicious cycle plays into the hands of the small but disciplined group of Communists who are quietly and busily trying to worm their way into key posts in the armed forces.

The saddest thing about Cuba's slowly curdling revolution is that no one is really to blame but Fidel Castro himself. For he has perpetuated the inevitable confusion and excesses of any political upheaval by trying to be the one-and-only ringmaster in a circus too big for him to handle.

Calling Castro a Communist agent is nonsense. He hasn't the discipline to be a Communist. He's the type that goes down the drain when the real Communists take over a country. It is much more accurate to call him a prima donna who has no business being a prime minister.

Consider the problem of getting to see him (a serious problem for any government official because very little can be done without his approval). Some officials with responsible jobs have not been able to talk with him since February. It took photographer Andrew St. George and me 10 days of patience and perseverance to arrange it. Yet this was way under par for American reporters, many of whom have stopped trying.

For a whole week, Cabinet meetings were called and canceled while Castro wandered in the back country, revisiting old haunts, sometimes out of telephone range. His private secretary in Havana was no help. ("You know how he is," she sighed.) The editors of his own paper, Revolución, could not even cover his movements because they never knew where he would turn up next. One day, instead of addressing a rally of 100,000 people in Pinar del Río, he flew to Havana at 3 a.m. and headed for the apartment of Celia Sánchez, one of his assistants, who always has a room ready for him. ("I sleep in a different place every three nights," he told me later, "to avoid all the people who would come to me with their problems.")

Next morning, at the apartment, we got word to meet him at the palace, where he would be holding a long-delayed Cabinet meeting. So we joined the throng of official and unofficial hangers-on who milled through the marble halls—the damp civilians with heavy brief cases; the pretty girls with nothing to do; the Nicaraguan exiles hoping for a pat on the back; the hairy soldiers scratching themselves, combing their curly locks and examining each other's miscellaneous hardware as though they had just taken the building by storm.

When Castro arrived with his usual surging retinue of amiable brigands, he promptly vanished into the conference room, and we were left outside to while away the next 8 hours as best we could. When he emerged (after unexpectedly announcing a $135 million public-works program to give jobs to Cuba's 700,000 unemployed), we got our car and fell in behind his green Chevrolet as it pushed through a crowd of squealing women and roared off into the night. Trailing him to the Hilton Hotel was no problem; he stops for red lights. But there we lost him again. After a quick shower in a private suite, he vanished again.

The next day was more of the same. Fidel never did get back to the Hilton, nor to Celia's. There was a rumor that he might appear at the Agrarian Reform Institute, so all the people who were trying to see him turned up there. A nervous little man with a brief case was mopping his brow. "This is a crazy way to run a country," he said, but not very loud.

We finally located Castro at the Air Force headquarters, closeted with his brother Raul. Long-haired teen-agers with tommy guns kept arresting us and letting us go. Finally, I said the hell with it and went back to the hotel to make an airline reservation to New York.

But we live in an age of miracles. At 4 the next morning, a reporter for Revolución finally got to Castro and talked him into inviting us to go to Camagüey aboard his private plane.

It was a 2-hour ride each way, and I had plenty of things to ask him about. But coming back, we just talked. He'd had a hard day: an animated lunch with local officials, a 3-hour harangue to several thousand farmers, and a long session with the agrarian reform people. He began asking me questions: Had I been to Russia and the other Communist countries? How did the people feel? How did the government officials live?

When I told him that at least 90 percent of the people in countries like Poland and Hungary hated the system, he wanted to know why. I explained what a real police state was like and how it was imposed by the Red Army. I mentioned the collectives, where the state robbed farmers of their land, and the Communist ruling class, who live like old-fashioned despots.

SOME QUESTIONS ABOUT RUSSIA

Castro nodded. "That's terrible," he said. "We don't want anything like that here. People must have something to call their own. We want our people to be free."

He asked about the Iron Curtain. Was it true that people in Communist countries couldn't get out? And wasn't an American who went to Russia accused of being a Communist when he got home? When I told him that the Russians were prisoners in their own land and that 15,000 American tourists were going to the Soviet Union this year, he seemed genuinely surprised. "This is very, very interesting," he said. "I should have more time to talk to people who know about these things."

It dawned on me that Castro's knowledge of the outside world, like his grasp of economics, is woefully limited. He thinks of politics in terms of good guys and bad guys, and of economics in terms of foreign exploitation versus national self-sufficiency. But is this surprising? Castro started out as a young lawyer with a gift for words, and has been a professional revolutionary for most of his adult life. He has seen little of the world.

Today, overwhelmed by his job, he frankly misses the old days in the hills, when life seemed simple. Twice, he referred nostalgically to the Sierra Maestra, like Robin Hood dreaming of Sherwood Forest. His uniform, his beard, and his .45 have become symbols that remind him of happier times. His companions of those days, too, are the ones he looks to for guidance—people like Raul Castro, Juan Almeida, and Camilo Cienfuegos.

"These are friends I can trust," he said firmly, when I mentioned Communist infiltration into the Armed Forces which they command. "They were my companions when I was in danger."

Yet there is good reason to believe that some of his companions, even less sophisticated than he is, have already swallowed enough obsolete, half-baked Marxist ideas so that they are actively, if unwittingly, helping Cuba's Communists betray the revolution. Part of Castro's tragedy is that no one could ever convince him of this.

It was late at night when our plane landed in Havana. As the door swung open, he put his arm around my shoulder. "I wish we had more time to talk," he said. "I need more time." Then he was off behind a cluster of rifles, a big man in sweat-stained fatigues with a .45 on his hip.

What's in store for Fidel Castro? You don't have to strain your imagination to foresee a last act like a Shakespearean tragedy, with bodies littering the stage.

At the moment, his popularity is still tremendous, though the hot frenzy of the early days has cooled perceptibly. Women still react to him as though he combined the qualities of Clark Cable, Elvis Presley, Douglas MacArthur and Perry Como. Millions of small farmers are counting on him for land; 75 percent of the land has long been controlled by less than 10 percent of the people. Every Cuban who felt that he wasn't getting a square deal—and that's a lot of Cubans—now believes that, at last, there's somebody up there who really cares about him. The best estimate is that a solid 80 percent of the country is in his corner, making this the world's most popular dictatorship.

But Castro has made enemies, too, some powerful and resolved to get rid of him. Havana is the center of this so-far leaderless but angry opposition. It includes most big property owners, as well as thousands of Cubans who lived off the now-moribund tourist trade. Many of the educated middle class are also turning against him, disturbed by his radical and violent oratory.

The big danger now is that some of these oppositionists are going underground, plotting the assassination of the man who once could do no wrong and now, in their eyes, can do no right. If such a plot succeeded—as it well might—the result would be disastrous for the plotters as well as for Cuba. It would mean martyrdom for Fidel and bloody reprisals in his name that would plunge the country into chaos and civil war.

Other, less desperate oppositionists clamor for U.S. intervention—whatever that means. Military action, even as disguised as was the Guatemala operation, would turn all of Latin America against us. Economic pressure, such as cutting the Cuban sugar quota, would accomplish nothing except to provoke bitter outcries about dollar imperialism. Revolutionaries like Castro don't yield to this kind of pressure; they get tougher, as we found out with Nasser.

Assuming the unlikely worst—that the Communists did take over from Castro—then what? Newspaper stories about a "Communist beachhead imperiling the United States" are just plain silly. Unless the Russians actually set up missile launching pads in Cuba, even a temporary Communist dictatorship would pose no threat to us. It might even be a salutary lesson to the rest of Latin America. For no real Communist government could last long unless the Soviet army was there to back it up, as in Hungary. The Cubans themselves would get rid of it.

So it's fair to say that U.S. interference in Cuba right now can only help the Communists, whose present aim is not so much to seize power as to poison relations between Latin America and the United States.

Cuba's future under Castro is a problem for Cubans themselves to solve; we have no business lecturing them. And there is some reason for hope. For all his mistakes, Castro means well; he has good intentions. Even when he denounces former associates as traitors, he does so in order to defend his precious revolution. Because his real enemies at home and abroad call him a Communist, he believes that anyone who attacks Communist influence in Cuba is guilty of spreading a slander against him and his idealistic cause.

Sometimes good intentions pave the road to hell, but sometimes they don't. As this is being written, a group of moderates among Castro's anxious supporters and loyal opposition are trying to persuade him to call off his one-man road show, turn the business of government over to professionals and take over the army again, where he could remain as the watchdog of the revolution. The problem thus far is that he is accessible to so few people, and so few have dared talk bluntly to him. (As he told me, "I am an emotional man.")

So this may be too much to hope for. But even if Castro continues to run the show, he may yet be persuaded to mend his ways, for the revolution's sake. If he broke sharply with the Communists who did so little to help him overthrow Batista; if he modified his agrarian-reform plans so as to minimize injustice; if he restored the rule of law and set a date for elections—if he just did this much, most of his opposition would wither away, and Cuba's future would be bright.

Looking back, the real tragedy of Fidel Castro is that he could have done so much for his country had he been less impatient and less confused. But for this, Cuba might today be on the threshold of unparalleled economic prosperity coupled with long-overdue social reforms.

Looking ahead, his tragedy is that he may refuse to listen to hardheaded advice and stubbornly prolong his reckless, hoarse, and turbulent spree. In this case, Fidel Castro will become the world's likeliest target for an assassin's bullet between now and the end of the year.

A LONG HARD TALK IN CASTRO'S PLANE

Talking with Fidel Castro in his own plane (which used to belong to Batista) has two advantages: He can't escape, and nobody interrupts you. Our talk, which lasted about 4 hours, was conducted in a workable blend of English and Spanish, and what follows is a selection of my questions together with a condensed version of his answers. Whatever else may be said of him, Castro is garrulous. But he is also a dedicated and sincere young man who really believes what he says.

Question: "What mistakes have you made since you took power?"

Answer: "I don't know. I think I've done the best I could. If I haven't done better, it's because I haven't had time enough. Look, if we had not done a good job, we would not have more than 90 percent of the people with us today. That is what our latest public-opinion survey shows."

Question: "Do you believe that public-opinion polls are a substitute for elections in a democracy?"

Answer: "No. We will have elections when the revolution has advanced enough, when the social reforms are carried out, when everyone has a decent standard of living, when we have eliminated unemployment and lifted up the country. When will this be? It depends on circumstances. Our job could be interrupted. So I do not want to set an exact date for elections. But I can tell you it will be inside of 4 years. You must remember that Cubans are a passionate people who are now in a revolutionary process. Our first duty is for all to work. Elections would be distracting just now. Of course, if public opinion turns against me, I will not try to hold the power 1 minute more."

Question: "How will you know if public opinion turns against you?"

Answer: "It's easy. I can tell when I go among the people. Just wait until you see the crowds in Camagüay when we arrive. Every politician is sensitive to public opinion. I am too."

Question: "Would you be willing to hold a referendum to find out if the people want elections?"

Answer: "I don't think it is necessary, but we may do it. An election is a fight for power, but a referendum is different. It is like consulting public opinion. It might be a good idea. Meanwhile, if Americans do not think I am right about public opinion, I will be glad to invite any reputable public-opinion institute to come to Cuba and make its own independent survey."

Question: "How would you describe Cuba's present form of government?"

Answer: "This is a provisional government—a transitory regime. As a consequence of the revolution, power was taken by the organizations that made the revolution. So this provisional government has a lot of power right now. But it is in complete agreement with public opinion. The proof is that after 6 months nearly everybody likes what we are doing. So you could call this government a regime of public opinion."

Question: "Is it possible to criticize the actions of your government without being called a counterrevolutionary?"

Answer: "It is. We have many honest critics. What is an honest critic? One whose objective is not to destroy the revolution but to help it. I myself am sometimes one of the strongest critics of our government."

Question: "Why was the right of habeas corpus suspended?"

Answer: "Because we had 7 years of crimes and abuses. The judiciary had to be reorganized. We had thousands of war criminals to be tried. If you stop justice for 7 years, you cannot restore it in 24 hours." [The right of habeas corpus was restored August 7.—Editor.]

Question: "Isn't there something wrong with the administration of justice when you, the Prime Minister, have to order the release of a man like Enrique Llaca, who was recently jailed by the army after being freed by a civilian court?"

Answer: "Yes. I should not have to do everything. But you are wrong about Llaca. The judges were wrong to free him. There was evidence that he was in a conspiracy. Nevertheless, I ordered his release because I did not want things done as they were done under Batista, when the police could overrule the judges."

Question: "Why did you restore capital punishment in Cuba when it was outlawed in the 1940 constitution?"

Answer: "Let me say, first, that the executions are finished. Now, the worst cases are out of the way. But we are keeping capital punishment for certain crimes to insure the defense of society, to protect the people—crimes like robbing the treasury, robbing the property of the people. In the future, of course, the people will decide whether they want to keep capital punishment."

Question: "Today a Cuban can be put to death simply for 'inciting to terrorism.' As a lawyer, don't you see the danger in so drastic a decree?"

Answer: "This law is invoked only in specific cases where the facts are clear. Surely the man who pays another to make bombings is guiltier than the one who does the act. In any law, there are always dangers. What is important is the way the law is applied. And we will not apply such laws the way Batista did."

Question: "According to the public-opinion survey you mentioned only 1.3 percent of the people are against you. Then what are you afraid of?"

Answer: "I agree that this is a small percentage, but it is still about 70,000 people, former Batista policemen, moneylenders, big landlords, gangsters, assassins. Among them are many who know how to use weapons and to kill."

Question: "If someone shot you, who would take your place?"

Answer: "I have many companions who made this revolution with me. I suppose a group leadership would be substituted for personal leadership. Among them, at this time, would be my brother Raul. He seems to have a lot of support among the people, and he has acquired much experience."

Question: "What did you learn on your trip to the United States that you didn't know before?"

Answer: "I was surprised by the interest of the people. They are not indifferent about Latin America. They were more sensitive than I thought. I was surprised by this, because you Americans have not suffered from dictators. When I spoke there, I felt the same as when I speak in Cuba. I found much kindness and sympathy, and I have a good impression of the American people. I am very sincere when I tell you this."

Question: "Do you think you are getting a bad press in America? Do you care?"

Answer: "Many false things are being printed because Americans do not analyze what we are doing, and do not understand our problems. They are afraid of our agrarian reform. But Americans do not understand the need. They do not have big landlords who rob the country. They already have schools, roads, parks, hospitals, work for everybody. So your press is always looking for Communists in our revolution. But I am curing the social evils of Cuba, and that is the best defense of democracy. I wish more American reporters would come here and go into the country and talk to the people. Then they would understand and tell the truth. Of course I care. We are neighbors. We should understand each other."

Question: "Then why did you call former President José Figueres of Costa Rica a 'bad revolutionary' when he urged Cuba to aline itself with the West?"

Answer: "I will explain this. First, I was very disappointed that he forgot every visitor ought to be careful not to try to tell us what to do. When I was a visitor in your country, did I get up and tell you what to do? No, I only gave my opinion when I was asked. Also, Figueres said this at a time when Cuba was being attacked by your Congress, by your wire agencies, by many people. He said, too, at this time that America was 'too tolerable' of us. Emotion was high here in Cuba. Figueres did not understand the emotional situation."

Question: "Are you opposed to Communist as well as to right-wing dictatorships?"

Answer: "My nature is to be against all dictatorships."

Question: "Why doesn't Cuba—like the United States—have commercial and diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union and other Communist countries?"

Answer: "I think we will, mainly because we are interested in trade with all countries. We hope to sell our products in world markets. But now is not the opportune moment."

Question: "The Communists didn't make this revolution. The 26th of July movement did. So why don't you break with them openly before they corrupt your revolution?"

Answer: "Our ideas are very clear. They have nothing to do with communism. And the complete responsibility of power is in the hands of the 26th of July movement. There is no kind of participation of Communists in our government. But what we do not do is persecute any other political idea. This proves our democratic faith. This proves that we believe in the strength of our movement. We are not afraid of other ideologies."

Question: "Batista jailed you and then released you after 15 months. Would you do the same to a man who tried to organize an armed revolt against your regime?"

Answer: "I would never do what Batista did, such as assassinating 80 young men who were with me without a trial. It is more honest to punish by law. We would never assassinate. Myself and some others he did not kill in order to simulate legality. But you cannot compare me with Batista. He was in power for vanity, for robbery, for helping his friends. We are here only for helping the people, without privileges for anybody. And we administer the country with absolute honesty, without any kind of vanity. You can see that we live simply and in contact with the people like any other citizens."

Question: "Will there be changes made in the agrarian-reform law, or will it be strictly applied?"

Answer: "The law itself is firm and will not be changed. But it provides for flexibility so that it will not be applied unjustly. And remember, it will be a 3-year process."

Question: "Are you still interested in attracting foreign-capital investment to Cuba?"

Answer: "Yes, but we would prefer credits for machinery and factories. We want to establish our own industry and create our own capital. Now, we are spending millions of dollars on agricultural machinery, which we are getting principally from the United States. We would like to have credits that we could repay with the products of our new industries."

Question: "With so much to do at home, why are you trying to export revolution to the Dominican Republic?"

Answer: "We want to live in peace. We are not engaged in making trouble. It is dictators like (Rafael Leonidas) Trujillo who are endangering our revolution, helping our enemies. He is the one who exports assassins and pays for terrorist acts. What would Americans do if they had such an enemy nearby? That is why we are in sympathy with the Dominican rebels. There is one more thing I want to say to Americans: Do not be deceived by the propaganda of our enemies. Keep in mind the efforts we are making for the prosperity and happiness of our country. Let us be friends."

HOUSE RULES AND PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include a newspaper statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, several questions were raised as to the parliamentary procedure which should be followed by the House when the question of sustaining the veto of the President of the $1,251,477,808 public works appropriation bill was under consideration, a recapitulation of the vote was ordered by the Speaker.

Much, but not all, of what happened is to be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 2 at page 17753.

Reading it this morning, I found that much of what happened was, under the rules of the House, when Members revised their remarks as is permissible under the rules, omitted.

Unless it be our Parliamentarian, Lewis Deschler, the Member most familiar with our rules and practices is the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], the author of "Cannon's Procedure and Precedents in the House of Representatives."

But apparently the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], despite his long experience and expert knowledge, can become confused.

This thought is suggested by what is found this morning in the Baltimore Sun, under the byline of Rodney Crowther.

Permit me to quote from Mr. Crowther's story, with reference to the accuracy of which it has been my privilege to consult with several Members of the House who were present, heard the colloquy, and which, as reported by Mr. Crowther, was as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun, Sept. 3, 1959]

WORKS BILL VETO UPHELD IN HOUSE VOTE—REJECTION OF MEASURE SUSTAINED BY MARGIN OF ONE

(By Rodney Crowther)

WASHINGTON, September 2.—President Eisenhower won another victory over Congress today when the House by the narrow margin of one vote sustained his veto of the $1,251,477,808 public works appropriation bill.

The President had rejected the bill because it has $800 million of unbudgeted items which he is against starting this year.

VOTE—274 TO 138

The actual vote was 274 to pass the bill "the President's veto notwithstanding" to 138 votes against it, just one vote short of the two-thirds margin required to defeat the President.

Voting to override the veto were 263 Democrats and 11 Republicans. Voting to sustain the President were 132 Republicans and 6 Democrats. All members of the Maryland delegation voted to override.

Only one other House session this year has drawn a bigger and more excited gallery of spectators than the one today—the one which witnessed the acceptance of the Landrum-Griffin labor bill.

The tension mounted as the voting neared the finish with apparently enough votes in the bag for the Democrats to override.

ONE OF TENSEST 35 MINUTES

When the final name was called, however, unofficial tallies showed the Democrats one short of enough votes to pass the bill.

Then began one of the tensest 35 minutes the House has experienced this year.

Before the Speaker could announce the result Representative CANNON, Democrat, of Missouri, chairman of the powerful Appropriations Committee was standing calling for recognition.

"How am I recorded Mr. Speaker?" CANNON asked.

"Voted 'No'," the clerk replied.

"Thought I was voting 'Yea.' "

"I am not switching my vote—this was my bill, it originated with my committee, and I thought I was voting 'yea' and I want to be so recorded."

The House burst into loud applause and there was a wave of rustling and excitement in the galleries. The Democrats were now ahead one vote in their frantic battle to overturn the President.

Then seemingly to clinch a victory another Democrat, Representative DIGGS, of Michigan, who had not yet voted walked into the chamber and into the well of the House and asked to be recorded. He voted "aye," and there was more applause.

Then occurred what looked from the galleries like many minutes of confusion as the party leaders and party whips on both sides of the aisle rushed about endeavoring to get Members to switch their votes while others undertook to bring in absentees.

Representative HERLONG, Democrat, of Florida, who had voted "no" walked to the well and asked to switch to "present."

Two Republicans, Representatives KNOX, of Michigan, and CRAMER, of Florida, who until then had not voted, voted "no," which were votes for the President.

Sensing that they probably were still short of votes the Republicans resorted to a stalling tactic which is often used when one side or another is a vote or two behind.

DEMOCRATS GROW IMPATIENT

One after another these Republicans who had in fact voted "no" marched to the well and asked "Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?"

Meanwhile Republican leaders were frantically trying to induce some of their members who had voted "aye" to switch.

The Democrats, impatient of the delay, jumped to their feet and loudly shouted: "Regular order," "regular order."

At this point Representative REUSS, Democrat, of Wisconsin, who had not answered the rollcall rushed breathlessly to the well with raised hand and voted "aye."

Whereupon three Republicans who had voted "aye" asked one after the other how they were recorded and said "off 'aye' and on 'no' " which meant that by now the margin of victory for the administration was once more one. They were Representatives CHENOWETH, of Colorado, FENTON, of Pennsylvania, and CURTIN, of Pennsylvania.

RECAPITULATION ASKED

CANNON after a hurried consultation at the Speaker's rostrum, took the microphone and said: "Mr. Speaker I asked a recapitulation."

Representative HALLECK, Republican of Indiana, the GOP leader opposed this and insisted that the vote be announced. But the Speaker ruled that a recapitulation was proper under the House rules.

The clerk read the names of those who had voted "aye."

"Are there any corrections?" RAYBURN asked.

When there were not he directed that the names of those who voted "no" be read.

Again he asked: "Are there any corrections?"

VOTE ANNOUNCED

When there were none, the Speaker then announced that the vote was 274 to 138 and that "the bill has not been passed."

Thunderous applause broke from the Republican side of the aisle and excited reporters tumbled over each other rushing to nearby telephones.

It was the 143d time a veto of President Eisenhower had been sustained. Never yet since he entered the White House January 20, 1953, has he been overridden.

Seventeen Members of the House crossed party lines during the voting. Republicans who voted to override were Representatives BAKER, of Tennessee; GAIN, of Pennsylvania; HORAN, of Washington; JENSEN, of Iowa; KEARNS, of Pennsylvania; MERROW, of New Hampshire; ROGERS, of Massachusetts; SILER, of Kentucky; SIMPSON, of Illinois; THOMSON, of Wyoming; and WEAVER, of Nebraska.

Democrats who voted to sustain the veto were Representatives ABBITT, of Virginia; FLYNT, of Georgia; MARSHALL, of Minnesota; MURRAY, of Tennessee; SMITH, of Virginia; and TUCK, of Virginia.

FATE OF BILL UNCERTAIN

What will be the fate of the vetoed bill was still uncertain late today.

Chairman CANNON said that his Appropriations Committee would meet tomorrow morning to take action on a new bill, stripped of the 67 new projects to which President Eisenhower objects.

Last week when the veto was announced Senator ELLENDER, Democrat of Louisiana, a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, announced that he would try to get the entire bill—unbudgeted items and all—attached to the still unreported mutual security appropriation bill.

MOVE SEEN DOUBTFUL

There were doubts that this could have succeeded in the Senate, but even if the Senate were to make such a move it appeared doubtful that the House conferees would look favorably on it.

Senator ELLENDER later today told reporters he intends to push ahead on his plan to attach the vetoed public works bill to the mutual security bill—"even if I get no more than one vote—my own."

The Senate Appropriations Committee is to meet on the foreign aid appropriation bill tomorrow, and ELLENDER said he would move at that time to tack on the works bill.

Mr. Speaker, my own recollection, as well as that of many other Members of the House, is in accord with the statement of Mr. Crowther.

Thinking that possibly we might have misunderstood, today it was my privilege to confer with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and he confirmed my recollection, when I read the statement to him, and stated that such was the situation.

One reason for my statement today is to suggest to Members who sometimes are embarrassed by a statement made by them, is that no matter how long the experience of the Member, no matter how capable he may be, no matter how alert, mistakes are not always avoidable.

The article should be helpful to all of us, for it outlines the procedure on a situation which does not often arise.

MAKING ALASKA AND HAWAII ELIGIBLE FOR PARTICIPATION IN DISTRIBUTION OF DISCRETIONARY FUNDS

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 373) providing for the consideration of S. 2208, a bill to provide that Alaska and Hawaii be eligible for participation in the distribution of discretionary funds under section 6(b) of the Federal Airport Act, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2208) to provide that Alaska and Hawaii be eligible for participation in the distribution of discretionary funds under section 6(b) of the Federal Airport Act. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] and I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of the bill, S. 2208, a bill on which there is, I understand, some controversy. I should state at the outset, I understand it is the purpose of the leadership to dispose of the rule, but to take up the bill itself at a later time.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no controversy on the rule, and I reserve the balance of my time. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I know of no objection to the rule. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HAS MIDEAST AID BEEN ALLOCATED BEFORE ECONOMIC AID BILL PASSES?

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, this morning's Washington Post carried a press news item bearing an Ankara date line with an Associated Press accreditation, which reads as follows:

THREE NATIONS IN MIDEAST GET $470 MILLION AID

ANKARA, September 2.—The United States has given $470 million in economic aid this year to the three Middle East members of the Central Treaty Organization, formerly the Baghdad Pact. They are Iran, Pakistan and Turkey.

The allocation was announced by Donald D. Kennedy of the United States at a meeting yesterday of the CENTO Economic Committee. He said the aid figure represents a 50-percent increase over American help to the three nations last year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that any reasonable person reading this article would conclude that it refers to a new commitment of funds. More than one-sixth of the current fiscal year has passed, and Mr. Kennedy is credited with announcing an "allocation" of "$470 million in economic aid this year."

Since the foreign aid appropriation bill has not even been reported in the Senate yet, I wonder where these new funds could possibly come from. I have tried to learn from the executive agencies involved what the facts are, but no one over there seems to know. I was advised that Mr. Kennedy was not expected to discuss funds to be allocated for the 1960 fiscal year and that it is therefore "supposed" that he must have been talking about funds already committed in fiscal year 1959.

Mr. Kennedy is a high official in the Department of State. He was representing the United States at the CENTO meeting when he spoke. However, no one in Washington knows just what he said. I am told now that the Department of State will seek to secure this information.

This is a matter of considerable significance. It surprises me that our foreign aid people in Washington are so poorly advised. Year after year foreign aid budget presentations are made on an "illustrative" basis because, it is contended to Congress, firm commitments cannot be made to foreign countries until after funds are appropriated. It is further consistently alleged that our own position would be weakened by the premature suggestion of an amount which would be available for allocation to a particular country. Now Mr. Speaker, here is a press report attributing to a top State Department official a commitment of $470 million in economic aid before the appropriation bill is passed.

It may be that the "supposition" of the Department of State and the ICA in Washington is correct and that Mr. Kennedy's remarks have been misconstrued. Whatever the facts are, the record should be set straight promptly. If, in fact, a new commitment has been made prior to the appropriation of funds, remedial action seems to be called for.

HOLLINGS FOR PRESIDENT

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, Woodrow Wilson is reported as having said that some day America will be surprised to find herself growing old, when she will be forced to adopt a new regimen of life. She will have to husband her industry, concentrate her resources; she will have to trust her best, not her average, men—that will be the time of change.

Mr. Speaker, if America is to survive as a great nation, I believe the time of change President Wilson spoke of is now at hand. The time of change could well be 1960. It could develop in the precinct meetings, the State conventions, the presidential preferential primaries, and the national conventions of both political parties. Mr. Speaker, I have predicted upon numerous occasions that a movement to give the American people a political choice in 1960 could well materialize in both the Democratic and Republican Parties. This movement is already underway at the grassroots in both parties.

I am happy that South Carolina's young, dynamic Governor, Ernest F. Hollings, is being mentioned in some quarters as a presidential possibility. Governor Hollings, believe it or not, said it might be possible to give the people of South Carolina a tax reduction next year. This at a time when we in Congress are talking about more taxes and more spending. Governor Hollings has often expressed himself as favoring States rights, free enterprise, and a return to constitutional government. Governor Hollings believes in a sound dollar, balanced budget, reduction in foreign aid, and putting "sip" into the reciprocal trade program.

At the Southern Governor's Conference in Puerto Rico, Governor Hollings was the only Governor to vigorously oppose the invitation to Khrushchev to visit the United States. Freedom-loving peoples everywhere are still saddened and shocked over the coming to America of this bloody, atheistic dictator. Khrushchev has been hoping and dreaming for this invitation, with free television and radio time, newspaper and magazine publicity. He is communism's greatest salesman. We, of all people, are giving him an open forum and the opportunity he desperately seeks. Governor Hollings in opposing this visit is showing concern for the future welfare of our Nation and the free world. He is demonstrating leadership and foresight during this time of appeasement, conformity, and compromise.

Since his stand in Puerto Rico I have had many inquiries here in Washington from over the country about the possibility of Governor Hollings' availability as a presidential candidate. Mr. Speaker, Governor Hollings is a man of experience, has an excellent war record, has youth, personality, charm, and I commend him to the Democratic Party for consideration.

PROGRAM FOR BALANCE OF WEEK

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I take this time in order to ask the majority leader as to the program for the balance of the week.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am very glad to respond to the question and advise the House that if the Senate gets through with the conference report on the labor bill it will come up tomorrow.

Another bill that will be considered tomorrow is that relating to interest on the series E- and H-bonds.

There is a conference report on the military construction bill; and there is this bill made in order by the rule just adopted. I do not know that we will reach all of them tomorrow but I am putting them on the program. That seems to be a pretty full program for tomorrow and I doubt if we could reach anything else, but the full Committee on Appropriations is meeting tomorrow morning in connection with the new Public Works Appropriation bill, and should that bill be reported out I would ask consent to consider the bill on Saturday. If that request is made and granted then that bill will be programed for Saturday.

Mr. HALLECK. I wonder if the gentleman would permit me at that point to suggest that as we are meeting tomorrow—and, of course, this will be notice in the RECORD as of today—if the appropriation bill is reported consent could be asked, and should it be refused that might determine as to whether we meet on Saturday.

Mr. McCORMACK. I appreciate the suggestion of my friend, but I think we should wait until we know that the full committee has reported the bill out. Of course, I would submit such a consent request if the chairman of the committee should not make it, but I think the proper time to make it is to wait until after the full committee has acted. If we then agree on a Saturday session, which is the intent now, and a unanimous-consent request is made after the bill is reported out, we will take it up at that time.

Mr. HALLECK. Can the gentleman give me any information as to next Monday?

Mr. McCORMACK. I was coming to that, and I am glad the gentleman inquires.

Projecting my mind ahead, all I can say is that on Monday the bills on the Consent Calendar will be called and several suspensions. I will announce them probably on Friday or Saturday, if we meet on Saturday. The reason I wait until the last day we meet in the week is to know that I am able to make a complete announcement and not piecemeal. I may say, with permission of the Members of the House, and agreed to by the leadership, if any rollcalls should take place on Monday they may go over until Tuesday?

Mr. HALLECK. As far as I am concerned, I would not object to that.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in order to clarify that situation, I ask unanimous consent that in the event of any rollcalls on Monday next the rollcalls go over until Tuesday, in view of the fact that Monday next is Labor Day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for the Committee on Appropriations to report a public works appropriation bill to the House for consideration on Saturday.

Mr. McCORMACK. I just stated, in response to the minority leader, and I do not want to put myself in an embarrassing or inconsistent position, that the request would be made after the committee acts tomorrow. I did not see the gentleman on the floor. If I had, I would have had the gentleman join in, but having made one statement I am going to ask the gentleman to withdraw it.

Mr. CANNON. I will make the request tomorrow. I will ask the leader to make the request tomorrow.

Mr. McCORMACK. I will after the full committee has acted.

LABOR AND FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced House Joint Resolution 518 to set up a joint congressional committee to study and report on the ways in which labor affects our foreign policy.

The struggle for economic improvement and political freedom now going on in many areas of the world may well be the most far-reaching effort in human history. The role played by the U.S. Government in cooperating with free people engaged in this struggle may well be decisive in the course of human history. It may decide the issue of political freedom and of human dignity in terms of man's ability to supply himself with the basic needs of life—for millions of this world's people.

There is one aspect of this battle which has not been widely recognized. That is the important participation of organizations of workers. Peoples throughout Asia, Africa and Latin America are looking more and more to these organizations as an instrument for improving their economic, social and political conditions.

NEED ACCURATE KNOWLEDGE

Because of this, it is of vital concern to the U.S. relations with these countries that these organizations have an accurate understanding of labor and manpower aspects of U.S. foreign policy. And, conversely, it is of vital importance that the United States in formulating foreign policy have accurate knowledge of the reactions and roles of these organizations.

But it would be a mistake to think of these organizations of workers in the newly developing countries as having any close resemblance to labor organizations in the United States or other industrialized nations. These organizations have different origins, different purposes, and different methods and objectives from our own labor organizations. They have been superimposed on a basically rural society for political or ideological reasons, and have developed as rural cooperatives, social welfare organizations, political parties, semifraternal groups, and in a few instances rudimentary industrial unions.

These differences, however, do not detract from their importance, for such organizations are a major part of the organized means for vocal and physical expression of the worker's dissatisfaction. International communism recognized this crucial role and quickly sought to use these labor organizations as instruments for the seizure of political power.

ANTI-COMMUNIST ELEMENT

In a significant number of these nations, however, the strongest anti-Communist element has come to be the trade unions. Often they have been the first organized force to realize that communism fosters a new and more vicious form of colonial exploitation than previously known. It is to our mutual advantage that the representatives of the vast number of people in these countries have every opportunity to see democracy work.

The world today is characterized by a ground swell of economic aspirations in almost all hitherto backward countries. Many of these countries strive to leap the gap of centuries by making the transition from a primitive to an industrial society in a short space of a few years. To do this the foremost problem is the availability and effective utilization of resources—financial, natural, and human.

Frequently—and all too typically—the pace of progress in the first two is nullified by the absence of human resources, in terms of manpower skills needed to operate the economic development machine. Facilities for analysis of manpower needs, and training programs to fill these needs at all levels—from top management to factory workers—are top priority requirements in most countries aspiring for economic betterment.

ENCOURAGE ECONOMIC GROWTH

The United States has clearly demonstrated on every occasion possible that its policy is one of unreserved encouragement to economic growth of newly developing countries. The human resources aspects of this policy merit the most serious and skilled consideration possible.

Because of the importance of labor in the development of our foreign policy, I have introduced a joint resolution to establish a select joint committee for a study of the relationships of labor and manpower problems to relevant aspects of U.S. foreign policy.

I hope that the committee can present to the Congress next year concrete recommendations as to ways in which present policies of the United States can be strengthened, existing machinery better utilized, and government and private efforts coordinated more closely and more effectively.

THE HEALTH FOR PEACE RESOLUTION

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment further today on a measure which may well be one of the most significant that the Congress can enact in this session with respect to the future welfare of our country and of the world. I refer to Senate Joint Resolution 41, a proposal for an international medical research program.

My interest in this program has been quickened by a message I have received from a very courageous man, Dr. Thomas A. Dooley. Dr. Dooley, as many of you know, is the young physician who has devoted practically all of his professional life to the healing of the sick in some of the remotest parts of Asia. He urges that the Congress act without delay to pass the health for peace legislation. Recently, he—like thousands of others each year throughout the world—fell victim to cancer. Following surgery, he plans to return to northern Laos and continue his heroic battle against disease among the population there.

I would like to quote from Dr. Dooley's message to me:

> I want to thank you and your colleagues in Congress for the support you have given to medical research. I know Tulane Medical College has recently developed a new technique for treating the type of cancer I have. I am deeply distressed that the health for peace Senate Joint Resolution No. 41, now in the Subcommittee on Health and Safety of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, may not be acted on before Congress adjourns. I feel that this would be a tragic waste of irretrievable time. Unless you have lived and worked in the primitive jungle as I have, you cannot realize what this means. Please do everything possible to get action on this vital bill before adjournment.

I can assure you that Dr. Dooley's plea for passage of the health for peace bill is not a selfish request. On the contrary, this young man's efforts—mostly carried out on the back doorstep of the Chinese Communist stronghold—have been to provide medical care and health services to those in need. But Dr. Dooley has seen, as he indicated to me, that there are many indirect benefits to be derived through health research and the application of new scientific knowledge in improving the health of peoples everywhere, as well as in changing the attitudes of oppressed people in favor of a free society.

The legislation proposed for an international medical research effort provides an ideal framework to do what Dr. Dooley and many other eminent witnesses have advocated before appropriate committees of both the House and Senate.

I feel that each one of us in Congress—acting on behalf of our own constituents, of the people of the United States, and of all people everywhere—must face the fact that time is a critical issue in both of the struggles directly involved in this legislation. One is the conquest of disease. The other is the achievement of good will among men. We cannot let time slip through our fingers while we ponder a course of action whose validity and promise have been fully explored and remain substantially unchallenged.

I am sure I express the strong consensus of the Members, and of the people, when I urge that we act now—not next year, but this year—to give shape and substance and dimension to what are otherwise well-meaning but meaningless aspirations.

I find it most regrettable that the administration has delayed progress toward enactment of this international medical research legislation by the familiar tactic of endorsing the general principles and goals of a proposed program, and then finding reasons to oppose it.

As I understand it, three arguments are advanced by the administration to buttress its negative or at best passive position.

One is that the new program would cost too much money. I would certainly agree that the full $50 million authorized each year for this long-range program should not be required during the initial year. And, I am sure, other sponsors and proponents of this bill would be happy to meet this reservation on the part of the administration by assuring them that only the funds that are needed and can be effectively used—perhaps only $10 to $20 million—will be appropriated if this legislation is enacted.

I have introduced bills, and others have too, with the understanding that they can get along on much less than the full authorization perhaps $5 million or $10 million for the first year. So that could be resolved without any question.

A second question raised by the administration has to do with the level of government at which the responsibility for operating policies of this program are to be placed. Here, too, I and—I am sure—many other sponsors of the bill—are willing to meet the administration halfway. Certainly as a function of the executive branch, the International Health Research Institute would be subject to the President's wishes, and it is perfectly appropriate and fully intended that the Secretary of Heatlh, Education, and Welfare should administer this as he does other activities of his Department.

The important thing here is for the new program to be set organizationally and administratively within the family of institutes which make up the Public Health Service's National Institutes of Health. By being so placed, it gains evident values, both direct and implied; for these outstanding NIH programs representing one of the finest expressions of man's concern for his fellow man, are the logical, natural, and proper company for this new program which extends our national activity to international horizons.

The third major administration reservation, as I understand it, is a concern that this new international program be linked with State Department, ICA, and other international activities of the U.S. Government. I think we can all agree that the goal of all of our international activity is peace, freedom, and mutual trust. There is no one mold into which programs to achieve these objectives can be poured. For science, and I think particularly the health sciences, this means a program that is divorced insofar as is possible from international politics. We want to keep politics out of medicine and we want to keep medicine out of politics. We must do everything we can, therefore, to permit scientists to deal with scientists on an equal basis, to ensure that scientific considerations govern the expenditure of these funds, to facilitate the interchange of scientific knowledge and of scientists. I am sure we can rely on the policies of the executive branch, on the mechanisms and procedures of its operation, and on the competence and integrity of its leaders to administer this new kind of federally sponsored international program in a way that is consonant with the national welfare.

It must be evident from the foregoing that I feel we must earnestly seek to resolve any superficial differences that may appear relative to this legislation in order to act now. If we delay until the second session of the 86th Congress, a full year will be lost. And, as my colleagues know, our times are such that there can be compressed into a year events that formerly would not have transpired in a lifetime.

As you know it has been my privilege to have the opportunity to participate in many discussions, here and abroad, about medical research; to have visited with medical researchers overseas from many nations; and to have been one of your congressional representatives to several World Health Organization assemblies wherein health and health research were matters of profound import to the delegates of some 90 nations of the world.

My considered judgment is that we of the United States must embark upon this endeavor of international medical research with new vigor and new ways and increased means.

Specific points have also been raised by other opponents of Senate Joint Resolution 41 which, on the surface, appear to be valid reasons for not undertaking an international research attack on disease and disability. Somewhat closer scrutiny, however, reveals the fallability of these arguments. All of us know that the path of least resistance is the easiest to walk; but we also know that the path of least resistance is also the least fruitful.

There were those in the early thirties who looked with disfavor on a very special campaign to control poliomyelitis. As each year passed, bits of new knowledge were accumulated, scientists exchanged information, new approaches were developed, and the work went ahead. For almost 20 years it was necessary for us to listen to the discouraging responses of a comparatively small number of negative personalities who expected an overnight cure. Yet, miraculously enough, an effective means for controlling the disease did emerge and has proved itself, even though we still do not understand the true nature of the disease.

Today, of course, no one questions the wisdom of having supported the all-out national campaign to find a means for controlling polio. We can all agree that the result was worthy every dime that went into that great effort because it is not possible to place a dollar figure on a life saved from a crippling and killing disease.

As we look back, however, it is possible to ponder the question of how much faster we might have progressed if a few selected scientists from other countries had been specifically included in the all-out effort.

We need not look back when we consider the major diseases that are world prevalent today. It is possible for us to look to the future with hope—hope that we can find the answers to disease problems that are as significant in Iowa as they are in Japan, or Sweden, or Italy.

Just one part of the total heart disease problem—arteriosclerosis and coronary disease, for example—claims almost one-half million lives in the United States each year. About 130,000 of these are in the productive age groups from 25 to 64 years of age. The annual loss of income alone by these deaths has been estimated at more than $590 million, representing more than $75 million annual loss of Federal income taxes alone. Heart disease, and most of the other major diseases in this country, are also problems in other countries of the world. A special international research effort would be beneficial in many ways. It could further the exchange of information between scientists of the world, it could support studies to find the reasons for some of the obvious differences in the incidence and mortality of disease from country to country, and it could provide a central, scientifically based organization for support of studies being carried on by brilliant scientists with fertile research ideas.

I submit that investment in medical research, aside from the unending humanitarian benefits, is an economical investment in life. For the United States alone last year, we spent less than $400 million in medical research; yet this is less than half the amount of money that is being used this year to care for the victims of only one of the major diseases of today, namely, mental illness.

There are those who foresee the international medical research program as just another oversea giveaway. Nothing could be further from the truth. First of all, as I have repeated on many occasions, this program as it is now drafted includes all of the safeguards to insure that the decisions regarding support of individual research projects or the organization of extensive collaborative efforts will be made by the scientists themselves on the basis of scientific merit.

Since the beginning of time, the discovery of new knowledge has not been the sole prerogative or possession of a single country. Pasteur and the process named for him, Jenner's work in vaccination, Iwanowski's discovery of the virus, and Fleming's discovery of penicillin are but a few of literally hundreds of discoveries that have contributed to the status of our health today. Support of Walter Reed's conquest of yellow fever might have been characterized as an international giveaway because of its immediate influence throughout the world, but few discoveries have been so important in the history of our own country.

The list is long, but the record is clear that medical research itself has always had an international character. Today the complexity and volume of medical research make especially important the most rapid possible exchange of information and strengthened cooperation in the medical and life sciences. Just as jet age and other transportation made worldwide spread of infectious diseases a greater possibility, now we must use our improved means of transportation and communication to preserve and improve our health.

Important studies are now underway in various countries of the world—studies that need the encouragement of expanded support and added impetus through exchange of information with colleagues in the same and similar scientific fields. I am sure that every American would welcome an answer to the problem of diabetes from a laboratory in Buenos Aires, of epilepsy from Montreal, of cancer from Denmark or Finland, or from the Pasteur Institute in Paris.

The Public Health Service, through the structure and existing programs of the National Institutes of Health, has been doing what it can within the limits of present organization, and appropriations, and authorities, to support worthwhile research and promote the interchange of scientific personnel. Other activities, such as aid to scientific information exchange through translation and distribution of scientific journals and participation and support of international scientific assemblies, have had modest but encouraging starts. The international health research program will permit full exploitation of these activities for the direct benefit of the people of this country and will provide a focal point for the organization of widespread collaborative studies of specific worldwide disease problems, such as heart disease, cancer, mental illness, malaria, diabetes, arthritis, and neurological and other crippling disorders.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ROBERTS], who has been doing yeoman service as the chairman of the subcommittee and who has also introduced a similar bill.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the compliment the gentleman pays my subcommittee and its work, and I certainly want to compliment the gentleman on his very fine statement. I know that he has made a tremendous contribution in the field of medical research. He has been intensely interested in the program, and his efforts have been very fruitful. And, I want to say to him that I share the same enthusiasm for Senate Joint Resolution 41 and the bills that have been introduced by the gentleman from Rhode Island and others of the House. We have held hearings on those bills. We have heard from some of the most outstanding scientists and physicians throughout the country. As the gentleman mentioned, the administration takes the viewpoint that this should be considered on a State Department level or as a matter of foreign policy of this Government, whereas most of the doctors and scientists who testified said that this should be a doctor-to-doctor and a scientist-to-scientist program. Some of the interested groups have not as yet taken a position one way or the other on the legislation. I had hoped, as I am sure the gentleman has, that we would be able to get a bill before the House at this session. But, because of these difficulties, it looks very doubtful at the present time. However, I am hopeful that at the earliest possible time in the next session we will be able to iron out these difficulties and that we can get these interested groups to favor this proposal and bring to the House a bill that is worthy of the approval of this body.

Mr. FOGARTY. I thank the chairman for his generous remarks.

May I give just one example, and then I will not belabor the committee at this late hour, of why I think so much of an international medical research program; how it could enable us to help people all over the world and make friends for us all over the world and also get help for our people in return.

I was visiting one of our doctors in Boston last spring, having lunch with him. We got around to a discussion of the wonderful discovery of a polio vaccine, the Salk vaccine; what a wonderful discovery that was for all mankind, not only in our country, but all over the world.

Do you know how many millions of dollars was spent in that program to get a vaccine? We are still not satisfied with it, and we are still spending millions of dollars trying to develop a live vaccine to give greater protection. But in the course of our conversation at this luncheon meeting there was mentioned a former Nobel Prize winner, Dr. John Enders, of Harvard. Our host was one of the noted cancer doctors in the world. The other person was president of one of our leading pharmaceutical houses in the country, and he was talking about the interchange of ideas, how it helped in the discovery of these drugs and how it helped in connection with the Salk vaccine. He said, "Do you know that the Salk vaccine would not have been discovered had it not been for Dr. John Enders, one of the noted scientists in the world today, working here in this building. Only a few years ago he was able to grow the particular virus that encouraged Dr. Salk to make the vaccine."

This young man, the president of a pharmaceutical house, said, "Do you know that Dr. Enders could not have grown that virus unless we had manufactured this new drug just a few years ago called aureomycin? Do you know that the substance that we worked on for this new drug of aureomycin came from Europe?"

So as the result of this substance that came from Europe, which went through the machinery of two pharmaceutical houses, Dr. Enders was enabled to grow the virus, which in turn enabled Dr. Salk to develop the vaccine. It shows what can be accomplished through an international program such as I am proposing.

That is just one example—one experience that I had in nearby Boston a few months ago. I think stories like that can be told and retold and example after example given of similar advances made in the history of medicine, especially in the past 10 or 15 years.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROBERTS. I think the gentleman has given us one fine example, and it occurs to me that the great progress we are making in the treatment of mental illness with tranquilizers was made possible when there came to this country from India a substance, I believe, called rauwolfia, which had been used for many years in India. The article by the doctor found its way into a British medical journal. All of the progress we have made in that field came to us as a direct result of the work in India.

Mr. FOGARTY. And may I say to those who may quibble about a few million dollars to start an international program such as this that when we talk about the terrible scourge of mental illness in our country, it is costing our Government over $500 million a year today just to take care of those who have some form of mental illness, who are in mental institutions. We do not talk about that. But with a program like this we may be able to find the answer that would cut down that expenditure. The drug that the gentleman mentioned and another derivative of that drug are a case in point. For 3 years now, we are told, the population of mental institutions has been going down. That is for 3 successive years, as a result of the discovery of the particular drug the gentleman was talking about.

Mr. MONAGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield.

Mr. MONAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to join other Members who have paid tribute to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] for one further evidence of his great interest in the progress of these national as well as international health programs.

The gentleman referred to Dr. Dooley. It sems to me that in the case of Dr. Dooley we have an example of the point that the gentleman from Rhode Island made of the great profit that we can get from completely altruistic work in a country like Laos. We know that that is one of the most crucial countries in the world today. The Communists are moving in from the north. The example of Dr. Dooley can do more to bring friendship to our country and to other allied countries than all the money that we could spend for munitions or soldiers or other military things.

Mr. FOGARTY. I think Dr. Dooley is a grand example of what a person can do in fighting two of the greatest enemies of mankind; that is, disease and communism. He is combining both. I only wish that the Members of the House could take the time to read his book, "Edge of Tomorrow," that was published about a year ago, telling about his work in Laos; how he created friends, the hardships he has gone through.

Then one of the tragedies that happen to missionary doctors happened to him. A few months ago he fell and injured his right chest. Some time later he noticed a small growth which increased in size. A visiting surgeon happened by and removed the growth and sent it to the nearest laboratory in Bangkok, Thailand, for examination. It was determined there to be malignant. Because of his dedication to his work, he did not leave for this country at that time. Because he did not want to leave his people, nor give the impression that Communist pressure had driven him out, he stayed a couple of more months. He was operated on in Memorial Hospital just about a week ago. We all hope he will have a complete and speedy recovery so that he can continue the wonderful work that he is doing now not 5 miles from Red China in the country of Laos that is receiving so much publicity at this time.

Mr. HALPERN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield.

Mr. HALPERN. Mr. Speaker, I commend our colleague, the gentleman from Rhode Island on his fine presentation here today. Beyond that, I want to commend him for his outstanding work in this great field in this program for international medical research. I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to be a cosponsor of this health for peace program. I regret we cannot be more optimistic for favorable action before our session adjourns. But, it is my fervent wish that the differences and the questions that have been raised today by the gentleman from Rhode Island, the questions that have been presented in regard to the opposition to the bill that have held up the measure will be resolved during the recess period and that one of the first bills upon which favorable action will be taken by the 86th Congress after the recess will be on this measure. Once again I congratulate the gentleman.

Mr. FOGARTY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, the fate of the so-called health for peace resolution has been dramatized this past week by the fate of one of its stanchest supporters, Dr. Thomas A. Dooley. There are few people who know better than does Dr. Dooley the tremendous importance and deep significance of the United States in grasping the great opportunity that is offered by passing in this session of the Congress the health for peace resolution.

After thorough hearings and testimony taken from the Nation's outstanding medical men and the support of the great medical organizations and groups of America, the Senate reported and passed on May 20 the International Health and Medical Research Act of 1959. Hearings have been held by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of this House but alas, it has concluded that no action will be taken in this session. Many Members of the House hope that the committee will reconsider this decision. It is not too late for this great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, chairmaned by one of the ablest Members of the Congress, the distinguished Member from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS], to report the bill and let the membership work its will. Favorable and decisive action on this matter would herald once again, in spectacular fashion, our country's concern and interest in one of the greatest problems that confronts mankind, world health.

The Senate report emphasizes what all realize as axiomatic that disease and disability know no international boundaries. Research in the health sciences fostered on an international basis holds great promise of advancement of benefit to all. An unselfish effort on the part of the United States to advance the health sciences in the interest of all peoples can be a potent instrument of peace and good will.

The Senate report noted that research is the single most important component in any effort to deal with the problems of disease, ill health, and disability which confront the world.

Mr. Speaker, this conclusion was emphasized by Dr. Howard Rusk, professor and chairman, department of physical medicine and rehabilitation, New York University, Bellevue Medical Center. Harken to his words:

> Medicine has never been anything but international. You can go back in history, and it is the most beautiful evidence of internationalism that exists in the world.
> Microbiology came from Holland. Immunology with vaccination came from Great Britain. Bacteriology came from Pasteur in France. Sulfonamides came from Germany—but they waited 16 years because an assistant missed one compound, and it was found 16 years later in a laboratory in another country. Penicillin came from Great Britain. Insulin came from Canada. Cortisone came from the United States. Anesthesia came from the United States. Rauwolfia lay dormant 400 years in India until some raw material came to a laboratory in Boston to be tried with a series of other drugs on patients with high blood pressure. At the end of the fifth week, they were ready to abandon the drug because nothing had happened, not realizing that it took six. They went on to the sixth week. And they gave us the greatest tool we have in our hands today for the management of high blood pressure and certain types of mental disease.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the attack on the diseases that afflict mankind is indeed international in character. And that is precisely why the world needs international cooperation in the fight against the ills that ravage the human mind and body. The United States can lead the way in this cooperation by endorsing the International Health and Medical Research Act. We should do it as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker, throughout the testimony presented to the Senate and House committees on the health for peace resolution, there was agreement among the witnesses that programs and activities authorized by the resolution would, in addition to their immediate benefit in advancing our struggle against disease and ill health, have a fundamental, long-range value in enlarging the basis for understanding among peoples of the world and enhancing the possibilities for peace. Yearly, billions of dollars are necessarily spent the world over for materials of destruction. It is entirely conceivable that the program envisaged by the International Health and Medical Research Act can do more for world peace than the billions of dollars that are being poured into armaments.

Peoples of all nations working together for their common benefit provide a solid basis for understanding and mutual trust. Without this, there can be no peace.

As Dr. Detlov Bronk, president, Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, and chairman advisory council of the Citizens Committee on Health for Peace, puts it:

> Common scientific efforts are dramatic proof that peoples can gain by peaceful means that which they have vainly sought to acquire through wars.

And from our own Nation's Capital, the remarkable secretary general of Medico—Medical International Cooperation—Dr. Peter D. Comanduras, has seen and felt the efforts of the kind of a program we seek.

> The establishment of the National Institute of International Research—> would demonstrate to the peoples of the world that the United States is vitally interested in the disease scourges that are still ravaging three-quarters of the world; that it is taking steps to alleviate and eradicate human suffering and illnesses; that it is encouraging the brilliant scientific minds all over the world to come to this country to study, observe, and find ways and means to attack disease all over the world, and that it is asking their cooperation to forge weapons, not against humanity, but for and in support of the health and welfare of all peoples.

In his appearance before the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, Dr. Comanduras strongly urged that provision be made in the bill to permit research personnel to be attached to certain medical missions that are directed by private organizations similar to Medical International Cooperation. It was felt by many who testified that assistance should be considered for operational medicine—the kind of programs that have been so remarkably carried out by people like Dr. Thomas Dooley in Laos, Dr. Gordon Seagrave in Burma, Dr. Albert Schweitzer in Africa, and by Dr. Howard Rusk's rehabilitation teams throughout the world. It is my understanding that the Senate bill does provide for the attaching of research personnel to these kinds of missions. It would be well, too, to provide direct financial assistance but perhaps this can and should come after the International Health and Medical Research Agency comes into being.

DR. THOMAS A. DOOLEY

In my opening sentence, I referred to Dr. Dooley. There are many others like him rendering similar medical service that are deeply interested in the health for peace bill that is now before this session of the Congress. I point to him specifically because of the circumstances that now surround his very life. Last week he was operated on for cancer of the chest wall. The condition resulted from an injury he received while servicing his medical mission in Laos. Thousands of his close friends, associates, and admirers were stunned by the news of the tragedy that had befallen him.

Mr. Speaker, I have never met Dr. Dooley but I was dimly aware of his efforts in giving of himself, every bit of himself, to the Christlike task of bringing medical aid and comfort to the maimed and diseased in relatively unknown and untouched areas of the world. I resolved to know more of him. No better knowledge of him could be gained except to read his words and catch his personality from two books that were inspired by and written of his service to humanity in Vietnam and in Laos. "Deliver Us From Evil," published in 1956, is the story of this heroic individual, a young naval medical officer, Lieutenant Dooley, as he faced the gargantuan task of administering to the wretched refugees seeking freedom and asylum from the Communists of North Vietnam. "The Edge of Tomorrow," published in 1958, is the fascinating and incredible account, of now civilian Dr. Dooley, in the wonders that he worked with his team of dedicated young assistants in Vang Vieng, Laos, and the territory of the northern Province of Nam Tha—the Lao underbelly of Red China and Red North Vietnam.

I finished the books with the certainty that Tom Dooley is, indeed, a remarkable personality whose deeds and efforts will forever be inscribed in the minds and hearts of men of good will everywhere on this universe. Let me say, too, that I am sure that they have not and will not go unnoticed by his Maker.

Mr. Speaker, here is a young man endowed by his Creator with unusual, incredible medical talent—one that could have had a life of comparative ease in the plush medical practice of any locality in this Nation. Yet, he gives it all up for service that is tough, sometimes disheartening and revolting, and fraught with danger. Month after month, thousands of cases of malaria, kwashikor's disease, the hideous yaws, tuberculosis, pneumonia, loathsome infections—these and many more diseases far more heart rending were Dr. Dooley's medical diet. Living in surroundings and under conditions that few of us would brave, Tom Dooley and his team did the work that he so often said needed to be done.

Mr. Speaker, well might we ponder what motivates this kind of dedication and action. Dooley himself gets it from the inspiration of Dr. Albert Schweitzer who chose the dark continent of Africa to spread his special kind of assistance to the millions of that great country.

Listen to Dr. Dooley as he explains that pain, hunger, ignorance are the greatest internationalists of them all. "These are things," he says, "which Americans are so well armed to fight against and gentleness, intelligence and will can conquer." He has taken American humanity into the most unknown, untouched hinterlands and he senses that he and his teams have done some service in the name of his country, his fellowman and his God. He writes that "we had seen tender, simple loving care—the crudest kind of medicine practiced by mere boys—change a people's fear and hatred into friendship and understanding. We had witnessed the power of medical aid to reach the hearts and souls of a nation. We had seen it transform the brotherhood of man from an ideal into a reality that plain people could understand."

As these words and thoughts tingled my feelings, it was easy to sense why this truly great American is what he is. No wonder those who know him and know of his mission in life—no wonder thousands pray that he be spared to carry on what he calls, "the promises I had to keep."

I know I express the sentiment of the Nation when I say that we are proud of him as an American who has done so much to bring sunshine and hope and faith in mankind to the less fortunate of the world. May he regain his health that he may, once again, bring health to others in his remarkably talented, gentle, loving way.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include with my remarks the following articles on Dr. Dooley:

[From the New York Times, Aug. 30, 1959]

FOR DOOLEY AND LAOS—JUNGLE DOCTOR GAINS IN CANCER FIGHT AS DRIVE IS BEGUN FOR HEALTH AGENCY

(By Howard A. Rusk, M.D.)

In a 3-hour operation here on Thursday, Dr. Tom Dooley had the cancer on his chest wall successfully removed at the Memorial Center for Cancer and Allied Diseases.

On Friday, thousands of his friends, admirers and professional colleagues in the United States and 10 times their number of natives in the jungles of Laos were deeply relieved to hear he was convalescing normally after this major surgery.

The first hurdle has been cleared. Only time will bring the final answer.

It was typical of this dedicated international physician that the day before he went to the operating room he sent the following telegram to more than 50 leaders in Congress:

"I returned last week from Laos where for the past 2 years I have been operating a hospital near the border of Communist China, under the auspices of Medico, with voluntary funds raised from the public.

"During this period I have seen a complete change in the attitude of the Laos people whom I have served. The people now understand communism and want none of this way of life.

"I am being operated on tomorrow for cancer. As soon as I recover, I intend to go back to Laos to continue this fight against communism with the tools of health.

"I want to thank you and your colleagues in Congress for the support you have given to medical research. I know Tulane Medical College has recently developed a new technique for treating the type of cancer I have, that may save my life.

"I am deeply distressed that the Health for Peace Resolution No. 41 now in the Subcommittee on Health and Safety of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may not be acted on before Congress adjourns. I feel that this would be a tragic waste of irretrievable time. Unless you have lived and worked in the primitive jungle as I have, you cannot realize what this means. Please do everything possible to get action on this vital bill before adjournment."

The research to which he referred as a possible help to him was developed under grants from the National Cancer Institute and the American Cancer Society by Dr. Oscar Creech, Jr.; Dr. E. T. Krements; Dr. R. F. Ryan; Dr. Keith Reemstsma; Dr. J. N. Winblad; Dr. James L. Elliott; the Tulane University School of Medicine; Charity Hospital; Touro Infirmary, and the U.S. Public Health Hospital, New Orleans.

The technique is known as perfusion and consists of placing a tourniquet around the affected area and forcing phenylalanine mustard through the circulation in the area, but not through the entire body. This new procedure for the first time permits the concentration of cancerocidal drugs with minimum toxic effects. It represents a great advance in cancer therapy.

Tom Dooley has also been anxious this week about the fate of his two colleagues, Dwight Davis and Earl Rhine, whom he left behind to continue his work when he was ordered back to the United States for treatment.

With Communist troops within 50 miles of the capital of Laos, and with guerrilla fighting all through the country, especially in the area of his hospital at Muong-Sing, Dr. Dooley's apprehension is well-founded.

Laos is a country the size of Utah, bounded on the east by Vietnam, on the south by Cambodia, on the west by Thailand, and on the north by Communist China. The current fighting is in the north near the 600 miles of border with Communist China and Communist North Vietnam. The Communists who have been captured or killed in the recent deep-jungle fighting in the monsoon season have been well armed with new guns stamped "Made in Czechoslovakia."

Tom Dooley has much to give when he recovers to the point that he can return to his station. He wants to establish two more hospitals in this wild area of Laos. If he can obtain a small airplane, it will enable him to fly the circuit as a modern "horse-and-buggy" doctor.

Tom Dooley has awakened anew our realization that healing is a priceless tool in the winning of men's minds for freedom. He has been not only a great emissary for healing, but for peace.

Hundreds of letters addressed to Dr. Tom Dooley came last week to the offices of Medico at 251 Fourth Avenue. All were expressions of gratitude from those who sat in comfort at home for the sacrifices he has made and for his jungle battle for democracy.

Many contained contributions for Medico, a tax-exempt, nonprofit organization that facilitates scientific communication and provides health services in the underprivileged parts of the world. Dr. Peter Comanduras, a dedicated Washington physician, is Medico's director general.

Dr. Dooley's professional colleagues are starting a campaign for funds among the physicians of America to support Medico, because Tom Dooley epitomizes Medico, which he helped to found. Its life and future are more important to him than his own.

Millions of Americans who never knew Tom Dooley or read his books have prayed this week that he may win his victory over cancer and rise again to walk among the sick and to serve his fellow men.

[From the New York Times]

DR. DOOLEY'S MESSAGE

Dr. Thomas Dooley has been in this city during the last week or so when his services were badly needed at the hospital he has been operating in Laos, near the border of Communist China. He came here because that was the only way he could hope to be cured of a cancer which was operated on last Thursday.

Tom Dooley seems to have thought of himself during this ordeal only in terms of the work he could do and hopes to keep on doing for other people. Before his operation, when his personal fate was still uncertain, he sent a message to 50 Members of Congress in which he urged the passage of the beautifully named health for peace bill. This measure, which has now unhappily been postponed, would set up an international medical research institute. The opposition to it has been hard to understand.

Tom Dooley's case, his message and his work were described in an article by Dr. Howard A. Rusk in yesterday's issue of the Times. Tom Dooley has done his almost miraculous work on private funds contributed through a tax-exempt non-profit organization called Medico, which has its headquarters in New York City at 251 Fourth Avenue. Much more could be done, however, if these contributions were supplemented by the kind of organization that would be set up under the health for peace bill. It is tragic that Dr. Dooley's example did not bring the bill out of the House committee where it is now locked up. The mistake could still be remedied if the need and the opportunity were keenly realized.

LAOS DR. TOM DOOLEY; HE FIGHTS COMMUNISM WITH TOOLS OF HEALTH

(By William Cooper)

Sometimes it takes tragedy to bring into focus the quiet determination of some men to help others.

Such a man is Dr. Thomas Dooley, 32-year-old St. Louis surgeon now recuperating in New York City from a chest cancer operation.

If it had not been for his illness, Tom Dooley might have carried on his private medical mission in the jungles of Laos in relative obscurity.

His medical associates, of course, know his story and long have admired this witty and charming Irishman. But until his enforced return and operation last week, few laymen had heard of Tom Dooley's work.

ENTHUSIASM

I first met him in Hong Kong in 1956, when he burst on the Far East full of enthusiasm for his project of building a hospital in Laos.

The skeptics in Hong Kong gave him 2 or 3 months in the Lao jungles. The cynics thought he was mainly interested in gathering material for a new book, to go with a successful one he had written about his experiences as a Navy doctor helping refugees from North Vietnam after the fall of Dienbienphu.

But it was his unselfishness that gave the "no" to the cynics in Hong Kong. That, and Tom Dooley's humble delight in knowing that with his own hands he could ease the suffering of others.

HIS HOPES

He talked one night about the new health and happiness he could bring to whole villages in southeast Asia with only small quantities of modern medicines. He wasn't even sure how good a doctor he was in those days. But he knew that in the primitive areas he could work miracles.

Tom Dooley started not one, but three hospitals in Laos. He was working at one of them, a few miles from the Communist frontier, when his chest tumor was diagnosed as malignant and he was told to hurry back to the United States.

Now the tributes are pouring in.

Dr. Dooley's operation was successful. He plans to return to Laos as soon as he is able to travel—to continue, as he says, the "fight against communism with the tools of health."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield to a gentleman who has been very fair with our subcommittee and who has given us every consideration on this bill, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, first, let me compliment the distinguished gentleman from Rhode Island, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations which handled the appropriations for health and welfare programs. Everyone, not only in this field but also those who are informed about the tremendous problems of public health, know very well that the distinguished gentleman from Rhode Island is one of the outstanding leaders in this Congress as well as in the Nation in promoting programs that will benefit the health and welfare of the people of our Nation.

I listened with interest to the splendid statement he has made and also that made by our colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND], in connection with the resolution that has been referred to, health for peace. As chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to which committee these resolutions have been referred, I know there is a great deal of interest. For several weeks, as the gentleman knows, the Subcommittee on Health, and Safety, under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ROBERTS] has held hearings. The hearings began in the middle of July and lasted until about the 5th or 6th of August. They ran over 2 weeks, 1 at the end of July and 1 at the beginning of August. A lot of interest was developed.

The purposes of a resolution of this kind, international health and research programs, are certainly laudable objectives. No one interested in the health of the people of this Nation and the world could take any other position. But as it developed during the course of the hearings which the gentleman from Alabama mentioned a moment ago, it is not as easy as they would have you believe. When this resolution came from the other body under the sponsorship of 57 Members of this body, and we began to inquire into the program itself, many other questions raised their heads, as mentioned by the gentleman from Alabama a moment ago.

Although the administration has advised our committee that they support legislation of this kind, yet they are against the procedure and the program set up under this resolution. In other words, this is a resolution that would authorize the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to operate such an international research program, but the State Department insists, as they always do in matters of this kind, that they should have control of it; apparently, the administration's thinking on it is in that direction. This is the terrific conflict that exists.

Another thing that is quite important, and I mentioned this to the gentleman and our colleagues, this is not as easy a problem to resolve as some think who wrote us these letters from all over the United States, and certainly I have been getting, as I know you have, letters from people throughout the country. They have not only been writing and calling and sending wires, but we have messages and post cards by the hundreds and hundreds.

One big question is: Who is going to participate in this program? Are we going to put up $50 million not knowing what other nation is going to participate?

It is questions like that which concern us, which made it necessary for this to go over until next year in an effort to resolve some of these problems.

Mr. FOGARTY. I thank the gentleman from Arkansas, and I sincerely hope this will be one of the first measures the gentleman's committee will report out in January of next year.

Last year I introduced into the House its first bill, companion to Senator HILL's, for expanded medical research through a new international institute as a scientist-to-scientist program—and I spoke wholeheartedly for it because I believed then, and I believe now, that so much depends upon it. Senator HILL, as you know, is one of the most devoted leaders in our efforts to relieve human sufferings through expanded medical research programs.

On January 12 of this year, I reintroduced this legislation in the House. I rose and spoke on the floor concerning it, recommending the declaration of the first truly international war upon disease through use of the tremendous, latent potential weapons for world health—and peace—that lie in medical research.

Again in the summer I repeated my endorsement of the proposed bill, in an improved and refined version that had had the benefit of the careful thought of many brilliant minds, both in our own bodies of Congress and among eminent scientists. What I said then, and also in January, I must reiterate now. I urge that we declare a new world war against disease.

The American Revolution was an idea translated into action. It inspired people everywhere to be free. America has continued to inspire them as a great, free Nation. Today we have a parallel opportunity to translate an idea into a revolution for freedom from disease.

The proposed bill is a sound legislative measure because it provides for a scientific program, administered through scientific means, acceptable to and workable within the framework of the international scientific community, and valid as a method of achieving international cooperation in research, research training, research planning, and the interchange of research knowledge.

The program would be a scientific one, administered on a scientist-to-scientist basis; it is thus of science and by science, yet for the peoples of the world.

The kind of medical research program envisaged by this legislation will provide support for scientific studies strictly on the basis of scientific merit only after thorough and painstaking technical, objective review within the scientific community. Only in this way can true progress be gained by exploiting scientific potential, wherever it may happen to be. I am extremely confident that an institute of international medical research, working within the already established scientific framework in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, can give outstanding leadership to U.S. participation in global research against disease.

The proposed legislation also insures that a focused and concerted scientific effort will be mounted in many disease and health research fields not now receiving the attention they must have. It insures that research disciplines be brought to bear upon gaining new knowledge both of specific disease problems not now well studied around the world and of basic life processes—and new knowledge here is essential to the greatest ultimate victories over disease.

Furthermore, in addition to international scientific collaboration in research studies themselves, the legislation provides new opportunities for research training, research planning and coordination, and interchange of scientific information—all, it should be emphasized, working with international scientific bodies concerned with health research.

I would like very briefly to enumerate some of the specific factors that illustrate why in my opinion this legislation deserves prompt support and action.

First, we may review briefly the nature and extent of present activities of the National Institutes of Health in international medical research. As you know, the NIH is charged by law with specific categorical missions. Though these missions are broad because the disease problems attacked are large, there are many limitations in terms of their objective of conducting and supporting research activities designed to provide knowledge about cancer, heart disease, mental illness, neurological diseases, and so on.

This is as it should be, for there must be concerted effort which has specific goals for delineable problems in discrete, though complex, disease fields.

The Institutes, therefore, have been rightly concerned with developing, in collaboration with scientists abroad, international research efforts. Let each effort must be delineated in terms of a categorical mission.

The record of the National Institutes of Health's participation in international research in previous years shows clearly that, within our present legislative framework, it is not possible to realize to a desirable degree the true potential that already exists for the development of international medical research endeavors.

The Institutes can and should increase their international research efforts as is appropriate within the framework of their mission and appropriations. The proposed legislation does not abrogate, but protects this.

What is most significant, however, is the fact that the legislation provides the means for filling gaps, for seizing latent opportunities, and for establishing a general program enabling American scientific partnership and participation in worldwide medical research to an extent and depth hitherto impossible—a research program likely to produce new scientific knowledge undreamed of today.

One further point: May I remind my colleagues that the measure will provide authorization. Mindful of the fact that this is an authorization—not an appropriation—I urge that we get on with this vital order of business to gain a year that may prove to be the most crucial in the history of this country. In addition, the authorization at the level of $50 million will provide an opportunity for realistic phasing of the initial stages of the program and for the establishment and carrying out of long-range goals.

Thus, the new approach, envisaged by the creation of an institute and a program for the purpose of aiding international cooperation in general medical research, would move us ahead on the road of scientific progress.

It is my belief, stemming from my visit abroad as well as from discussions in this country, that the new international medical research participation represented by the Institute and its program would meet with warm acceptance by those concerned with research, on the part of both individual scientists and professional organizations, here and abroad.

The expressions of many scientists themselves, and of others concerned in research programs in this country, certainly indicate a belief in partnership and participation by the United States in international medical research on a stronger and better basis than is currently possible.

Indicative of the opinions of the renowned scientists has been the unstinting support given this proposal by Dr. Howard A. Rusk, director of the famous Institute of Physical Medical and Rehabilitation in New York. Doctor Rusk's stature and competence and his contributions to the sick and crippled are too well known to recount here. Doctor Rusk has continually urged passage of this legislation for, as he has said, he knows from firsthand experience how much could be accomplished through such a program.

The attitude of Dr. Dooley and other disease fighters throughout the world were epitomized for me by the remarks of Dr. M. Lopez Herrarte, Minister of Health, Guatemala, who in response to my comments on the views of the United States toward international research and health activities said:

> The words of Congressman FOGARTY of the United States of America bring us hope, and we are sure that all our countries will receive as a blessing any help that may be given to us in this respect.

It is quite clear, also, that we in the United States have a great deal to give. I am completely confident that the needs for working together in international health are urgent and well recognized by the nations of the world, that the potential mechanisms for collaboration are well established and that much more productive activity could be undertaken through our passage of the legislation for expanded international medical research.

As Dr. Dooley has said, it would be a pity indeed if the world should have to wait another year for a program that could hold the key to an assured peace and to the ultimate control of disease. Dr. Dooley is a man who is making the time count. We, as a nation, should make the time count. And the time to act is now. I am sure that all of us will agree that medical research is one of the most affirmative international efforts that the United States could take. It is a goal which is not only practical and achievable, but symbolic of the highest aspiration of man to be at peace with his fellow man. It is, therefore, my firm feeling that we ought to enact the proposed legislation and make possible this new endeavor that will bring so many benefits to our own people and to people everywhere.

[From New York Times, Aug. 31, 1959]

DR. DOOLEY'S MESSAGE

Dr. Thomas Dooley has been in this city during the last week or so when his services were badly needed at the hospital he has been operating in Laos, near the border of Communist China. He came here because that was the only way he could hope to be cured of a cancer which was operated on last Thursday.

Tom Dooley seems to have thought of himself during this ordeal only in terms of the work he could do and hopes to keep on doing for other people. Before his operation, when his personal fate was still uncertain, he sent a message to 50 Members of Congress in which he urged the passage of the beautifully named health for peace bill. This measure, which has now unhappily been postponed, would set up an international medical research institute. The opposition to it has been hard to understand.

Tom Dooley's case, his message, and his work were described in an article by Dr. Howard A. Rusk in yesterday's issue of the Times. Tom Dooley has done his almost miraculous work on private funds contributed through a tax-exempt nonprofit organization called Medico, which has its headquarters in New York City at 251 Fourth Avenue. Much more could be done, however, if these contributions were supplemented by the kind of organization that would be set up under the health for peace bill. It is tragic that Dr. Dooley's example did not bring the bill out of the House committee where it is now locked up. The mistake could still be remedied if the need and the opportunity were keenly realized.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

HEALTH FOR PEACE RESOLUTION

Mr. MONAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RHODES] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD, and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. RHODES of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the distinguished gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] in support of his health for peace resolution. His interest and untiring efforts for progressive and humanitarian legislation is most commendable. He has given outstanding and distinguished leadership for medical research programs and in the field of public health and public welfare.

His efforts have contributed much to the progress our country has made in protecting our fellow citizens from crippling and killing diseases. The American people owe a deep debt of gratitude to the gentleman from Rhode Island. No Member of this Congress has given greater or more important public service.

His name is legion to all the experts in this important field. Our colleagues all honor and respect him for his sincerity of purpose and for his careful study, hard work and devotion to these great humanitarian programs.

His name is recognized and revered in many parts of the world by dedicated physicians, scientists and specialists. They see a ray of hope for world peace, fellowship and understanding through international cooperative effort in fighting disease and in alleviating human suffering.

As a member of the Health and Safety Subcommittee it has been my privilege to learn to know more about our colleague's work and his interest in health matters. I have heard testimony from some of the Nation's most eminent and dedicated doctors and scientists giving unanimous approval of this proposal by the gentleman from Rhode Island. This legislation has the support of our distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. ROBERTS, who is a cosponsor of the resolution.

With permission of the House, Mr. Speaker, I include herewith letters which I received from outstanding specialists, all supporting this legislation which I hope the Congress will adopt without unnecessary delay:

HEALTH FOR PEACE

(By Robert Van Deusen)

The National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., afford the greatest concentration of medical research in the world. Administered by the U.S. Public Health Service, the NIH brings top medical and scientific talent to bear on some of mankind's toughest problems: heart disease, cancer, arthritis, allergy, neurological diseases, mental health.

If a bill which has passed the Senate is approved by the House, another area of research will be added. This legislation, which is popularly known as the health-for-peace bill, would create within the NIH a National Institute of International Medical Research, with an annual appropriation of $50 million.

The scope of this new institute would be worldwide. It would be authorized to assist in the training of research personnel and the improvement of research facilities in various parts of the world. Grants could be made to American or foreign universities, voluntary welfare agencies, and international governmental agencies such as the World Health Organization.

The idea had its inception in President Eisenhower's state of the Union message in January 1958, in which he proposed a science-for-peace plan. As a first step, he invited the Soviet Union to join the current 5-year program for the eradication of malaria. He stated U.S. willingness to pool its efforts with those of Russia in other health campaigns.

A modest start was made with a grant of $300,000 by the United States to the World Health Organization for a preliminary study to lay the groundwork for medical research on an international basis.

WIDE SUPPORT

The backing given this proposal by men highly respected in the field of medicine illustrates the fact that health is an international concern. Disease and epidemics ignore national boundaries. The language of medicine is a universal one, and progress made in any part of the world quickly spreads to other areas, if adequate communication between medical men and scientists in various countries is maintained.

One of the men testifying in favor of the National Health and Medical Research Act was Dr. Howard A. Rusk, chairman of the Department of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation of the New York University-Bellevue Medical Center, and an associate editor of the New York Times.

In his testimony before the House Subcommittee on Health and Safety, Dr. Rusk said, "In the field of research, health, medicine, and rehabilitation, we have a uniquely effective area of service and of responsibility for working toward international understanding * * *. A world in which good health is enjoyed by but a few cannot be a politically stable world."

Joining him in support of the proposed legislation were representatives of the American Medical Association, the National Academy of Sciences, the American College of Surgeons, and other professional groups. Additional backing by religious, educational, and other public interest groups might give the added impetus to enact the proposal into law.

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA,
LABORATORY OF PHYSIOLOGICAL HYGIENE,
Minneapolis, Minn., July 30, 1959.

The Honorable Congressman GEORGE M. RHODES,
Member of the Subcommittee on Health and Safety, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN RHODES: I understand the Subcommittee on Health and Safety of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will soon consider the International Health and Medical Research Act of 1959, recently passed by the Senate. You, as an important member of the subcommittee, will wish to give this legislation your careful and informed attention. Accordingly, I urge the following considerations.

It is abundantly clear that the improvement of health and the conquest of disease is of surpassing concern to all peoples, regardless of political views, that these goals will be achieved only by scientific research, and that research competence and the knowledge gained from research know no national boundaries.

Without entering into discussions about "One World" or any so-called moral responsibilities of the economically highly developed countries toward the less-developed countries, the argument for passage of the proposed act is most powerful. We Americans, like people everywhere, hold disease to be an enemy to be fought and conquered by all available means. In our country we look to the Congress to do all it can toward these ends and the record of the last decade shows that, indeed, the Congress has responded magnificently in this regard. This new legislation proposed would increase the total money for medical research but, at least as important, it would enable more effective research to be done by increasing the available research potential and by utilizing the rich resources of the world as a natural laboratory full of the experiments of nature.

Let me amplify the last two points. Firstly, progress at present in medical research in the United States is limited because of shortages of trained personnel and the need for new and ingenious ideas. We need more researchers in the technical fields of the medical sciences, and many of those presently in this professional field need to learn new methods, to receive the stimulus of seeing different approaches to the problems of their concern, and to have an opportunity to acquire new ideas. On all of these scores the International Health and Medical Research Act of 1959 would be of great help by expanding the personnel force available for research and increasing its efficiency.

Secondly, it must be realized that many of the diseases that presently concern us most in the United States—heart diseases, hypertension, cerebrovascular "accidents," arthritides, and so on, can be studied only to a limited extent in experimental animals or by clinical studies on patients suffering from these diseases. There is particular need to seek out populations that differ in the frequency of these diseases and to discover the causes of the differences in the prevalence of these diseases. This is especially clear in the field of my own major interest, the cardiovascular diseases.

We already know that coronary heart disease, our No. 1 U.S. killer, is far more frequent in some populations than in others and that these differences must be related in large part to differences in the way people live—their diet, physical activity, and so on. It is essential that systematic comparisons be made between populations differing in these respects so we can discover what factors promote and what hinder the development of these diseases. From such studies, and with parallel experimental and clinical studies, we can hope to learn how to prevent and control these diseases.

For these purposes we must be able to compare populations, wherever they may be, that offer suitable combinations of disease prevalence and differences in the mode of life. The International Health and Medical Research Act of 1959 would be of inestimable help in enabling such research to be pursued.

In the United States we are justly proud of our leadership in medical research and of our health record. But bright and devoted medical researchers and excellent research accomplishments are to be found in all countries and our health record is not the best in the world, particularly for our men beyond the age of 40. We can learn much from our colleagues and from the health records of populations elsewhere. In turn, we can teach them much. All of this means that our knowledge of how to prevent and control disease can be much increased by extending our research horizons. The proposed act of 1959 will be of great value in these respects.

It can be argued, of course, that we are already spending much money on medical research, that the Government budget is not balanced, that the national debt is huge, that we are sending a great deal of money abroad in other programs, and that first claim on our resources must be given to the national defense.

But is it really true that we cannot afford to provide money, even a substantial sum of money, for the proposed act of 1959? Comparisons with other items of Government expenditure would be invidious but I should like to see the result of a national referendum on this question. I can assure you that the response of those who are informed about health and medical research would be overwhelmingly in support of this expenditure.

One aspect of the proposed act of 1959 needs emphasis. I firmly believe that any expenditure under this act would be many times more effective in the cause of peace and winning friends in all countries than a similar expenditure for military missions and weapons or even by gifts of agricultural surpluses.

My convictions expressed above are based on many years of medical research, much of it in the field at the grassroots, which has brought me into intimate contact with medical and research leaders and the general public of more than a dozen countries around the world. I am sure that the International Health and Medical Research Act of 1959 offers a splendid opportunity to promote the causes of health, peace, and national security.

I hope, sir, that these comments will be helpful.

Sincerely,

ANCEL KEYS,
Professor in the School of Public Health, Director of the Laboratory of Physiological Hygiene, University of Minnesota.

COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY,

New York, N.Y., August 17, 1959.

Hon. GEORGE M. RHODES,
House Office Building
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN RHODES: Legislation which would create a new National Institute of International Medical Research (S.J. Res. 41) has passed the Senate by an overwhelming majority and is now in the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, of which you are a member. I am sure that no one will argue against its purposes, but if the House committee fails to act, this most important cause will be set back for another year.

The program contemplated, known as health for peace, will have many useful facets. I would like to mention just one which has particularly interested me through the years, research in rehabilitation of the physically handicapped. This is an area that has often been neglected because of the importance of preventive and definitive medicine. Rehabilitation is most obviously a humanitarian necessity, and provides great accompanying benefits in the area of providing manpower. Moreover, rehabilitation means gigantic savings for the world in the economic cost of disability.

My membership in the President's and Governor's Committees on Employ the Physically Handicapped has brought me in close touch with Dr. Howard A. Rusk, the director of the Institute of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation of New York University-Bellevue Medical Center. From personal observation of rehabilitation work in many countries of the world I have come to know that Dr. Rusk is the acknowledged leader in this field throughout the world. As a matter of fact, while lunching with Dr. Rusk at the Institute last week I learned that doctors from 41 countries are being trained there in this important work.

Dr. Rusk tells me that from a purely selfish viewpoint, we in the United States can give much and gain much in the advances of rehabilitation to the countries of our entire world. Medical research is one area of human endeavor in which all nations, however deep their disputes on matters, are willing to cooperate. Let us not discard but seize upon this advantage for greater understanding toward world peace.

I do hope that you will exert your influence within the committee to bring this measure to the floor for a vote.

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS JEFFERSON MILEY,
Executive Vice President.

CALIFORNIA REHABILITATION CENTER,
Santa Monica, Calif., July 31, 1959.

Mr. GEORGE M. RHODES,
Member of the Subcommittee on Health and Safety, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. RHODES: As medical director of the California Rehabilitation Center, and as a member of the International Society for the Welfare of Cripples, I am writing you this letter to urge you to support the Health for Peace bill, which is to come before the House of Representatives for consideration within the near future.

Those of us engaged in the practice of physical medicine and rehabilitation are keenly aware of the importance of expanding the knowledge and methods of treatments of handicapped individuals, as well as those suffering from various types of physical disability. I have had the opportunity of traveling in Mexico, and in most of the countries of Central and South America and have seen the important work being done by the medical and health representatives of the United States, with such organizations as WHO, NFIP, et cetera. I was greatly impressed with the response of the citizens of these various countries and realized as never before the great work they were doing, not only from the point of view of improving health conditions but also by improving better relations between the populations of those countries and ours.

I wish, therefore, as a citizen of the United States and as a physician who is actively interested in broadening the scope of health and medical education that you support the health for peace bill and lend your able assistance to obtaining passage of the bill.

Respectfully submitted.

O. LEONARD HUDDLESTON, M.D.,
Medical Director.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO,
CANCER RESEARCH FOUNDATION,
Chicago, Ill., July 30, 1959.

The Honorable GEORGE M. RHODES,
Subcommittee on Health and Safety, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: The speech made by the Honorable LISTER HILL on the resolution called the Health for Peace Act was one of great importance to the whole world. It is my sincere conviction that such a medical and health research program is essential and is needed more so today than ever before.

The general public is becoming increasingly concerned about our country's health programs. In fact, I believe that they are more interested in these problems than they are about the economics of the world. Such a humanitarian program would make a phenomenal contribution not only to the welfare of the citizens of our great Nation, but to all the people of the world.

I therefore strongly urge that this resolution be passed. The effects of this program will be far reaching. The program will be a tremendous asset not only to our own country but it will help bring the scientists of the world closer together and also, through its administration, show the world that we in the United States are determined and willing to help build a happier and healthier world.

Very truly yours,

MAURICE GOLDBLATT,
Chairman.

UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH,
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF PUBLIC HEALTH,
Pittsburgh, Pa., August 7, 1959.

Congressman GEORGE M. RHODES,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN RHODES: I am writing to request that you support the establishment of a National Institute of International Health and Medical Research.

Interest in health is one remaining international activity which finds unanimous support among lay persons, professionals in the field of health, and government officials. Furthermore, the resources for population studies of various diseases that are important to be studied in the interest of promoting health among Americans can only be found in distant areas of the world. The program envisioned for this international institute has been presented to me previously as a civilian consultant to the U.S. Public Health Service in the research grants program. I feel this is a sound development and should be enthusiastically supported.

Very sincerely yours,

ROBERT E. OLSON, M.D.,
Professor and Head of the Department of Biochemistry and Nutrition.

STATE UNIVERSITY OF IOWA,
COLLEGE OF EDUCATION,
Iowa City, Iowa, July 28, 1959.

Congressman GEORGE M. RHODES,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN RHODES: I write to tell you of my interest in the bill before your Subcommittee on Health and Safety regarding "International Research in Medicine, Health, and Rehabilitation." I believe that the impact of this idea will be profound both in terms of alleviation of suffering and in reaffirming our country's interest and concern for the well-being of people over the world. I think that an investment of our resources in this type of effort will pay extremely handsome dividends both in terms of improving the quality of health services in our country and abroad. I urge you to support it in whatever way you can.

* * * * *

Remembering your liberal background and your association with causes concerning the public welfare, I feel that this letter may be unnecessary; but I did want to take this opportunity to write you briefly and congratulate you on what I understand has been a fine record in Congress.

Cordially yours,

JOHN E. MUTHARD,
Associate Professor.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BROOKS of Texas). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ULLMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ULLMAN. Mr. Speaker, American agriculture is today truly at the crossroads. Under the onslaught of the Secretary of Agriculture and assisted by a barrage of propaganda against established support programs, the structure is crumbling with nothing to replace it.

If it goes, the farmer will lose whatever vestige of bargaining power he now possesses and he will again become the hopeless victim of unbridled speculators and unprincipled middlemen. For this reason, I have consistently supported the farm programs initiated and successfully administered in the thirties and forties. I maintain that with proper and effective administration, and with constructive improvements, those programs would have continued to solve the problems of the farmers of this Nation. However, the process of undermining and corrosion of the past 7 years has effectively destroyed the old farm program without replacing it with anything new.

The problem arises: Can the family type farmers of this Nation survive without effective Federal regulation to protect his bargaining power in the market place. In my opinion, he cannot.

After a great deal of thought on this matter, I have introduced legislation embodying the essence of a new approach, a realistic and practical approach, a farmer-oriented approach to this problem.

First, it incorporates the principle of self-help, requiring positive action by the farmers themselves to protect their own way of life.

Second, it is built around a commodity-by-commodity approach to the problem of survival.

Third, it goes directly to the heart of the farmer's difficulties—his bargaining power in the market place.

Fourth, it involves no new or untried principles or theories, but is built solidly on an established procedure in law with over 20 years of proven experience.

Fifth, it limits itself at the start to nonbasic crops.

Sixth, it stands as an open invitation to every such commodity group to move forward under its own initiative under the guiding hand of Federal procedures to establish its own stability and balance in the market places of America.

Seventh, it involves no costs to the taxpayers.

Since 1949 only a few nonbasic commodities have been supported through any type of price program. Many of these commodities are not well adapted to the same type of price support or stabilization operations as those used for the basic commodities, but some kind of a program is nonetheless essential for producers of such crops.

Therefore, on January 7, 1959, I introduced H.R. 1070, a bill to provide assistance to the producers of these nonbasic commodities not now covered by a definite program, if these producers, as a group, desire to avail themselves of such assistance. This bill would amend certain sections of the Agricultural Adjustment Act extending the applicability and coverage of marketing agreements and orders. More specifically it provides for the following:

First. Extends applicability of marketing agreements and orders to field and seed crops—other than wheat, corn, cotton, rice and peanuts.

Second. Provides for representation for each marketing or production area in the event that one order is issued for all production or marketing areas or more than one production or marketing area.

Third. Whenever more than 50 percent of the estimated total annual quantity of any commodity handled in the United States, other than milk or its products, is regulated by one or more orders and the agencies administering orders covering more than two-thirds of the regulated quantities of the commodity so propose and recommend, the Secretary is required to give notice of and an opportunity for a hearing on the proposed order applicable to the entire United States or all production or marketing areas.

If after such a hearing the Secretary finds, in addition to other determinations and findings required under the act, that such a comprehensive order for the commodity is practicable, he is required to issue the order.

Fourth. All orders issued under this amendment which are applicable to the same commodity or product thereof shall, so far as practicable, prescribe the terms, applicable to the different areas, as the Secretary finds to be necessary to give proper recognition to the difference in the production and marketing of such commodity in such areas.

Fifth. Adds field and seed crops to the list of commodities for which importation into the United States is prohibited unless the grade, quality, size, and maturity of such commodity complies with the grade, quality, size and maturity provisions of the marketing order for a commodity during the time that such an order is in effect.

This is a very simple bill. If enacted it will not increase Government expenditures for the farm program. The costs of administering and operating marketing orders are borne by the industry members through assessments on them as specified in and limited by the legislation and order. Such assessments are used to pay for the employment of a manager and staff which most orders employ for enforcement of standards used by the order and for office expenses. For that reason, among others, marketing agreement and order programs are often called self-help programs. The industry contributes its own fund to help itself.

But aside from such financial aspects, the programs are viewed as self-help because a basic part of the philosophy behind them is that the industry, through its representatives, gets together, considers its problems, discusses them, and recommends specific actions intended to remedy specific ills with which the industry believes itself to be faced. The idea is that industry men closely familiar with the problems of their industry are in a position to appraise them and propose remedial actions.

In addition to being a self-help program, it is voluntary on the part of the producers. To insure that a marketing order has the approval of a majority of the producers and handlers concerned, the legislation requires that at least a specified minimum of the voters approve of the order. I wish to emphasize the point that through legislative criteria an attempt is made to ascertain the existence of broad support for an order before it is declared effective. The producers and handlers must support their desire for an order through voting approval by some form of a majority before an order can be available to them. Contrary to some misconceptions, marketing orders are not imposed on an industry without its majority approval.

This is a democratic program. It gives the producers of a large number of commodities the opportunity to seek solutions to problems with respect to their particular industry. Through legislation, Government has helped develop the bargaining power of labor. Other Federal laws often enable "business" to regulate and control the production and marketing of its products and services. Likewise Government should provide the framework for producer-managed commodity marketing programs to enhance producer bargaining power and to deter the accumulation of price-depressing stocks in the hands of Government or other nonfarm groups. Marketing agreements and orders tend to provide such a framework for many agricultural producers. Under an order, the grade, size, pack, quality, and maturity of a commodity for shipment may be regulated. The order may establish the quantity of a commodity that may be shipped to market during any specified period. The total quantity may be allocated among all handlers under a uniform rule on the basis of past performance of a handler or the proportionate amount of the commodity the handler has available for current shipment.

An order may provide for establishing a reserve pool of a particular product and for equitable distribution to all financially interested persons of returns derived from the sale of the pool.

Such orders may provide for determining the extent of a surplus, for the control and disposition thereof, and for equalizing the burden of surplus elimination among producers and handlers.

Unfair trade practices may be dealt with in an order. Unfair methods of competition and unfair trade practices in the handling of commodities may be prohibited.

Handlers may be required to file their selling prices, and to sell at prices no lower than those filed. Handlers may change these prices but adequate notice must be given prior to such a change.

An order may provide for fixing the size, capacity, weight, dimensions, or pack of the container or containers used in handling commodities.

Marketing orders may also provide for research. This may involve establishment of market research or development projects designed to assist, improve, or promote the marketing, distribution, and consumption of the commodity covered by the order.

The marketing procedures provided in these orders are those used by nearly every successful business enterprise and their use should be broadened. The passage of this bill, H.R. 1070, will make that possible for the producers of a much larger number of commodities than may now avail themselves of such assistance.

The democratic aspects of marketing agreements and orders go beyond the establishment of an order for a particular commodity group. It extends also to the administration of the program after the order is issued. Programs for commodities other than milk provide for a committee of growers or handlers, or both, to administer the terms of the order. The method of selecting members of the committee, their term of office, powers, duties, and obligations are set forth in the order. Members generally are nominated by growers and handlers; and the selection of the members is by the Secretary of Agriculture. The main point to be emphasized, however, is that the producers participate in the operation of the program.

In terms of history, marketing orders emerged as a result of problems engendered by the great depression of the 1930's. But the economic structure of orders was gradually and experimentally developed by certain cooperative marketing associations during the 1920's. They were faced with seasonal surplused, quality standards, and unfair trade practices; and they endeavored to organize commoditywise on an industrywide basis. The trials and tribulations of that period need not be recited here; yet, those marketing associations became convinced that their own devices were not fully adequate to achieve the goals envisaged. New legislation and limited Government participation were deemed to be essential adjuncts.

The Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, provided the necessary assistance. This act clearly sets forth procedural and administrative criteria to be followed in the promulgation, operation, and termination of marketing agreements and orders. While I do not propose to examine every detail of the program at this time, I do feel several significant points should be stressed.

First, a majority of the industry—specific definition of which is written in the legislation—must approve an order before it can be effective. Second, the Secretary is required to determine whether the available evidence indicates the need for an order and that the proposed order meets that need. Furthermore, the Secretary has the authority to terminate the procedure at any point or to terminate an order which is in operation if, in his judgment, it is no longer consistent with the legislative standards.

What are the results of marketing agreement and order programs? What have we learned from the operation of these orders over a period of more than two decades?

Because of diversity of types of marketing programs and order provisions, no simple yet meaningful overall generalization can be set forth. What can be set forth? What can be said, however, is that close to a quarter of a century's experience with Federal marketing order programs enables us to reach certain conclusions. Of significance is the increasingly marked interest on the part of agricultural industries and commodity groups in such programs. Although instituted during the depression years of the early and middle 1930's, marketing programs have continued to increase on through the years of postwar prosperity in the country at large. The desire for Federal marketing orders, as evidenced by producer and handler voting, remains unabated. For the large number of programs which have been in effect for only a short period, there is one presumption—that the program was effective and and was terminated when its objective was attained and the need of the program no longer existed. The record indicates that those programs judged to be most effective tend to continue in operation. Judging from the length of time these programs have been in effect, they have been deemed to be successful programs by the participants.

It has been proven over the past 25 years that judicious use of marketing agreements and orders can contribute substantially to lessening the instability and raising the level of farm income of the producers of a number of farm products. Although such impact may not be of preponderant importance from the standpoint of total national farm income, it can be substantial and worthwhile from the viewpoint of the particular groups of producers participating in the program.

During 1957, 35 marketing agreement and order programs were in effect for fruits, vegetables, and tree nuts produced in 20 States. More than 130,000 producers participated in these marketing agreement programs, and the products had a farm value in excess of $870 million. In addition, Federal milk marketing orders were in effect in 76 markets during 1958.

We may conclude, therefore, that Government-industry marketing programs have a role—a very meaningful role—in the kit of tools and institutions bearing on farm income.

Mr. Speaker, there is overwhelming evidence that a self-help price-stabilizing program is needed by the producers of a large number of farm crops not now covered by a definite program. There can be no question about the fact that the farmers should have a voice in marketing their product or products in such a way as to give them a fair return for such products.

Therefore, I urge the Congress to give my bill, H.R. 1070, early and favorable consideration. Enactment of the bill can be instrumental in extending assistance, on a self-help basis, to thousands of individual farmers who now have no practical way to obtain a reasonable price for what they produce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] is recognized.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my special order be interchanged with that of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BURKE], who under the regular order immediately follows mine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

THE BETHLEHEM STEEL CO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BURKE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the privilege extended me by this House to bring to your attention a story that will fill most of us with pride—and, unhappily, with dismay also.

I have been reliably informed that the Bethlehem Steel Co. operates eight shipyards along the Atlantic coast, employing some 17,000 highly skilled craftsmen who have devoted their lives to the shipbuilding and ship repairing industry. It is to these skilled, experienced shipyard workers that this Nation has looked in times of crisis to supply the supervisors and the instructors that make possible 60 percent of the wartime production of ships for our Nation. It is to these 17,000 shipyard workers that this country is even at this moment looking to produce the nuclear missile cruiser Long Beach, being built at the Bethlehem Shipyard at Quincy-Fore River; the nuclear frigate Bainbridge being built at the same yard; and to convert the missile firing cruiser Springfield. It is the same skilled shipyard craftsmen that are working in the other yards of this company engaged upon the building, repairing and conversion of other vessels, both for the Navy Department and for the merchant marine.

It has further been called to my attention that these American workmen are represented in collective bargaining by the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, AFL–CIO. Since July 7 of this year, representatives of this union have been attempting to negotiate a collective bargaining agreement with Bethlehem Steel Co. to replace an agreement which expired on July 31, 1959. At the very outset of these negotiations Bethlehem Steel Co. confronted the union's representatives with demands that the new collective bargaining agreement shall contain provisions which will permit the company completely to ignore the loyal services of craftsmen who have been employed in its yards for 20 or 25 years—in other words, the company demanded complete destruction of the seniority rights which these skilled craftsmen and American workers—organized or not—have enjoyed for over half a century. I have also been told that the company has also demanded the right to ignore the skills, and the pride in their skills, of these men; it has insisted that it must be given the right to assign these skilled craftsmen—machinists, tool and diemakers, electricians—to any task which the management's whim may dictate. In addition, Bethlehem Steel Co. has demanded reductions in wage payments which these essential shipyard workers have enjoyed for many years.

The only justification which Bethlehem Steel Co. has given for these demands, unparalleled in American industrial practice, is that the company must discontinue in its shipyards the traditional and the time-tested practices followed in those yards and in the rest of American industry for many decades, in order that the company may put itself in a position to compete successfully against other shipyards for contracts for the construction of Government and private vessels.

That this "justification" is merely a pretext for the accomplishment of another objective by the company was demonstrated 5 years ago at hearings conducted before the Subcommittee on Defense Activities of the House Armed Services Committee, under House Resolution 125. At the hearings the representatives of the Department of the Navy testified that during the 8 years between the end of the war and March of 1954, the Government of this Nation has awarded noncompetitively to Bethlehem Steel Co. contracts for the building of vessels totaling $158,035,000. Since March 1954 Bethlehem Steel Co. has been awarded hundreds of millions of dollars of noncompetitive contracts for the construction of naval vessels. At these hearings, the same representatives of the Department of the Navy testified that only in the tiniest minority of instances were the contracts for the construction of Navy vessels awarded on the basis of competitive bids. It is essential, they said, to allocate contracts for the construction of Navy vessels in such fashion so that the complement of highly skilled, experienced shipyard workers would not be lost from the private shipbuilding industry, and would thus be kept available for periods of crisis, when the numbers of shipyard workers must be increased to about 1½ million.

It has been stated that Bethlehem Steel Co.'s representatives have, during the negotiations with the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, admitted that much of the company's merchant vessel construction and repair is also obtained by Bethlehem from old customers on the basis of negotiated prices, rather than on the basis of competitive bidding.

In the face of these facts, Bethlehem Steel Co., I am informed, has nevertheless persisted tenaciously in its demands that the clock of progress in industrial relations shall be turned back 20 years and that long-established rights and conditions of work enjoyed by these skilled shipyard workers shall be surrendered to the company. Conscious of their duty to the Nation and to its defense efforts, the officers of the union proposed to the company that the expired agreement be extended for 30 days in order that negotiations might go forward without interruption to the production of the naval vessels which had been entrusted to Bethlehem Steel Co. This proposal was rejected by the company. The officers of the union then proposed that all of Bethlehem Steel Co.'s demands, as well as the union's proposals for improvement in the employees' working conditions, be submitted to arbitration. It has been brought to my attention that this offer was also rejected, oblivious of what it owed to this Nation as a beneficiary of hundreds of millions of dollars in Government contracts, let alone what it owed to this Nation's defense program as a business enterprise operating freely under our American system.

I submit to this House that this Nation cannot permit any citizen, or group of citizens—whether by reason of profit, or by reason of attachment to the present program of our industrialists to undo the progress in labor relations which has been made in the last 20 years—to hold back this Nation in its race with Russia's stringently controlled and intensive program of production of nuclear vessels.

I submit to this House that we cannot expect the officers of the Shipbuilding Workers Union much longer to prevail on their members to remain at work despite the newest and most astounding action of Bethlehem Steel Co. That action as related to me was as follows:

Effective on August 13, Bethlehem Steel Co. in effect refused to bargain further with the union and unilaterally imposed upon the shipyard workers all of the demands that the company had previously made—the destruction of seniority, the ignoring of craft skills, the reduction in wage payments. The pleadings of these union officers have during these last 2 weeks been effective in keeping the men at work. But these men are proud Americans, they are skilled craftsmen, they will not long consent to accept as their lot the oppressive working conditions for which we pity workmen behind the iron curtain and criticize the dictators who rule the lives of those workmen.

As I have said, we cannot expect these leaders to prevail upon their members to work much longer under these conditions. We must come to their aid in preventing a strike which will halt production on the naval vessels I have mentioned, so that the employees only escape from these conditions which Bethlehem Steel Company seeks to impose upon them, will be to leave the industry and weaken this Nation's potential for building ships in time of war.

I submit to this House speedy methods that are available to this Nation to prevent a serious calamity which would render grave damage to our defense program.

I suggest two methods:

First, it would appear that Bethlehem Steel Co.'s actions toward the Shipbuilding Workers' Union constitute unfair labor practices under the Taft-Hartley Act. The Taft-Hartley Act contains a section 10(j) which permits the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board to obtain from the Federal courts an injunction prohibiting the commission of unfair labor practices. The General Counsel has availed himself of this remedy against law-breaking employers but seldom. I suggest that this situation is one which demands that in the national interest the General Counsel take such action immediately. I propose that the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board take such action without delay.

The second remedy that I suggest is that this House shall ascertain what are the facts in this labor dispute: shall ascertain whether Bethlehem Steel Co. is, or may find itself, in a poor competitive position for obtaining work in its shipyards unless it imposes upon its shipyard workers conditions of employment that exist nowhere else in American industry; shall ascertain what will be the effect upon our national defense of Bethlehem Steel Co.'s action in imposing these conditions of employment upon its shipyard employees now or in the future. I suggest that the same subcommittee which in 1954 conducted hearings under House Resolution 125, shall now immediately institute hearings to ascertain what are the facts that I have referred to, namely, the Subcommittee on Defense Activities of the House Armed Services Committee.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. DANIELS. Do I understand correctly that the company demands to take away the seniority rights of the craftsmen, the union members?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. That is correct. This is an unprecedented move on the part of this big industry. And, it is taking place at the present time. It is trying to roll the clock back 35 or 40 years so far as seniority rights are concerned, and it especially affects the people in the 40 to 45 years of age group.

Mr. DANIELS. May I present this question to the gentleman? If a man has been working for Bethlehem Steel as a union member for the past 25 years, and assuming that he has arrived at the age of 45, and the company recently engaged in its employ a man who had only been working for them a month or two, would the company then have the right to discharge the worker who had been employed by them for the past 25 years in favor of the young man who had only worked for a month or two because of the fact that he is more skilled and has more ability and is more versatile than the man working for them for 25 years?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. That is correct. Under the company's proposal, those would be the conditions. As to the workingman with 20 or 25 years seniority, his employment could be terminated and the younger man could be put in his place.

Mr. DANIELS. In speaking to some of the union members I have been informed that on August 12 or August 13, about 12 or 13 days after the contract had expired, that is, the collective bargaining agreement had expired, the company imposed its demands upon the workers. Do you know whether or not that is so?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. That is so, from what I understand.

Mr. DANIELS. Now, heretofore I understand that the union, which represents 17,000 craftsmen, last had a strike in 1947 and that upon the expiration of its previous contracts in 1952, 1954, and 1956—I believe those are the correct dates—the company agreed to a continuation of the collective bargaining agreement upon the same terms and conditions. Now, then, this year, upon the expiration of the contract on July 31, the company arbitrarily took the position of not accepting those terms but of enforcing its own demands upon the workers.

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. That is correct. They refused to allow the terms and conditions that existed under the contract that just expired. And the union was not demanding too much. However, the company was insisting on putting in these new proposals which are contrary to the traditional rights of the American working man as they have existed during the past 25 years.

Mr. DANIELS. I understand, in addition to the deprivation of their seniority rights, the company not only also desired to reduce wages and discontinue grievance procedures but also to eliminate many other proven and accepted practices. I agree with you that the company, in taking this position, is acting in a very undemocratic and unpatriotic manner inasmuch as the company is engaged in the building of many ships for our Navy, such as nuclear and missile vessels, which are so sorely and vitally needed for our defense and security.

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I was very much shocked to hear what the gentleman has said. I want him to know and I want the workers to know if there is anything in the world I can do to help, I will do it. I have known those workers for a great many years. I know their strength of character, I know their work, and I am really horrified that this should happen to them. Will the gentleman keep in touch with me? The workers were in my office this morning, but I missed them. I will do everything I can to help them.

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentlewoman from Massachusetts who has always been so very sympathetic to the working men and women of this Nation.

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for yielding. I concur in the views he has so ably presented to the House on this matter of vital importance—not only to the economy of the Nation, but to its defense as well.

The Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America and the Bethlehem Steel Co. have enjoyed close and cordial working relations for some time. This picture has now changed drastically as the company has abandoned its previously cooperative spirit. Fairplay is no longer the distinguishing mark of union-management relations.

The union has sought vainly for a formula to which the company would agree—but to no avail. Nor has the company indicated any willingness to arbitrate.

The union, on its part, has exercised the utmost forbearance and has agreed—and is carrying out—normal operations without the benefit or protection of a contract. The union, at least, is aware of the urgent requirement that important defense facilities must operate freely.

In the name of fairplay, management and labor should sit down and—in all seriousness—discuss union demands. If agreement cannot be reached, let an independent arbitrator lend the assistance that appears to be needed.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding to me at this time. I want to say a word of congratulations to him for bringing this matter to the attention of the public. It seems to me that the shipyard workers have certainly shown every evidence of good faith in dealing with the company. I am sorry to say that I cannot say the same thing about the Bethlehem Co. in their dealings with the union.

I believe this is a time, particularly in view of the nature of the work engaged in by these people, for good faith to be shown on both sides. I call on the Bethlehem Co. to show the kind of good faith which the unions have shown.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say, too, on behalf of my colleagues, the gentleman from the Fourth District of Maryland [Mr. FALLON], and the gentleman from the Third District of Maryland [Mr. GARMATZ], that we all join in concurring in the views expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GARMATZ] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARMATZ. Mr. Speaker, with the present strike of the steelworkers having caused unemployment to the extent of almost 40,000 persons in the Baltimore area, it is with alarm that I view the possibility of a strike in the Bethlehem Shipyards on the east coast.

Their contract expired recently and despite continued meetings, agreement has not been reached on a new contract. I do not know how great their differences are, but I am confident that they can be no greater than those which the House-Senate conference committee had to solve in the Kennedy-Landrum-Griffin bills. What appeared to be an impossible task, proved that even the most difficult situations can be resolved, with an earnest effort on both sides.

It is only by being willing to make concessions, that any differences can be settled, and I sincerely hope that both sides involved in the shipyard contracts will do their utmost in this regard. I join with my colleague, Mr. BURKE, in urging that every possible area be explored, in an attempt to reach a satisfactory settlement and avoid a strike.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate wholeheartedly the gentleman for pointing out what appears to be a very, very gross injustice and a violence to normal relationships between management and labor. It happens, may I say for the gentleman's benefit, that the same type of thing is spreading, and spreading rapidly, across the country. I should like at this time to insert in the RECORD a statement of a comparable situation that exists in connection with the Simmons Mattress Co. that operates in Kenosha, Wis. It has other branches throughout the country. This is a plant that has been there for 94 years, and employs some 3,000 people.

Two years ago they moved about half their operations to Indiana, stating at the time that they wanted to expand the hard goods end of their business in some plant. About 6 weeks or 2 months ago they announced to the employees one morning over the radio and in the evening paper that they had sold their plant—lock, stock, and barrel—and were moving from Kenosha to Indiana. Many of these people had worked there for 30, 40, and 50 years.

They have a pension program in the plant. The plant is moving and refusing to take any of these men with them, saying that they owe it to the new community to which they are going to employ labor there. They are taking just a few of their key personnel.

The pension program of these men under 55 is completely gone. They have had practically no labor trouble in the community. I know of no strike that they have had. It has come to light that in going to Indiana there was a contract signed which we consider a sweetheart contract, and from information that I have received it was signed between management and labor before the company ever hired a single employee, or at least only very, very few. It is a contract that is substandard in comparison with the contract that it has in Kenosha, which is only fair. The difference is so great that it would shock the conscience of anyone who read it.

This 94-year-old company that has operated in this community with no labor trouble is going to save millions of dollars a year. They will be throwing out of employment, with no regard for the families of these men, people who have worked there 30, and 40 and 50 years. They have refused to take them along, they have refused to give them any recognition of any kind. They have abolished the pension program.

It appears that this is a situation that will grow. One of the reasons why I am viewing this new labor bill with grave concern is that I do not feel it takes care of this type of loophole that affects vitally the working men and working women of America, who should have our concern.

There is much hate and vengeance in this bill and too little labor control. These are the types of problems that should be cured.

We do not want to hurt management. We want to help labor and we want to help management, too. But we do not want either to be put in a position where they can do the type of thing that the gentleman from Massachusetts is talking about that is happening along the coast, or that I am complaining about in Midwest America. No longer are these plants moving from north to south because they can pay a lower scale of wages. They are moving from locations in the North or the West to other locations where some chamber of commerce is anxious to get them, and will bring them in guaranteeing a low rate of pay, so that they know, if they go there, they are going to save much money in comparison with the contract that has been in existence for many, many years in the community where they were doing business. The Simmons Co. is a fine company, yet they are moving out and doing this grave injustice.

I think you should be complimented, sir, for being the first to point out these abuses on the part of management toward loyal labor that has worked for management for many, many years and who are not entitled to this kind of treatment. I congratulate you, sir.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentlewoman.

Mrs. GRANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

I want to compliment the gentleman from Massachusetts for his very forthright statement. I might add that I have been speaking today to some members of the Shipbuilders Union. They are greatly distressed over the situation which exists and do not want to strike. These men are loyal American citizens interested in the defense of our country. I cannot understand why the mediators appointed by the President do not show more concern in this problem, particularly at this time when we are in a race with Russia.

As I understand, the employees are told they will have to strike if they want any attention paid to their problem.

At this time I think we should try to prevent strikes instead of enforcing them.

Mr. TOLL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. TOLL. Mr. Speaker, I also would like to commend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BURKE] and my charming and gracious colleague, the gentlewoman from Philadelphia, Pa. [Mrs. GRANAHAN], on their excellent approach on the possible solution of this problem.

I associate myself with the remarks made by my colleagues.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I am certain that the Members of the House are shocked by the facts revealed by my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, having to do with the breakdown of negotiations by the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America and Bethlehem Steel Co. It appears to me that the position of industry in this instance is as hard and unbending as the product of the blast furnace.

Here is an instance where, it seems to me, a decent, honest, labor union is striving to protect not only the interest of its own members, but the security and well-being of the country. It is doing this in good faith while dealing with, as Mr. BURKE stated, "a giant of industry that would jeopardize America's defense posture and cheat its workers, in the interest of increasing its net earnings."

The Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America is one of the country's exemplary labor organizations. Its members have proved in times of peace and war that the well-being of the country stands above their self-interest.

I am proud that the president of this great union, John J. Grogan, is not only a resident of my home State but of my home county. He is a friend and neighbor.

Mr. Grogan is not only an outstanding labor leader and prominent public official, he is a distinguished citizen of New Jersey.

The Congress would fail not only this union, but in addition the entire labor movement if it does not take steps to explore to the fullest the charges made here today.

Involved but obscured in this great controversy is a concerted attempt by industry to introduce an entirely new concept into what has been a landmark of the American labor movement. I am referring to the principle of security. Industry is trying to substitute a new concept of availability and versatility. These are very atttractive words. But let us not be lacking in perspicacity. This is an attempt to abolish seniority. We are very concerned with problems and programs for our senior citizens. If industry is successful in this program we better start studying programs for the middle aged. If a productive man in his middle age can no longer be protected by a seniority system we are in effect undermining our national economy. This is one of the issues in this controversy. The other is a complete callousness by industry toward the man who must earn his living by the fruits of his labor.

I support my colleague from Massachusetts in his suggestion.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to join my colleagues here this afternoon in extending congratulations to the gentleman from Massachusetts for bringing this very, very important subject matter to the attention of the Congress. I personally know that it is a matter that he has been interested in for some period of time. I realize that day after day he has worked untiringly and unceasingly on this matter here in the Halls of Congress and with the various agencies of Government to see whether or not he could do something to bring about some relief to these employees. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, there are 17,000 of these skilled craftsmen employed along our Atlantic seaboard, and the greater part of them—numbering 11,000 or thereabouts—are employed in the district so well represented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BURKE] who is speaking from the well of the House. There are about 11,000 craftsmen who are specialists in all fields and in many particular lines of work or occupations. Men, no doubt, who have given their all to the service of the Bethlehem shipyard all these years. I know full well they are the best that can be hired because of the fact they have been in the employ of this giant corporation all these years. I am satisfied that with their efficiency program and whatnot, if they did not render valuable service to their employers they would have long ago lost their employment and their work and labor with Bethlehem Steel. But I know also, Mr. Speaker, that these same men not only contributed these skills down through these later years, but they were the ones who contributed so much toward the winning of World War II and the Korean conflict when we sought their services for the defense of our country during World War II and the Korean conflict. There are 11,000 of them who no doubt are interested in the Bethlehem Steel Co., having been employed all these years, whose families are interested in this particular corporation. It is a sad thing to know now, Mr. Speaker, that through information coming to us through the gentleman from Massachusetts in the well of the House, our colleague, that the company has refused to renew the contract that expired on July 31 of this year.

True enough, they are willing to come to some terms, and those terms, as were so well stated by a previous speaker, are unreasonable, uncertain, and unjust. They ask these employees to waive their seniority, whether it is 25, 30, or 35 years of valuable service to that company. I say it is unfair and unjust. After all, we in the Congress believe in seniority and practice it among ourselves and our employees. The seniority rule obtains in our committees. Seniority is something that is historical in this country, and we all know it has been in vogue in these corporations.

I doubt if any competitor corporations of Bethelem have seen fit to ask their employees or their union members to waive seniority rights.

Not only does Bethlehem Steel wish them to waive their seniority rights, but as I am informed by the gentleman, they also want craftsmen to waive their particular type of work so that an expert skilled machinist could be put on as a laborer or put on as an elevator operator. That to me means a reduction in salary, reduction in wages. That means to me that a skilled workman is going to lose face; he is going to be put on something unskilled and be paid unskilled wages rather than those he has been entitled to and enjoyed all these years. That is discouragement, of course, to an employee.

I know the gentleman is aware that the House Committee on Armed Services of the Congress—and I see two of our able colleagues of that committee here now, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN]. Both of long standing on this very important committee of Congress, in 1954 had a subcommittee that investigated a like subject matter. That committee brought about favorable results to both management and labor. I suppose the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BURKE] who is leading the fight on this very, very important subject matter that is so acute should have immediate action. It is hopeful that perhaps again if no other committee here in the Congress takes action that this Committee on Armed Services will have a subcommittee look into this controversy and bring about favorable results as the previous investigation did in 1954.

So I just want to say in conclusion that I heartily agree with my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. BURKE] and compliment and congratulate him again. This is a very, very important subject matter. These men are now working under duress and under compulsion. They are refused a contract. They are asked to take demotions. They are ordered to take reductions in salary because management says they must do so in order to meet competition. I do not know of any other concern that is competing with them, that is carrying out such a program with their personnel. But I do say that Bethlehem Steel—Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., rather—owes something to the people. After all, throughout the years since World War II we in the Congress here have appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars for defense, a goodly part of which has gone to the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. Of course, it inured to the benefit of the employees, it inured to management, it inured to the benefit of those who invested their money in the company; and that is as it should be.

But again I express the hope that something can and should be done forthwith that will be beneficial not only to management but also beneficial to the employees so they can carry on in the way to which they have been accustomed all these years. Again I wish to compliment and congratulate the gentleman again for his able presentation of this situation to the Congress.

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. O'NEILL. I would like to agree with the remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BURKE]. I admire his courage in taking the so-called bull by the horns and bringing this before the Members of Congress.

I had the pleasure of serving with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BURKE] in the Massachusetts Legislature when we were both elected at the same time back some 22 years ago. When I came to the U.S. Congress almost 8 years ago representing the district I now represent, one of my largest employers was the Boston Naval Shipyard which employed about 9,500 people. Constantly I was arguing and bickering and fighting with them in an effort to have them stabilize the workload. At the end of the Korean conflict Mr. Anderson was Secretary of the Navy. He had adopted the policy that instead of, as had been the custom previous to World War II, with the Navy yards that were operated by the Government, or for the most part the construction work, the naval shipyards throughout the Nation would do only a certain percentage of the work and that private industry would do the remainder of the work.

I have a letter that came to my desk yesterday from Mr. John Grogan, president of the International Union of Marine and Shipbuilder Workers of America, addressed to the Honorable Cecil B. Milne, Assistant Secretary for Material, Department of the Navy. I will read a section of the letter:

> I cannot believe that the Navy Department will say to itself, "Well, the strike will not last long, and our construction program will not suffer much from a few months' interruption, therefore, we will remain neutral." But even if it were possible to believe that your Department would adopt such an attitude, a larger problem would still confront it. Is it conceivable that free American citizens, particularly highly skilled craftsmen whose skills are avidly sought by other employers, would work under the feudal conditions spelled out in Bethlehem's proposed contract?

What have they done at the present time? In the letter he explains that as of August 3, Bethlehem, though our union's members had remained at work despite termination of the labor contract, made a frontal attack upon its employees' union. Bethlehem discontinued enforcement of the union shop provision of the labor contract, discontinued enforcement of the dues checkoff provision of that contract, discontinued the top seniority heretofore granted to union officers and shop stewards, and discontinued the old contract provisions regarding grievance procedure.

Let me continue with the thought of Mr. Anderson when he was Secretary of the Navy, and may I say that the Bethlehem Steel Co. has received a tremendous amount of its contracts through negotiations. The purpose behind the original theme of Mr. Anderson was that the sole justification which the Department of the Navy has given to the Congress and to the Nation for allocating naval construction to Bethlehem on a noncompetitive basis has been the necessity for maintaining an adequate shipbuilding industry as an essential resource and mobilization base, and a definite asset to the national security.

This is the direct quote of Secretary Anderson. As I say, there are large naval shipyards in our districts. I also have a Bethlehem shipyard in my district. The following is quoting Secretary Anderson:

> The Navy Department had also in mind that the construction of ships in programs not dictated by active wartime conditions is not a mass production operation, but rather an individually tailored project in the case of each ship or similar groups of ships ordered.
> Inherent in this fact is the requirement for retaining a large number of special and design skills which, if dissipated, are extremely difficult to recruit again. It is this factor that makes it so important that going concerns be kept going.

You know, I agree with him that a going concern should be kept going. At the present time Bethlehem with these millions of dollars of naval contracts tries to lock the doors on the employees. We realize that the workers of the Bethlehem company, the plant of the Bethlehem company, the stockholders of the Bethlehem company are all to be congratulated for their performances during the war and the great production record which those yards set up. But at the present time they also should take into consideration that this is a matter of national concern. They have not any right to use Federal funds and to take naval contracts and act the way they are acting.

I concur with what the gentleman has said and congratulate him for having the courage to come up here on the floor of the House and bring this problem to our attention. I do hope that the War Department and the Navy Department will take cognizance of the remarks that are made here on the floor this afternoon.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. PHILBIN. I hesitate to intrude upon the splendid, most impressive and effective speech the gentleman is making. It has touched me very deeply. I am sure every Member of this House who believes in the cause of cordial and friendly labor-management relations and every Member of this House who is interested in the national defense, the national safety and the national security will recognize that the gentleman has by his admirable speech touched upon a very important question that must command the attention of this Congress and that must command the immediate attention of the present administrative bodies having to deal with labor-management relations.

I do not wish to trespass further upon the time of the gentleman, because I am very much interested in hearing the conclusion of his splendid address. But, I do want to associate myself with all of the commendatory and congratulatory remarks that have been made and to assure him that he will have my wholehearted support in the objectives which he seeks in trying to establish a peaceful relationship under conditions of fairness and justice to the workers of this great industry that will assure the continuance of the most important and necessary work that is being performed in that industry for the security and the safety of this Nation.

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DONOHUE. Has the Bethlehem Steel Co., in your opinion, suffered any reverses, financially, in the last several years?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. No. According to the reports that I received, I understand that Bethlehem Steel has made profits up to $167 million or approximately that during the last fiscal year.

Mr. DONOHUE. And is it not so that in their most recent financial statement it is indicated that their profit for the last fiscal year was larger than in any year since the end of World War II?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. That is my understanding.

Mr. DONOHUE. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts, like most of us that were in the Navy or in Government during the war, had experiences similar to mine. We were invited to these different shipyards, when all of these loyal employees were called together when an award was being made. Representatives from the Navy Department and from other agencies down here in Washington in making the award, would commend and compliment the employees for the great job they were doing in furtherance of victory for this Nation during World War I and World War II; is that not so?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. That is correct.

Mr. DONOHUE. You had that experience many times.

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. Oh, yes.

Mr. DONOHUE. Are these the same employees that are now suffering from these acts that you have described, that is, depriving them now of those rights that have been built up and mutually agreed upon over the years?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. Oh, yes. Many of the employees are of long service. Many of them are veterans of World War II; people that have given unstintingly of their time in behalf of the Nation.

Mr. DONOHUE. And many of them have reached the age where their employment opportunities elsewhere will be very limited; is that not so?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. That is correct.

Mr. DONOHUE. And is it not so that many of them have reached an age where probably they will have to call upon public agencies to provide for themselves and their families?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. That could well be so.

Mr. DONOHUE. So this company and similar companies that have been sustained in a large degree by the U.S. Government contracts down through the years are now expecting the local governments to take care of these men and women that they are now seeking to displace with younger people; that is so, is it not?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. That is correct.

Mr. DONOHUE. Well, I want to associate myself with the gentleman from Massachusetts and I share his deep concern about these unfortunate developments he has revealed and I assure him that in any way I can be of help, it will be granted and extended most willingly.

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER], who has been so kind and considerate in allowing me to proceed at this time.

I would like to point out to the Members of the House that this is a very serious problem.

Today the Soviet Government has from 400 to 450 operating submarines on our Atlantic and Pacific seacoasts, ready to strike at any part of our country. I do not want to alarm anyone or say that the Nation is in grave peril, but we should be alert enough and know that this Nation cannot stand the closing down of our shipyards for 1 day or 1 hour. We have to go forward with the moneys that have been appropriated and continue the building of ships. There are only 33 vessels being built during the coming fiscal year and only 4 submarines in that budget. We must realize the facts that we are faced with, the realities, that Soviet Russia with one of the greatest, one of the mightiest war machines ever developed in the history of man faces us on the other shore.

The question now is whether or not Bethlehem wants to recognize this, wants to accept their patriotic responsibility, stop their provocative action, trying to provoke a strike, and sit down with these men, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN] pointed out, in justice to each other and work out a negotiated agreement that will be beneficial not only to the Bethlehem Co. but to the employees and to our Nation as well.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I have before me a letter dated August 27, 1959, from the Department of the Navy, signed by C. P. Milne, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, in response to a telegram of August 14 that I sent to the Secretary of the Navy concerning the labor negotiations between the Bethlehem Steel Co., shipbuilding division, and the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America—AFL–CIO—in which they pay tribute to the local and national leaders of this union. With the gentleman's permission I would like to read an excerpt from that letter.

> The Navy is aware of the union's keeping its members at work and appreciates this exercise of responsible leadership. The local and national leaders of the International Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America (AFL–CIO) have for many years cooperated in the building of vitally needed ships and have displayed great loyalty to the Government by maintaining full and continuous production in the construction and repair of these ships.

I come from the 14th Congressional District of the State of New Jersey which covers the city of Hoboken, of which city the president of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, John J. Grogan, is the mayor. The same John J. Grogan is the president of the Marine Union of Shipbuilding Workers of America to whom the Assistant Secretary of the Navy paid the foregoing compliment.

In this Chamber several weeks ago we heard much, and much ado was made, about corruption and racketeering in unions throughout this country. I want to state here and now that I have known John J. Grogan, the president of this union, for many years; that he is a capable, understanding, responsible, and honest labor leader. I wish to compliment him for the understanding he has shown in asking his men to continue on the job in spite of the apparently unfair action of Bethlehem in this particular situation.

So I desire to join the gentleman from Massachusetts and compliment him for bringing this matter to the attention of the House and all of its Members and associate myself with him in this matter which is of such importance not only to the 17,000 craftsmen of the Shipbuilders Union but also to the safety and security of our Nation.

Also I wish to compliment the attitude of these men who have continued on the job, as well as the local and national leaders for their democratic and patriotic attitude in spite of the apparent lockout of Bethlehem.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to compliment my colleague and neighbor. Also I should like to ask him a question. Is it not true that the executives of this company are among the highest paid executives in the Nation, and they are not suffering perhaps as much as other people in the United States would suffer from this action?

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. I understand they are doing pretty well.

Mr. MEYER. I thank the gentleman.

INCREASED EMPHASIS BY DEFENSE DEPARTMENT ON CBR PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. BROOKS of Texas). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I have taken the floor today to speak to you about a problem which I feel is important to us as a nation of free people who honor and protect life, and hopefully, represent and live as a moral and good people. Since this problem involves the defense of our country, there are no simple answers; only bewildering paradoxes and basic questions.

The subject of my talk is the increased emphasis by the Defense Department on the CBR program; that is, the chemical, biological, and radiological warfare program, and possible changes in American defense policy in this field. On June 16 and June 22 of this year, the House Science and Astronautics Committee held hearings on the CBR program. These hearings were limited for the most part to a technical review of what the Defense Department was doing in this area, besides considering the possible uses of CBR in wartime. The committee did not fully explore certain basic moral and policy considerations about the use of CBR in the event of war, which I believe we as legislators must consider very carefully. I would, however, like to take this opportunity to congratulate the chairman and the members of the Space Committee for the fine job which they did in getting at the facts regarding CBR—and I urgently commend a reading of the hearings and report to every Member.

The Space Committee in its investigation of the CBR program established the fact that the Defense Department is interested in increasing the CBR program from an approximate current level of $40 million to $125 million. It was established that such an increase represents a basic change in the thinking of the Defense Department in the CBR area.

It was further established that although some uses were found for CBR, it was duly noted that CBR is not a panacea to our defense problems. The committee pointed out on page 14 of its report that—

> CBR weapons are not a complete answer. They do not replace the nuclear deterrent, and they do not replace the elements of seapower, or the infantryman. But they could readily turn out to be the weapon which toppled a tremendous investment in some previously efficacious strategy. * * * Research cannot guarantee results in every instance. Perhaps CBR research for another decade would not alter the general military balance of power. But if it does, and the United States has not gained the same capability as others, the cost to the Nation would be beyond calculation.

These remarks suggest that the committee feels that it really is not that sure of the necessity of CBR, but if we are to err as to their need, we should err on the side of national security. This is, of course, a powerful argument and must be considered with due gravity by the Congress. On page 15 of the report under recommendation 9, the committee states that it "cannot bring itself to describe any weapon of war as 'humane' and makes no moral judgment on the possible use of CBR in warfare." This, of course, is the basic problem involved with CBR which I shall discuss in this speech. Another recommendation of the committee, No. 15, states that—

> It is also recognized that in the present world situation with other countries pursuing vigorous programs of CBR development, the best immediate guarantee the United States can possess to insure that CBR is not used anywhere against the free world, is to have a strong capability in this field, too. This will only come with a stronger program of research.

This recommedation does not raise certain basic problems which occur when other nations will begin developing CBR weapons. It should be duly noted that at this point it is only the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union that have a great capacity for developing CBR weapons, and are, in fact, the nations that are developing these weapons in any large-scale program. Thus, the policy actions of these nations with regard to their use will be watched very closely by other nations. If the United States and the Soviet Union create an atmosphere which suggests that it is quite all right to use CBR in wartime, these nations will have given the go-ahead to other nations to build these weapons. We should note that it does not take a great level of technological skill or great amounts of money to build chemical and biological weapons; consequently, the cost of these weapons and the skill involved in their production make them well within the range of other nations. It is not unlikely that smaller nations that are less responsible would begin using these deadly weapons against each other. This, of course, is why it is of paramount importance that the United States set a moral tone in this area. If we do not, we will have done much to initiate the production of these weapons by smaller nations who might otherwise have compunctions in manufacturing and using these weapons.

The hearings before Congress on CBR raised many problems. For example, it is quite clear that the United States is woefully unprepared in case of attack by an enemy with chemical and biological weapons. We certainly have no adequate civil defense in this area. Indeed, it is questionable whether there is any kind of defense to certain of the chemicals and bacteria that could be developed and used on our people and cities.

In the spring of 1958, when confronted with the question by the Senate Armed Forces Committee, "Are there any BW agents for use against humans or animals for which there is no countermeasure or an inoculant?" Gen. William Creasy, the former head of the Army Chemical Corps, replied, "Yes, sir. We do know that in the case of any kind of vaccine, you can override it with massive doses, and the doses we use are massive doses."

Another problem which was raised by the CBR hearings is that there is no truly adequate method of ascertaining whether or not a nation is producing and developing CBR weapons. Consequently, it is very difficult to conceive of an international inspection system in this area similar to the one which could be initiated in the nuclear area. Thus, in order for any international agreement to be effective in the CBR area, it is imperative that these agreements have behind them a moral force at least as strong as the inspection system in the nuclear area.

For now, however, I wish to leave the Space Committee report and its recommendations and the many problems such as these that it raised, to consider the subtle but real change in policy which has been instituted by some, or for which adoption is pressed by others, by those connected with the CBR program. The purpose of this change, of course, is to gain acceptance for chemical and biological weapons, as just another weapon in our arsenal which should be used as an offensive as well as retaliatory weapon. For example, General Creasy suggested before the Space Committee that CBR be used as an offensive weapon. He stated on page 15 of the hearings that—

I am not advocating preventive war but we must change our policy, which is that we don't hit back until you hit us.

General Creasy also pointed out on page 17 of the hearings that—

I would hate to see us enter into any agreement with anybody regarding CBR so that if we are going to fight we are going to do it with our hands tied behind our backs.

It is only within the last few months that there has been mention of the CBR program in the popular press. For the most part, the writers in this area have been present military officers in the Chemical Corps and retired military officers of the Chemical Corps. The theme that runs through these articles is that, first, the veil of secrecy should be lifted in the chemical and biological areas within the limits of security; second, we should build up, develop, and research in this area faster and more actively than we are presently doing; and third, the historic strictures that have been placed upon our Armed Forces as to the use of CBR should be removed. With the first two points, I am in agreement.

However, the argument of the Defense Department, through General Stubbs, is that a war fought with chemical weapons is a more humane war. The description by the Defense Department of these chemicals is, indeed, rather disarming. For example, they talk about their psychochemicals which can make cowards out of brave men and vice versa; they tell of the possibilities of sleep chemicals which will put populations to sleep for hours, while soldiers march in and take over the area. This, of course, is not the whole story. General Creasy, the former Chemical Corps Chief, has stated that CBR weapons are as deadly or deadlier than nuclear warfare.

General Rothschild, in an article in Harper's magazine, page 22, has stated:

Incredibly dangerous amounts of biological material can be carried in very small bulk. For example, a single ounce of the toxic agent which causes the disease called Q fever would be sufficient to infect 28 billion people.

How would these weapons be used? Judging from the testimony before the Space Committee hearings, these instruments of warfare would be used in the so-called brush-fire localized war. CBR would take the place of nuclear weapons in this kind of encounter. But we should note that the primary and ancillary of the lethal CBR weapons are not that different from nuclear explosions; that is, poisoning of the atmosphere, destruction of the civilian population, and for that matter, destruction of all life within a given area, is possible.

Consequently, depending on the kind of bacteria or chemical used, the results could be just as horrendous, indiscriminate, and inhumane killing as if nuclear weapons were, in fact, used. Indeed, there are those that take the position that we should not build these weapons or increase expenditures for research in this field, arguing that the range of destruction which we have in our defense arsenal would seem to be quite complete without an expanded CBR program. Given the present world situation, I am sure that this is not a realistic position. There is strong evidence to suggest that the Soviet Union is engaging in a build-up of biological and chemical weapons. Much of the Soviet civil defense is aimed at protection from a biological and chemical attack. Hence, the realities of the situation appear to demand that we ourselves engage in an increased program of research and development in this field. I might add that I agree to this view only reluctantly.

The fact, however, that we might have to have an expanded program in this field does not mean that we should change the basic policies of the United States which were reiterated by President Roosevelt on June 8, 1943, when he stated that the United States under no circumstances would use poisonous or obnoxious gases unless used first by our enemies. This policy is being attacked on all fronts by various officials close to the Defense Department. For example, General Rothschild stated:

We must reject once and for all the position stated by President Roosevelt that an enemy can have the first chemical or biological glow wherever or whenever he wishes. That blow could be disastrous. We must make it clear that we consider these weapons among the normal usable means of war.

Mr. Speaker, our policy in this area is one which was not laid down casually. It stems from our basic belief that even in war we must preserve the essence of humanity. In 1921 the United States itself called an international conference in Washington for the specific purpose of outlawing poisonous gases and other similar weapons. This conception of the use of such weapons is one which is generally accepted by all nations. For example, the international agreement through the Geneva protocol of 1925 specifically prohibited the military use of chemical and biological weapons.

The Soviet Union has been quick to recognize and seize upon the fact that these weapons are abhorrent to the people of the world. I wish to quote to you a message that was sent only last week to a conference of scientists in Canada who have been discussing the problem of chemical and biological warfare:

In his message Khrushchev stated: "In the name of the Soviet Government, and personally, I would like to send greetings to the members of the Pugwash Conference of Scientists, meeting to study problems arising from the threat to humanity of biological and chemical weapons. We share the concern of scientists, who justly point out that the use of these weapons may have no less horrible a consequence than the use of atomic or hydrogen weapons. Not by chance were chemical and bacteriological weapons condemned by mankind, and their military use prohibited by international agreement through the Geneva protocol of 1925. As is well known the Soviet Union strongly supports the prohibition of all types of weapons of mass annihilation, including nuclear as well as chemical and biological weapons. We hold that their use runs counter to humane principles, the rules of international law, and the conscience of all peoples. You, as authoritative scientists, can make a significant contribution in the struggle against preparations for war, employing nuclear, chemical, biological, and other mass annihilation weapons. I warmly wish the Pugwash participants success in their noble work."

It is disturbing to me that the Soviet Union is able to clothe many of its international policies in morality when basically its approach to international policies is quite Machiavellian. Conversely it is disturbing to me that our Nation, which repudiates naked power politics, is utterly silent on this question. Fortunately, however, I believe that our true intent as to our basic moral position is generally known and more often than not reaches the peoples of the world. For example, few people anywhere believe that the United States used biological weapons in the Korean war. However, the effectiveness of the propaganda of the Chinese Communists about our use of such weapons during the Korean war was in the planting of suspicions of its use. If the United States was now to change its chemical and biological warfare policies, we will have both added fuel to the propaganda mills of the Communists and strengthened their false charges about our use of such methods during wartime.

Mr. Speaker, there are many questions about CBR which go unanswered. We do not know whether we can, in fact, develop a successful civil defense to a CBR attack. We do not know whether any kind of international agreement could be implemented in this field. It is questionable whether having these awesome weapons on hand will act as a deterrent to attack.

However, I believe that there is an answer to the question of preemptive use of chemical and biological weapons. We should not accede to the judgment of the certain military officers who want the right to use chemical and biological weapons as preemptive attack weapons. We should not accede to the wishes of those in the Defense Department who want to change the policy restated by President Roosevelt in 1943, at the height of World War II, that we would not under any circumstances use chemical and biological weapons unless first used by our enemy. I feel that now is the time that we must reevaluate, before it is too late, where we are going in the field of CBR.

It is now imperative that we as a nation follow our history and good sense in not using chemical and biological weapons for preemptive attack. Although it is important to be prepared in this field, if the facts show this as being a necessity, we must not fall into the propaganda and moral trap which the Soviets have laid for us.

Mr. Speaker, we are losing the propaganda battle, and unless we are willing to express publicly a moral national policy on this issue we will be creating the impression that we are oblivious to the horrors that these weapons bring if unleashed. I do not believe the American people want such a state to come into being. Because of this, and because of the urgency of the problem, I am introducing today a concurrent resolution which will reaffirm our policy of nonuse of biological and chemical weapons unless they are first used by our enemy. This, I believe, is what the peoples of the world are waiting for us to say. This, I believe, is the way our historical heritage and our moral values can be reaffirmed.

Therefore, I conclude that while we are constrained to develop these weapons qualitatively and quantitatively at an increased rate, we must concurrently reaffirm and announce as an ethical notion our resolve not to initiate use of these weapons in war or in peace.

We cannot allow the concept of survival to obliterate our spiritual and moral values, for if we do survival will have no meaning.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] for the excellent resolution he has introduced today. I think his statement on the subject will clarify the point for the people of America, and I feel deeply that his resolution deserves serious and immediate consideration. I, too, have been vitally concerned about the danger of chemical and biological warfare, and I pray that somehow we will be able to avert the use of these terrible weapons in war. It should be pointed out, however, that the Soviet Union seems to have a strong program of development and production in the chemical, biological, and radiological area. Coupled with the great number of Soviet submarines—500—which have missile launching capabilities, and the fact that chemical and biological weapons may be attached to these missiles, we must be on our guard both as to our civil defense in this area and as to development of our own weapons as a deterrent.

It should be made clear, however, that we must take every reasonable step toward reaching agreement with the Soviet Union on chemical, biological, and radiological weapons.

Again, let me congratulate the gentleman from Wisconsin for calling the attention of the Congress to this vital subject.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. MEYER. I would like to congratulate my colleague from Wisconsin for an excellent presentation. As we know, he is one of the new and younger Members of the Congress. By my association with him I have found him to be a very serious person who has done a lot of hard work, a lot of extra work, thinking about problems that have to be thought out, seeking solutions. I know that he has many good and many progressive ideas, and I am very happy to be associated with him and to congratulate him for his statement. With my own background, with some study in pathology, and with my work associated with quite a few biological scientists and chemists, some of the leading ones in the country, I know, through my own experience, that this field of biological and chemical warfare can present problems that will be of great concern to the American people and to the people of the world. We can only hope that these new weapons may never be used. We can also hope that through a coordination of effort we may prevent the use of these weapons and that we, the American people, as a people dedicated to peace and the welfare of all peoples, will be willing to take that step and say that we will not first use weapons of this type to bring about future great horrors to people all over the world. And I want to say again that I congratulate my colleague and friend for his excellent presentation and for the great service he is performing in bringing this matter to our attention.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I thank the gentleman.

INFLATION AS IT AFFECTS OUR SENIOR CITIZENS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Speaker, no group of Americans has been more cruelly pinched by the insidious hand of inflation than our senior citizens. The cost of living has steadily risen and the purchasing power of the dollar has declined under the hammer blows of deficit spending and runaway monetary policies, even while the incomes of those 65 years of age or older have remained fixed. Indeed, it has well been said that those least able to combat inflation are these senior citizens who live on incomes that stay the same, no matter what the dollar is good for at the store.

Much has been done for this great and deserving segment of our population in recent years. The Congress has increased social security benefits to levels that conform more realistically to the mounting curve of prices for almost every type of goods and services. Action has been taken to safeguard retirement rights for individuals who are disabled from work and who are no longer able to contribute to the old-age retirement system. Many persons previously denied participation, including 2 million of the Nation's self-employed farmers and 1¼ million hired farm workers, were brought into full partnership of the social security program. In 1956, the social security program was further expanded to include all nonfarm, self-employed professional persons, such as lawyers and dentists, but not doctors of medicine. Included also have been such groups as ministers, State and local government employees, domestic workers, and many others.

As a result of these actions by the Congress to improve the social security system of old-age and survivors insurance, we find that today more people are receiving more social security benefits than at any time in the country's history. In the past 7 years, the number of beneficiaries has almost tripled, while the total of dollars fed into the Nation's economy in the form of social security payments has increased fivefold. We see, for the first time in the lifespan of this Nation, a majority of our population 65 years or older now receiving benefits; with over 3 million more younger beneficiaries as well, including children of deceased or retired workers, their mothers, women aged 62 to 64, and persons with severely disabling handicaps.

All of these things are impressive evidence of the concern of the Congress for the problems of senior citizens. The record shows that the Congress has been consistently aware of its obligation to enact positive and forward-looking legislation that will help these Americans in their advancing years. I always refrain from using the word "old" to describe these people, because countless numbers of them have demonstrated a remarkable energy and capacity for achievement to the point of nullifying Webster's definition of "old" as being one who is "worn out—weakened or exhausted from age—having lost the vigor of youth." Indeed, it is one of the most significant developments of our time that we have come to realize fully the tremendous contribution that these wise and mature citizens can make and are making to America's growth.

It must be remembered, too, that the lengthening lifespan of the American people, in combination with the increase of our population, makes it probable that the census of persons 65 or over will top 22 million by 1975. The average lifespan now approximates 70 years, whereas back in 1920, it was just 54 years. So the facts are on the record—American people are living longer, and there are more and more of them.

In the light of all this, what the Congress has done to date to assist America's senior citizens is very commendable. But, in looking after the interests of these people, the Congress has not entirely caught up with the fast pace of reality in one important respect. I refer to the situation existing today which restricts to $1,200 per year the amount which may be earned by recipients of social security benefits after they retire from regular employment. Prior to 1951, as we know, the retired worker was allowed to earn only $14.99 a month and still receive benefits. In 1951 through 1952, the ceiling was increased to $50 a month. In 1953 through 1954, the limit a worker could earn and still receive benefits was $75. In 1955, a limit of $1,200 per year was enacted, and if a person earned more than this, he would lose some benefits, although not necessarily all in the year. But, one could always receive benefits for a particular month, regardless of annual earnings, if he earned less than $80 in that month. In January of 1959, the $1,200 per year limit was still maintained, but a person could now always be paid, regardless of annual earnings, for any month in which he earned $100 or less.

So the record shows that the Congress has tried to keep up with the changing nature of our times. I submit, however, that the limit of $1,200 earnings permitted by existing statute is altogether inadequate when we analyze the facts. In order to meet the basic expenses of food, clothing, shelter, medical care, and all the other costs of everyday living, it is quite evident that the present restriction of earnings to $1,200 for a full year is grossly incompatible with the increased cost of getting along in our present-day economy. It does not take much figuring to determine the extent to which earnings of $25 a week will carry a person, even when supplemented by social security benefits. And, from the practical point of view, the limit on monthly, or annual, outside earnings can hardly even be controlled as finely as the law spells out.

There is yet another consideration that impels us to take a fresh look at the limitations imposed by present law. That is the important matter of our senior citizens' self-respect. Much has been said about the urgency and importance of making it possible for these persons to have more years of productive and remunerative employment. It is good for them, and it is good for America. Certainly, we owe these citizens the fullest, broadest opportunity to take an active role in the life of their communities, States, and the Nation.

For these reasons, I introduced on January 15 of this year a bill, H.R. 2516, to increase to $2,400 a year, or $200 a month, the amount of earnings permitted each year without deductions from benefits provided under title II of the Social Security Act. This legislation, if passed, will be of considerable help to our senior citizens. It takes into account the realistic needs of our changing times. This bill would not in any way adversely affect our economy or our general tax problems, nor would it take employment from other persons now employed. It would simply broaden the base of opportunity for those of our senior citizens who are physically and mentally capable of contributing their skills and talents to America, without being penalized for doing so.

I hope that this 86th Congress will see fit to enact this bill, so that all the men and women of America in their sunset years will know that we have an abiding interest in helping them feel more secure than ever.

THE JUVENILE COURT AND JUVENILE CRIME IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, it is with great reluctance that I take any of the valuable time of the House upon what may be one of the last days of this session. I will take only a few minutes. I do this to give to the House some facts regarding pending legislation which I believe the House should have.

You may have noticed that in recent days the sensation-mongering papers in Washington have devoted quite a bit of time and space to vilifying me and calling me names. I am not greatly concerned about that. Up until this time I have ignored these attacks, because I just considered the source.

The notoriously radical Washington Post has called me "benighted" and socially ignorant. It is not hard to understand how that variegated—pink and yellow—sheet would think that I am benighted and socially ignorant. Their philosophy and mine are as far apart as the poles, for which I am grateful indeed. They sent one of their smear experts down to Atlanta last month to dig up all the dirt they could unearth about me. The best their smear expert could do resulted in the blurb which they carried on Sunday, August 23, some of it true, some of it false, most of it slanted. I did not bother to notice that. I have on more than one occasion stated that in my opinion it is almost as great a compliment to be attacked by the notoriously radical Washington Post as it is to be attacked by the Daily Worker. The little pint-sized sensation-hunting Daily News and the Evening Star may stand a little higher on the ladder of journalistic ethics, but such difference as exists is not as much a matter of principle as it is a matter of degree. All three of them have contributed in promoting the factors and conditions which have resulted in Washington getting in the sorry condition it finds itself with reference to crime, illegitimacy, and changing population.

But I am not going to engage in any name-calling contest. It is impossible to win a barking contest with one feist dog, let alone three of them.

The facts I want to give to the House relate to pending legislation to increase juvenile court judges in the District of Columbia. These three newspapers charged that I, as chairman of Subcommittee No. 3 of the District of Columbia Committee, was alone responsible for holding up passage of a bill to create two additional juvenile court judges. The complete falsity of this charge apparently gave them no concern. I called a meeting of the subcommittee to determine the action to be taken, and the subcommittee overwhelmingly voted to defer action on any juvenile court legislation until a comprehensive survey and investigation could be made of the entire juvenile court setup.

This meeting necessarily was an executive meeting.

The subcommittee has voted to make a comprehensive study of juvenile court laws and juvenile court procedure in the District of Columbia. No such study has ever been made, and it is needed. There are other actions needed in the juvenile court besides the addition of a judge or judges. There is no need to pick this up piecemeal. Such a study can be completed within a matter of a few months. There is no crying need this week or next week to add one judge or two judges to the juvenile court. The number of cases reported to the juvenile court in 1958, last year, were 3,386. This is 688 less cases than were reported to it in 1954, there being 4,074 in that year. The cases last year were less than the number reported to the court in 1955 and 1956.

The District of Columbia had a population of 802,000 in 1950. I have made preliminary investigation as to the number of juvenile court judges in some cities of comparable population. Boston, Mass., with 801,000 in 1950 has 1 juvenile court judge; St. Louis, Mo., with a population of 856,000 has 1 juvenile court judge; San Francisco with a population of 775,000 has 1 juvenile court judge; nearby Baltimore with a population of 949,000 has 1 juvenile court judge. The heavens are certainly not going to fall in upon us if we proceed for the next few months under the present setup.

If a judge or judges are added to the juvenile court now, that action in itself will make it more difficult to enact additional juvenile court legislation later. I believe that if a dozen more judges were added to the court now under existing law they could not control juvenile crime here. I think the committee needs to study the question whether the juvenile court age should be reduced from 18 to 16 years. I believe we should study the question as to whether it is a wise provision to keep the names of habitual juvenile gangsters, yokers, purse snatchers, rapists and thugs a secret. I believe we should study the question as to whether criminal charges should be brought against juveniles in that court for major crimes of violence. I believe there is great need for changing the law so that adequate punishment can be meted out in the juvenile court to juveniles who commit major crimes of violence. This cannot be done under existing law. I believe that a study should be made of the cases which have been handled in that court to determine whether or not the court is really serving as a deterrent to juvenile crimes or whether it is serving to encourage the commission of crime by juveniles here in the District.

It is a serious matter. The subcommittee is composed of capable, competent, sincere Members of this House. It is an outrage that they, along with me, should be pilloried, bemeaned, and vilified by these Washington newspapers for exercising our judgment on these matters which come within our jurisdiction.

I have noted from one of the sensational stories in yesterday's papers that the President of the Board of Commissioners said the subcommittee's action made him "shudder." This is the same President of the Board of Commissioners who in 1956 filed an unfavorable report on my bill, H.R. 9078, to increase the strength of the District of Columbia Metropolitan Police Force from 2,246 police to 2,500. I did not let his objections deter me in my support of that much needed legislation, and with the assistance of many of the same Congressmen now on that subcommittee, I pushed that bill through to final passage, and it became Public Law 514 of the 84th Congress. I am confident our subcommittee can do equally as good a job on this pending legislation.

It is our purpose to conduct this study and this investigation in a thorough and complete manner and to recommend to the full committee and to this House corrective legislation which in our best judgment will really give some relief from the deplorable conditions which now exist in the city of Washington. We do not know at this time whether one judge, two judges, or more or less will be needed. The proper kind of study will throw much light on this question.

I hope you will forgive me for taking this time. I feel however that these pertinent facts should be brought to the knowledge of the House.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have purposely waited here to hear the gentleman's fine and long overdue and tolerant statement. He has been unfairly abused, pilloried, and vilified with unmitigated vituperation. He has been abused by some of the Washington newspapers, notably the Washington Post, that has as much regard for anybody from our part of the world as we have for it. One of its recent editorials criticized the gentleman on this juvenile court question. I just read an editorial in this other tabloid paper, which has nothing but advertisements and an occasional headline and sometimes an editorial, but seldom any news items—and it is a Scripps-Howard paper incidentally, a notably unfair paper, but notably against us people. It had an editorial in that paper today which is entitled "Past the Age of Innocence." I would be appreciative if the gentleman would let me insert it in the RECORD at this point:

PAST THE AGE OF INNOCENCE

Before this town loses any more sleep over its rising juvenile crime, we've one suggestion to make. It's this:

Whenever any young punk does intentional bodily injury to any adult, he should be brought to trial in district court, swiftly and surely, and take the rap his elders get. These kids have been coddled enough.

If he's old enough and tough enough and cruel enough to bash a grownup citizen over the head with a board, or garrot him with a rope (it's called "mugging" these days), or stab him, or shoot him, or to knock down an old lady to take her purse, he's sufficiently crafty to figure out the consequences and sufficiently evil to merit them when he's proved guilty.

These are not cases for juvenile court with its take-forever docket and its built-in protection for tearful prodigal sons. And we shouldn't need an act of Congress to bring about this change.

Some puzzlement has been expressed as to whether rules can actually be formulated to guide the juvenile court judge as to who should or should not be bound over to regular criminal court.

It is hard to believe that any judge could be so stupid that his own appraisal could not be depended on, but as a starter toward creating rules to be followed as a general (not rigid) guide, we suggest that any juvenile who assults an adult, either alone or as part of a "wolf pack," is sufficiently mature to be tried in ordinary criminal court, whatever his years. This leaves street fights between teenagers, willful property damage and plain garden-type roughhouse, and so forth, still to be considered, perhaps, on an individual basis.

But any kid sufficiently cruel and crafty to attack, maim, rob, or even kill an adult is a kid no longer. The idealistic sentimentalism that motivates much of the so-called rehabilitation practices in juvenile courts will not move him; he will only snicker at it.

Nor will the change in procedure require any fancy, formal advance notice to that small segment of our primitive younger set that preys on helpless women and decent, honest men.

Just let the punishment fit the crime. Haul one half-pint hoodlum into district court, send him away for 15 years and the word will get around; the word will get around.

Mr. Speaker, this editorial deals with these juvenile punks, hoodlums, thieves, tramps, and otherwise thugs and cutthroats who gang up on adults and literally gut them in broad daylight and under the arc lights of the streets of Washington. They are finding their haven of protection in these juvenile courts. This editorial points out what I have long said and which it appears the gentleman has in mind at this time. They have no business in a juvenile court. The punishment should fit the crime. If anyone is such a hoodlum that he would destroy the good things that have made this a great city, he should be brought into court and given the business for the crime. I think we have too much juvenile court with these do-gooders shielding this bunch of hoodlums running the streets of Washington. I would not let one of my daughters parade on the streets of Washington unless she had a marine escort with a tommygun or an M-46 tank. I would not permit my wife to go on the streets of Washington unless every door in the car was locked. I would not do it and I do not do it. When nightfall comes, my family is safe beyond the 14th Street Bridge and the Memorial Bridge in Virginia where the law is enforced. And that same Commissioner to whom you refer, I wonder if he is the same Commissioner who hailed the Chief of Police before some hearing on some trumped-up charges by the NAACP representative in Washington. If he is not, I would not put it past him. He is not fit to be a Commissioner, if he is the same one I have in mind—and I am not inquiring who he is. He has no business to be a Commissioner. He got the job for the social benefits it has given him. I say this here and now. I shall not change these remarks. I say this here and now—that what has been happening in New York City is a shame before God. And it is peculiar and singular that none of us southerners have taken this well and vilified New York as some of the Representatives from that great city have done as to our part of the world.

We are sorry for New York; we shed tears for what is going on in New York. The good people are against it, and God knows it should come to an end; and the same thing in Washington. I think we should seriously consider abolishing or changing the juvenile courts and bring these hoodlums before the bar of justice. When you make an example of one the word will get around, as this editorial says, the word will get around. Nothing succeeds like success. If they know for a certainty that justice will be meted out, these roving gangs of rogues will head in the other direction.

The gentleman has rendered a great service to the city and to the Nation. He should not have been singled out for this criticism. God knows, serving on the committee on which the gentleman has served with such great distinction is an unthankful task. I know the thinking people in the District of Columbia appreciate the service the gentleman has rendered, and I am confident that when the gentleman will have made his report it will deal with these buzzards for what they are, nothing but vultures that should be exterminated; and I would like to be the man in charge of the exterminating department.

The Nation owes you a great debt of gratitude.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I thank the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina very much for his remarks and his contribution.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial to which the gentleman referred may be inserted in the RECORD at the point indicated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, referring to the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina, experience has shown that it is possible to coddle these so-called juvenile thugs and gangsters to the point where they actually feel they are immune from punishment when they are carried to one of these juvenile courts.

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Speaker, if there are no further special orders I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Georgia may be extended 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I gladly yield to my colleague from Georgia.

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Speaker, every Member of this House who knows my distinguished colleague from Georgia, Judge DAVIS, knows of the continuing effort that he has made over many years, indeed during the entire period of his service in this body, to clean up the very high incidence of crime in our Nation's Capital.

If those who have singled out my colleague from Georgia for the scurrilous attacks they have launched upon him would instead devote some of their time to cooperate with his efforts to rid our Nation's Capital of crime and criminals, it would indeed be a better place in which to live; it would be a safer place for law-abiding citizens who participate in the normal activities of a great city such as Washington, D.C., our Nation's Capital, is.

Those who have sought to besmirch him by sending a smear artist into the hometown of my colleague from Georgia, if they would report the truth of what they would find down there as a result of an impartial, fair inquiry, they would report that the gentleman from Georgia prior to his service in Congress was an able and distinguished lawyer, a member of the State legislature of our State. They would further report that for many years he was a fearless and courageous judge of the superior court of the State of Georgia. They would further report that since he has been a Member of the House of Representatives of the U.S. Congress he has always striven diligently in his capacity as a member of the House District Committee to improve conditions of all kinds in our Nation's Capital. He has rendered a great service to the citizens of Washington, D.C. He has rendered a great service to America and to the American people by his conscientious and dedicated efforts as a Member of this House and particularly in his service on the District of Columbia Committee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. I thank my distinguished colleague from Georgia for his remarks.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE ACT OF 1959

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GRIFFIN] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, as one of the House conferees on the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, I am pleased to provide a preliminary report on the agreement worked out in conference. This report is not designed to explain the bill in every detail but I hope it will serve as a helpful summary to indicate the nature of the settlement reached by the conference on the important points of difference between the House and the Senate bill:

SUMMARY OF CONFERENCE AGREEMENT AS TO TITLES I–VII, INCLUSIVE

Definitions: Adopted the House definitions throughout, including definitions of "Secretary," "officer, agent, shop steward, or other representative," and "district court of the United States," not contained in the Senate bill.

TITLE I—BILL OF RIGHTS FOR UNION MEMBERS

Senate bill would require a union member to exhaust hearing procedures within the union for a period of 6 months before instituting legal or administrative proceedings against the union or its officers. House provision required only 4 months. Conference adopted House provision.

Right to copies of collective bargaining agreements: Failure to make copies available to employees and members made a crime under Senate bill. House bill provided civil enforcement. Conference adopted House provision.

TITLE II—REPORTING BY UNIONS

Both bills require detailed union organizational and financial reports. Senate bill would permit exemption of unions with fewer than 200 members. Conference adopted House language requiring every union to adopt a constitution and bylaws and to file reports with no exemption for small unions.

Union officer conflict-of-interest reports: Senate bill required conflict-of-interest reports from officers receiving more than $5,000 a year in wages, salary, expenses, and allowances from the union. House provision required filing of conflict-of-interest reports from union officers regardless of amount received from the union. Conference adopted House provision.

Reporting by employers: Senate bill required reports from employers and labor relations consultants on certain payments or loans to unions or union officers and employees and on expenditures for activities designed to persuade employees to exercise or not to exercise their rights. House bill would require such reports where expenditures were for the purpose of interfering with, coercing or restraining employees in the exercise of their rights. Conference adopted a compromise provision requiring: (1) A report from an employer of expenditures where an object thereof is to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of their rights; (2) a report from an employer and a labor relations consultant of any agreement or arrangement whereby the labor relations consultant undertakes activities to persuade employees in the exercise of their rights.

Attorney-client communications: House provision gave both attorney and client an exemption from reporting privileged communications. Senate bill gave this exemption to the attorney only. Conference adopted Senate provision.

Criminal provision: House bill made violations of title II a crime, whereas Senate bill also made violations of rules and regulations issued by Secretary a crime. Conference adopted House provision.

Commissioner of Labor reports: Senate bill provided for Commissioner of Labor reports. No provision in House bill. Conference adopted House provision.

Non-Communist affidavits: Senate bill would extend affidavit requirement to employers as well as union officers. No provision in House bill. Conference rejected Senate provision but adopted a provision in title V making it a crime for Communists to hold office in a union or employer association.

TITLE III—TRUSTEESHIPS

Both bills substantially the same. Trusteeships under House provision valid for period of 18 months whereas Senate bill provided only 12 months. Conference adopted House provision.

TITLE IV—ELECTIONS

Senate bill required union to comply with reasonable requests of candidates for union office to mail campaign literature under union auspices at candidates' expense, but preserved privacy of membership lists. House provision gave bona fide candidates right to inspect and copy list of members where there is a union shop. Conference incorporated provisions of both bills, with right to inspect, but not copy, such membership lists.

Removal of union officers: House bill provided removal procedure where union constitution did not provide an adequate procedure for removal of union officers guilty of serious misconduct. Senate bill gave Secretary of Labor broader powers. Conference substantially adopted Senate provision.

CODES OF ETHICAL PRACTICES

Senate bill contains such a code. Not in the House bill. Conference adopted House provision.

TITLE V—SAFEGUARDS FOR UNIONS

Both bills impose a fiduciary responsibility upon union officers. House bill also gives union member right to sue union officer for breach of fiduciary responsibility. Not contained in Senate bill. Conference adopted House provision.

Bonding: Senate bill provides for blanket bonding of union officers and employees handling union funds with a maximum bond of $250,000. House bill required personal bonding not to exceed $500,000 and prohibited placing of bond with surety company in which any officer or employee had an interest. Conference adopted House provision.

Loans to union officers: Senate bill prohibited unions from making loans to its officers in excess of $1,500, whereas House had $2,500. Conference adopted $2,000.

Holding union office: Senate bill prohibited ex-convicts, subject to limitations, from holding union office. House bill extended the prohibition to Communists and ex-Communists. House bill also extends prohibition to labor relations consultants and employer associations. Conference adopted House provision.

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS

Investigations: Conference adopted the broader Senate language with respect to investigations and enforcement powers of Secretary of Labor.

Protection of Rights: Senate bill made it a crime for any union official to fine or discipline a member for exercising a right under the act. House bill made such conduct on the part of the union official unlawful but provided a civil remedy. The conference adopted the House provision.

Senate bill made it a crime for any person to deprive a union member of his rights through force or violence, or threat thereof, and provided penalty of two years in prison or $10,000 fine, or both. The House provision is the same except that the penalty is one year in jail or a thousand dollar fine, or both. The conference adopted the House provision.

Summary analysis of conference agreement as to title VII—Taft-Hartley amendments

	House bill (Landrum-Griffin)	Senate bill (Kennedy-Ervin)	Conference agreement
I. No man's land	State labor boards and courts could assume jurisdiction and apply State law as to cases declined by NLRB. (Administration recommendation.)	State boards only (12 States) could take jurisdiction—and apply Federal law—to cases declined by NLRB.	Adopts House provision in full. Adds provision to assure that NLRB will continue to take cases falling under its standards as of Aug. 1, 1959; and allows Board to delegate to its regional directors certain powers in representation cases.
II. Hot cargo agreements	Bans all hot cargo agreements	Bans only hot cargo agreements with motor carriers subject to pt. II of Interstate Commerce Act.	Adopts House provision with modification as to application in garment and construction industries.
III. Other secondary boycotts	1. Closes loophole which permitted secondary boycott through coercion applied directly against secondary employer (instead of his employees).	No provision	Adopts House provision.
	2. Closes loophole which permitted secondary boycott by inducing employees individually (rather than in concert).	do	Do.
	3. Closes loophole which permitted secondary boycotts involving railroads, municipalities, and governmental agencies because their employees were not "employees" under definition in the act.	do	Do.
	4. Prohibits secondary customer picketing at retail store which happens to sell product produced by manufacturer with whom union has dispute.	do	Adopts House provision with clarification that other forms of publicity are not prohibited; also clarification that picketing at primary site is not secondary boycott.
IV. Organizational picketing	1. After an election, bans picketing for 12 months.	Same, except 9 months	Adopts House provision.
	2. Bans picketing when another union certified or lawfully recognized.	Same	Same.
	3. Before election, restricts picketing to reasonable time not to exceed 30 days.	No provision	Adopts House provision.
	4. Before election, restricted picketing unless union could show 30 percent interest among employees.	do	Substitutes mandatory election procedure Informational picketing which does not affect deliveries or service is not banned.
	5. Provides for enforcement through mandatory injunction obtained through NLRB, and/or suit for damages.	Discretionary injunction by NLRB. Union could delay issuance of injunction and continue picketing by charging employer with unfair labor practices.	Mandatory injunction; no damage suit; union can charge unfair practices but cannot block injunction except in limited situations under sec. 8(a)(2).
V. Other provisions:
1. Voting by economic strikers	Employer could not petition during economic strike for election for 1 year.	Economic strikers could vote without limitation.	Can vote during period of 1 year after strike commences.
2. Prehire, building and construction industry.	Sec. 702. Administration provision	Broader provision. Sec. 702	Adopts Senate provision.
3. General Counsel, vacancy	Sec. 704	Same	Same.
4. Priority handling of certain unfair labor charges.	Sec. 706	do	Do.
5. Common situs, building and construction industry.	No provision	No provision	Dropped.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Personal Income Tax Exemption

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. STEVEN V. CARTER

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I introduced in the House of Representatives today a bill which proposes to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by increasing from $600 to $800 the personal income tax exemption of a taxpayer, including the exemption for a spouse, the exemption for a dependent, and the additional exemptions for old age and blindness.

Out of regard for our national debt, and for the obvious necessity of revenue raising measures in our tax structure, I could not have introduced a bill such as this in good faith without having introduced three previous bills in this session of Congress which I feel would correct many of the present inequities and loopholes in our tax laws and which, if carried through, would make a tax reduction such as I propose in this bill feasible. The bills that I introduced were as follows: H.R. 6919, which would repeal the special deduction for the depletion of national resources. This bill would close a loophole which I consider to be the most flagrant giveaway in our entire tax structure and would save the American taxpayers literally hundreds of millions of dollars annually. The second tax bill previously introduced by me was H.R. 8753, which would change existing tax law by eliminating provisions which presently allow an individual to exclude from gross income for tax purposes the first $50 of dividends received in a taxable year. This bill would also effect a substantial increase in revenues accruing to the U.S. Government each year. The third bill which I introduced was a measure to increase the holding period for long-term capital gains from 6 months to 1 year. It is my feeling that this would serve to eliminate much of the speculation and fast shuffle being given the present tax law by persons who deal in tremendous sums of money on short-term "sure things." If the holding period were increased to a year, economic trends could not be so readily foreseen, and there would be a much greater hesitancy on the part of speculators to invest large sums of money in business ventures to take advantage of long-term capital gains provisions, as is now being done.

I believe that this bill to increase the personal exemption from $600 to $800 will afford tax relief where it is most needed, namely in the low- and lower-middle income categories. These are the people who most acutely feel the pressure of our present income tax laws—the people who live on more or less fixed low-scale incomes who are subjected to withholding and who are unable to take advantage of any special exemptions or deductions.

I know that many Members of the House of Representatives have introduced from time to time similar legislation, and I am confident that we are of a single purpose in trying to afford tax relief to many of our constituents who we feel deserve such relief. I hold high hopes that the Committee on Ways and Means, when it undertakes a searching reexamination of our tax laws this fall, will work to close the present loopholes and inequities which are so obvious to all of us and try to bring much needed and long-sought relief to Americans living on small incomes.

Regarding Statement by Governor Ribicoff on Gas Tax Increase

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOSEPH W. BARR
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. BARR. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I was asked whether I was aware that Governor Ribicoff, chairman of the Governors' road committee, had stated that the Governors had withdrawn their objection to the gas tax increase. I answered that I was aware that Governor Ribicoff had issued this statement. However, a subsequent check this afternoon showed that the Governor of Indiniana, the Honorable Harold Handley, as late as Sunday stated that he was not in favor of a gas tax increase. I have also checked with the Members from five other States and find that the position of their Governors has not changed with respect to the opposition to this increase in the gas tax.

In the light of the above I cannot understand the authority for Governor Ribicoff's statement. All these Governors were under the impression that the original position opposing a gas tax increase had not changed.

A Bill To Establish a National Seashore Park on Cape Cod

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HASTINGS KEITH OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. KEITH. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill for the establishment of a national seashore park on Cape Cod.

Senator SALTONSTALL, Senator KENNEDY, and I have been working on this bill for several months now, and have come up with, in my opinion, an excellent piece of legislation. The Senators are introducing the identical bill in the Senate today.

There have been several measures introduced previously which would establish a national seashore on Cape Cod. It is certainly understandable that there is tremendous national interest in reserving for future generations the scenic, historic, and scientific treasures of Cape Cod.

However, as I have studied the prior legislation on this matter, I, as the Representative from this area, have become increasingly concerned with the problem of providing adequate protection for the property owners, along with sufficient space for the normal economic growth and development of the towns involved.

When we are dealing with Cape Cod, we are not dealing with the usual, relatively undeveloped national park area. As you know, several well-developed and prosperous communities are involved in this proposition. Therefore, any legislation creating a national seashore park on Cape Cod must recognize the unique character of the area and its problems.

Our bill is more than a statement of the principle that preserving shoreline recreational areas deserves our support. It embodies a knowledge of the distinct nature of the area, the people, and the character of the Cape. A national seashore park and the individuality of the Cape can exist together and serve each other with mutual benefit.

The bill specifically suspends the power of condemnation insofar as adequately zoned summer and year-round residential property is concerned. This provision safeguards the individual rights of property owners. It preserves, too, the tax revenue from these homes which the communities so badly need.

The bill contains a clause which would, in effect, allow the towns to control and develop a substantial amount of land within the proposed Park area. This will provide adequate room for expansion and growth of these towns. It will keep them self-sufficient and enable them to adequately service the many demands that the national seashore will impose upon them.

Further, the bill sets up an Advisory Commission composed of representatives of each of the six towns involved, the Governor of Massachusetts, and the Secretary of Interior. This Commission will speak for the towns and the Park residents in their many negotiations with the Department of Interior.

The bill retains, generally, the same boundaries originally recommended by the National Park Service. When we drafted the bill, we felt that we should not arbitrarily include or exclude particular properties. I recognize that the boundaries proposed in my bill will not be satisfactory to all concerned. But neither do I think that I should change the Park Service's boundaries until reasonable and competent testimony is made available to me by the towns and individuals concerned.

Both the Senators from Massachusetts and I have stressed that this legislation is by no means inflexible. We have chosen to introduce it at this time in order to allow all interested parties, both governmental and individual, to study the proposal carefully and recommend such changes as are deemed necessary.

We have in this legislation an excellent framework for establishing a national seashore park. I know that the towns affected by this proposal and the individals who are interested in it will help us to preserve for the present and for posterity the particular charm, character, and historical significance of Cape Cod and its communities.

Two Residents of 17th Congressional District of New York Confirmed as Alternate Representatives of the United States to the United Nations General Assembly

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN V. LINDSAY
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. Speaker, I note with great pleasure and, as representative of the 17th Congressional District of New York, with great pride, the nomination and confirmation of two distinguished residents of that district as alternate representatives of the United States to the United Nations General Assembly. The first of these, Mrs. Oswald B. Lord, has a most impressive record of good works, much of which concerns international organizations and affairs. Mrs. Lord has been an alternate U.S. representative to the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th sesesions of the General Assembly. She is the U.S. representative on the United Nations Commission of Human Rights. She has been particularly effective in her work on behalf of the United Nations Children's Fund—UNICEF—for whom she has made extensive tours and studies. Her nomination as alternate representative to the 14th session of the General Assembly is well-deserved, and another in her collection of high honors.

The second, Harold Riegelman, has distinguished himself as a practicing attorney since he was admitted to the bar in New York in 1916. He, too, has achieved much in public service: he has served as special attorney general of New York State, and as special counsel to the U.S. Treasury; in 1953 he was acting postmaster of New York City; and in the same year represented the Republican Party as candidate for mayor of the city of New York. He has, as well, served with great valor in the U.S. Armed Forces, and holds the rank of colonel in the U.S. Army Reserves. For all these reasons, he, too, is highly qualified and deserving of this new distinction.

I am proud to count both of these fine citizens among my constituents and personal friends.

Tribute to Commodore A. J. Spriggs, Adviser to the Director, Electronics Division, Business and Defense Services Administration

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DONALD L. JACKSON
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, during the past 10 months, Commodore A. J. Spriggs, vice president in charge of eastern operations, Packard-Bell Electronics, Inc., Los Angeles, Calif., has served as w.o.c. adviser to the Director of the Electronics Division, providing technical advice on electronics industrial mobilization activities of the Business and Defense Services Administration. A career of service in the U.S. Navy in electronics and communications, and a period of years of experience in responsible positions in the electronics industries formed an ideal background for this assignment. Commodore Spriggs is a graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy, subsequently, he completed a year of graduate work at the Postgraduate School there, and earned an M.S. degree in radio engineering at the graduate school, Yale University. Commodore Spriggs is a senior member, Institute of Radio Engineers, a member of the American Society of Naval Engineers, the American Ordnance Association, the American Radio Relay League, and other professional groups. He is married and on completion of his tour of duty will reside in Beverly Hills, Calif.

A study by the Electronics Division of available data revealed a serious lack of adequate information on the operations of that segment of the electronics industries group which produces radar, sonar, missile guidance devices, communications equipment and the like. Since the defense of our country is dependent upon adequate capacity to produce these devices, it was determined that a survey of the manufacturing establishments engaged in producing them in 1958 be initiated.

Commodore Spriggs performed with distinction the assignment of developing a program for surveying the commercial, industrial, and military electronics and equipment industry. He secured the concurrence of the Department of Defense and other interested Government agencies as well as a cross-section of industry representatives in his plans for the most comprehensive survey of its kind ever undertaken by the Government. This involved the development of a schedule for reporting, together with comprehensive instructions, to elicit information on shipments, military backlogs, and in some cases factory inventories, for 64 separate product categories of commercial, industrial, and military electronics equipment from some 2,000 plants.

When the survey is completed, a study will be prepared and disseminated to the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization and others concerned with mobilization readiness to form the basis for policy decisions. The results of the survey will also be published for the benefit of management people in the electronics industries. Because of its great commodity detail it will be an especially valuable tool for management's use in planning expansions of production capacity, for components as well as equipment.

Among his other major achievements are the consultation with officials on OCDM on programs relating to emergency radio communications during a mobilization period and consultation with other Government agencies and members of the electronic industries on needed revisions of order M–17 and and direction 4 to BDSA regulation No. 2. These orders have to do with deliveries of products needed to insure meeting defense requirements and the equitable distribution of the defense load on producers of certain electronic products.

Upon completion of his full-time duty status in the Electronics Division, Commodore Spriggs joined the ranks of the National Defense Executive Reserve. With the concurrence of officials of his company, he has agreed to serve if needed in the adminstration of electronics production programs during mobilization.

Commendation is due the officials of Packard-Bell Electronics for their fine contribution to the defense effort in making it possible for Commodore Spriggs to serve full time in the mobilization readiness work of the Electronic Division for more than 10 months.

On August 25, H. Herbert Hughes, Acting Administrator of the Business and Defense Services Administration, presented to Commodore Spriggs on behalf of Secretary of Commerce Frederick H. Mueller a certificate of merit in recognition of his outstanding Government service during the past 10 months. In addition, the Secretary gave Commodore Spriggs a personal letter of congratulations. Mr. Hughes also tendered to Commodore Spriggs a flag which Congressman DONALD L. JACKSON had caused to be flown over the Capitol as a token of recognition of his service to the Nation, the Business and Defense Services Administration, and the Department of Commerce. Mr. Hughes also presented a letter from BDSA Administrator H. B. McCoy expressing appreciation for his services.

Visit by Mr. Khrushchev

OF
HON. HALE BOGGS
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, in light of events occurring in many places throughout the world, it might very well be in order for our Government to consider withdrawing or delaying the invitation extended to Mr. Khrushchev to visit the United States or at the minimum to make our position known in no uncertain terms about these aggressive events.

Russia's ally, Communist China, is at this very moment carrying on open and bold aggression against India, against Laos, and a reign of terror is said to exist in Tibet where the entire middle class is being liquidated.

All of these aggressive actions by Moscow's partner, Red China, have been stepped up since Mr. Eisenhower invited Mr. Khrushchev to our country.

Why we should now honor the leader of world communism in light of these events is difficult for me to understand. I have recently returned from one of the satellite countries, Poland. There, the hope for freedom still burns brightly and there, I found misgivings of what might happen as a result of this visit.

Mr. Khrushchev has made his intentions perfectly clear. He has said that our grandchildren will live under communism. He is a dedicated leader of world communism. If anyone has any doubts about him, certainly those doubts should have been resolved when he crushed the revolt in Hungary with blood and iron in 1956.

There is no need to recount the long record of deceit of the Soviet Union dating back to our recognition of Russia in 1933. Promises made then were violated. Promises made in World War II were violated. The Yalta Agreement was violated. Agreements made at the meeting at the Summit in Geneva in 1955 were violated. Korea is still fresh in the minds of most Americans. Millions of people live without freedom because of the violation of these pledges. The recent meeting in Geneva ended in complete failure because of the Russian refusal to bargain and Berlin continues to be threatened.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am worried. I am worried about specious arguments being heard for so-called peaceful coexistence and the subsequent clamor which might very well occur for disarmament in our country. Twenty years ago, the bloodiest war in history started when Stalin and Hitler entered into a cynical pact to divide Poland.

The threat of Russian communism is greater today than it has ever been. I am as much concerned, Mr. Speaker, with preserving the peace as is any American. The way to do that is through maintaining the ideals of American democracy, through firm not soft diplomacy.

I am glad that many Americans are visiting Russia. There they see statism in action and certainly none of them can come home without saying, thank God I am an American. I am glad too, that Russians are able to visit the United States. I wish that literally millions of them could come here and see our country. If they did, they would realize that we have a true people's democracy. And I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that the Iron Curtain would cease to exist, so would communism.

But we cannot assure liberty or assure world peace by making concessions to a government that has never been trustworthy.

I am glad to see the spontaneous movements which are organizing in our country in connection with the forthcoming visit of Mr. Khrushchev. I am happy to associate myself with those who advocate special religious observances on the day of the arrival of Mr. Khrushchev, and I disagree completely with those who would honor him by inviting him to address our Congress.

I don't know whether or not Congress will be in session. Should it be, I would object in every conceivable way to an invitation going to Mr. Khrushchev.

None of the arguments advanced for his visit here, namely, that it will further negotiations for peace; that the visit would add to his knowledge of the United States and show him the strength of our country as well as give him real insight into how our people live and how our Government functions; none of these arguments could possibly apply in favor of an invitation to address Congress.

An invitation to address Congress is an extension of honor. It is a mark of distinction; it is principally ceremonial. To extend it to this man would, in my opinion, be an affront to our free parliamentary traditions extending to the first days of our great Republic.

The impressions throughout the world of the leaders of this great democratic body receiving in ceremonial applause the leader of world communism would indeed be hard to dispel, particularly among the uncommitted peoples of the world.

So for my own part, Mr. Speaker, I shall object in every way that I possibly can to such an invitation being extended to him.

In my opinion, the greatest tragedy which could happen to our Nation would be for us to be taken in by this man. I hope that we will maintain firm, dedicated diplomacy in our own country. I am glad that President Eisenhower is traveling through Europe, reassuring our allies of our firm support and particularly assuring them that we will not weaken in our dedication to NATO and the alliance of free nations.

Statement of Need for Revision of Code on Interstate Extradition

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EARL HOGAN
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. HOGAN. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a bill to revise the Federal statute on interstate extradition—18 United States Code, No. 3182—to do away with the requirement of Governors' warrants in the demanding and rendering States and confine the hearing in the rendering State to a review by habeas corpus.

Let us look at a common example of present extradition procedure. A police department in Indiana has a bench warrant for the arrest of John Smith, who has recently moved to California. The Indiana police send the warrant or a telegraph message to the law enforcement agencies in California, and Smith is arrested, thrown in jail, and bond is set—arrest prior to requisition is authorized by Nos. 13 and 14 of the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act. California officers then wire the Indiana officers that a hearing on the extradition will be held 30 days later—often without telling Smith he can waive extradition or often giving him the erroneous impression that signing the waiver constitutes an admission of guilt. The Indiana officer then takes a copy of the indictment or affidavit to the Indiana Governor for certification that Smith has been substantially charged with a crime in Indiana. When he reaches California, he must get a California Governor's warrant and present all these papers at the extradition hearing in the court of the jurisdiction where Smith is held—see No. 10 of the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act. Meanwhile, Smith has been sitting in jail for 30 days.

The present redtape procedure has become routine and is merely a cumbersome hangover from the internation concept of asylum for political prisoners which is unworkable on the interstate level and contrary to the modern American concept of full cooperation among sister States embodied in the full faith and credit clause of article IV. Section 2, clause 2, of that article makes extradition of criminals between the States a part of the supreme law of the land, and is not governed entirely by comity and agreements between the States. It has been so handled in recent years by the passage in the States of the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act because of the failure of Congress to provide detailed legislation on the subject.

The statute—now 18 United States Code, No. 3182—which was passed in 1793 to implement article IV, section 2, clause 2, has remained substantially unchanged since that date. It was drafted from the provision in the Articles of Confederation and was intended to provide an efficient method to secure the return of fugitives by using the swift and influential means of communication and transportation available only to the Governors in those pioneer times. Its design was, in effect, to eliminate for this purpose the boundaries of States so that each State could reach out and bring to speedy trial offenders against its laws—see Biddinger v. Police Commissioner (245 U.S. 128 (1917)). But, in our modern era of rapid communication and transportation and of close cooperation between the local law-enforcement officers of the sister States, a procedure that at an earlier time expedited the return of fugitives has now become an obstruction to the swift administration of the law.

I feel this proposal is sound because the issue in extradition is not the guilt or innocence of the accused, and no substantive right is being destroyed. The constitutional framework and relevant statutory and case law do not recognize a right of asylum for fugitives from justice of the States. The use of Governors partially led to the result—among other factors, such as the fact fugitive was a Negro from the South escaped to the North just before the Civil War—in Kentucky v. Dennison (24 How. 66 (1860)) where the Supreme Court held that, even though the Constitution and the statute used the word "shall" and the duty to extradite was ministerial and not discretionary, it would not compel a Governor by mandamus to perform this duty. I feel that the Court here was not only influenced by the political circumstances of the time but also was recognizing an immunity from suit of the Governor of the State, and if given the occasion to decide a similar case where Governors are not involved, it could reach a different decision. It has been held that both Federal and State courts can control lesser State officials by mandamus—see discussion of the distinction in Huidekoper v. Hadley (177 Fed. 1, 11 (1910)); General Oil Company v. Crain (209 U.S. 211 (1908)); see also note 85 in 66 Yale L.J. 97, 113).

For these reasons I believe that the use of Governors in interstate extradition proceedings is now outdated and unwise. But there remains the consideration of whether the use of Governors is essential to maintaining extradition procedures consistent with our constitutional scheme of a division of powers between State and Federal Government. The Constitution states:

> A person charged in any State * * * shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up.

I think that executive authority is here broad enough to include law-enforcement officers and not necessarily Governors, and it would seem that Congress in legislation to implement this provision could so define the term. The 1793 statute used both of the terms—"executive authority" and "Governor"—implying that the two were not necessarily coextensive. Several cases have said "executive authority" is a general term and merely designates the branch of government, not a single individual—see "Words and Phrases"; Comm. v. Hall (75 Mass. 262, 267); State v. Collett (138 O. St. 425, 35 N.E. 2d 568, 570 (1941)).

The present scheme actually works a hardship on those accused of crime, who frequently refuse to waive extradition because of the erroneous impression that they are making some damaging admission of guilt by signing such papers, or because they are uninformed of their right to waive. Furthermore, the usual inability to post bond or failure of arresting authorities to inform him of his right to waive extradition or have bond, often results in the lengthy confinement of innocent persons who languish in jail awaiting the documents and hearings in the courts and before the Governors. Yet, the proposed revision will not in any way limit the present scope of review of extradition in the rendering State. The fugitive's right to habeas corpus remains unimpaired and guarantees the fullest extent of review to which he is presently entitled. This includes: First, correctness of the requisition papers; second, the relator's identity; third, whether relator is a "fugitive"; fourth, whether a crime is substantially charged. In fact, several cases indicate that review by habeas corpus is broader than on routine extradition hearing and includes the potential abuses of extradition process to aid in the service of civil process or where there is a threatened deprivation of constitutional rights—see discussion at 47 Col. L.R. 470; 23 S. Cal. L.R. 441.

Therefore, the proposed bill merely removes the cumbersome routine procedure which at present obstructs the speedy and efficient extradition of fugitive criminals without depriving the individual of any substantial right to challenge the validity of the extradition.

The Agricultural Hall of Fame

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. NEWELL A. GEORGE
OF KANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, the national shrine to agriculture is now becoming a reality. My home county of Wyandotte near Kansas City, Kans., was finally selected as the site for the Agricultural Hall of Fame.

When completed, the Agricultural Hall of Fame will be a national shrine to tell the story of agriculture and of the men and women who have contributed so much to it. This shrine will be composed of:

First. A museum portraying vividly the history of agriculture;

Second. A statutory hall where the immortals of agriculture will be honored;

Third. An agricultural library;

Fourth. An educational unit designed to familiarize children with agriculture;

Fifth. A farm village complete with a sod house, log cabins, and school buildings;

Sixth. An Indian village which portrays the practices and crops of the native Americans;

Seventh. An outdoor amphitheater for pageants, field events and special farm meetings;

Eighth. A special room to honor farmers who have distinguished themselves as Members of the U.S. House of Representatives and the Senate; and Ninth. An international shrine to honor farmers throughout the world.

Resolutions were approved commending, encouraging and sanctioning the development of the Agricultural Hall of Fame.

More than 50 cities throughout the Nation bid for this project. After thorough investigation, it was awarded to Kansas City, Kans. A site consisting of 409 acres surrounded by 300 acres of parkland was offered by the city as part of its bid. It is located in my county of Wyandotte approximately 10 miles west of Kansas City on the Kansas Turnpike.

Dr. A. Webster Tenney, for a number of years beginning in 1943, a specialist in agricultural education with the U.S. Office of Education and national executive secretary of the Future Farmers of America for 14 years, has been given a 5-year contract to actively administer the Agricultural Hall of Fame.

A financial drive headed by Raymond Firestone of Akron, Ohio, to obtain $5 million to complete this national shrine to agriculture is now in progress. The campaign is being financed in its early stages with $100,000 offered by the banks in the Kansas City area as a loan to provide operating funds.

The Honorable HAROLD D. COOLEY, chairman of the Agricultural Committee, introduced a bill similar to mine, but urged that H.R. 5789 be considered since this hall of fame is to be located in my congressional district, for which I am very grateful.

The Future Farmers of America, Mr. Speaker, hold their annual conventions in Kansas City and the American Royal is located there. When the Agriculture Hall of Fame is completed, it will be a psychological boost for farmers everywhere.

The Kansas City Star recently published an editorial from the Richmond Times-Dispatch which emphasizes the psychological value of this shrine to America, and which I include as part of my remarks:

[From the Richmond Times-Dispatch]

A PSYCHOLOGICAL BOOST FOR THE FARMER

Over the postwar years the farmer has become the economy's whipping boy. Geared to intensive wartime production, but deprived of much of the world market; bedeviled by rising costs of labor and equipment, hagridden by overproduction and falling free market prices, he finds himself in a seemingly hopeless dilemma.

Taxpayers and consumers look at him with a jaundiced eye, as his electoral power wanes with his decline to 12 percent of the population.

He fears to continue precarious dependence on Government subsidies, but he's afraid to cast away the Federal crutches, lest he stumble, break a leg and lose his farm to the mortgagee.

In this doleful situation, the farmer is much in need of something to restore lost pride and the respect of fellow citizens.

What he needs is a psychological "pick-me-up." The Agricultural Hall of Fame being planned for some 400 acres in Wyandotte County, Kans., could be just what the doctor ordered.

The Hall of Fame is to be a national shrine to honor past and present farmers who, on their steady march westward, pioneered American civilization, and from crude beginnings developed the most efficient, most productive agriculture in world history.

City folk who think of cereal and milk as having come from the grocery store need to be reminded that the farm is the birthplace of our food and fiber, and that, in a very real sense, we are all dependent on the brain and brawn of the people who produce them, often in a desperate gamble against whims of the weather.

The proposed centrally located shrine and museum to commemorate leading farmers, inventors, scientists and statesmen who did much to make this boon of plenty possible, will really be more than the words "Hall of Fame" suggest.

It will be to the history of American agriculture what Colonial Williamsburg signifies to the history of Virginia.

It could be a permanent source of inspiration to millions of farmers, and a mecca for visiting foreigners who come to study the evolution of American methods.

Washington-Baltimore Adequacy of Service Case

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. SAMUEL N. FRIEDEL OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, in the past I have had occasion to comment on the delayed justice of the CAB and to criticize the Board's dilatory handling of the Washington-Baltimore Adequacy of Service Investigation, docket No. 8148.

In this connection Mr. Louis J. Hector, member of the Civil Aeronautics Board, gave a speech on August 25, 1959, before the American Bar Association convention in Miami. The subject of this speech was the Civil Aeronautics Board's slowness and inefficiency in processing administrative cases. His conclusion was:

Gentlemen, I think most of us agree that this kind of thing can't go on much longer. If a private business tried to conduct its affairs this way it would go broke. If we tried to make our foreign policy or plan our national defense this way, we would still be a third-rate power. And if we keep on trying to plan our national transportation system this way, we will wake up in a national emergency one day and find that it won't do the job. Clearly these procedures must be overhauled.

Mr. Hector's remedy for this delay is both complicated and drastic. He admits his solution requires radical surgery and it is clearly a long-range program.

But what about the intervening time before some major institutional reform can be worked out? Are the people of this country to be subjected to the delays that the people of Baltimore have been experiencing?

What we need is improvement now, not years hence. I believe that the CAB can improve its efficiency almost immediately.

For example, it is well known that the main missions of the CAB are, first, to handle route matters to provide air service to the public; second, to handle rate cases to insure the financial stability of the airlines while preventing overcharging of the public; third, to enforce the law and punish violators of the Federal Aviation Act; and fourth, to discharge their safety functions.

The 1960 budget estimate of the CAB which was submitted to the House Subcommittee on Independent Offices Appropriations is an astonishing document. The CAB estimate asks for $7,500,000 for all activities for 1960 and proposes the following allocation:

Activity and percent of total budget

Route activities	15.0
Rate activities	10.0
Enforcement	4.4
Safety activities	17.0
Total	46.4

Even with the addition of executive direction—5.5 percent—it is plain that the CAB is allocating only half of its budget to support the main activities Congress has empowered them to perform.

To make matters worse the CAB workload in route cases is forecast by them to increase from 190 in 1958 to 260 in 1960, or by 37 percent. The CAB backlog has been getting worse, for example in 1952 there was a backlog of 604 cases while by the end of 1957 it had risen to 1,031.

Why does not the CAB allocate more of its appropriation into its primary activities? The Senate appropriations report on the independent offices bill states—

> The Board's budget presentation indicates a desire to delve into many peripheral activities not closely related to the main purpose of the Board's work which would, if Congress were to permit, lead to the further dilution of Board energies from its more important duties.

I heartily concur with this statement and no better example of a peripheral activity is the carrier relations division of the Board.

The CAB has allocated more of its budget to carrier relations than it has allocated to its Compliance Section which is responsible for the enforcement of the law. This would not be so bad if the law were being adequately enforced but the chief of enforcement admitted during the committee hearings:

> We have over 50 formal cases pending before the Board, many of them yet to be heard by hearing examiners. (Senate hearings, Subcommittee on Appropriations for Independent Offices, p. 78.)

For example, on May 8, 1957 the CAB Office of Compliance filed a complaint against a large air freight forwarder for violating five Federal laws including falsification of documents and unfair competition and requested revocation of the forwarder's certificate. Two years and 4 months later, on September 9 of this year, the Board will hold a hearing and in the meantime the unlawful conduct continues and will continue until the final processing of the case a year or more from now. This situation cannot be allowed to continue.

What does this carrier relations section do which entitles it to more of the budget than is devoted to enforcing the law? Its biggest volume of business is agreements filed pursuant to section 412 of the Federal Aviation Act. It handled 1,500 matters in 1958 and is forecast to handle 1,865 in 1960. I have personally studied the lists of agreements and while occasionally there is an important or complicated problem the overwhelming majority are routine agreements between airlines concerning ticket space, baggage handling, sanitation facilities and the like.

The interlocking relations work is forecast to decrease and the other work—forwarders, 6(b) permits, and charter exemptions—simply cannot be compared in importance to law enforcement, route and rate cases and safety.

Mr. Hector should be commended for his interest in reform and improvement but he should focus on the immediate possibilities for reform such as a wiser expenditure of appropriated money.

Remarks of Hon. John F. Kennedy, Democrat, of Massachusetts, Before AFL–CIO Convention, Seaside, Oreg., August 3, 1959

OF
HON. EDITH GREEN
OF OREGON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, recently the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, addressed the Oregon State AFL–CIO Convention, at Seaside, Oreg. His remarks were very appropriately directed to the subject of the pending labor reform legislation. Senator KENNEDY, in characteristic fashion, refused to duck the issue, refused to equivocate, refused to waver before the controversial nature of his work and his bill. The Seaside speech by this great American was a superb discussion of labor legislation, and of other vital issues before the American people. It is with a good deal of pride that I include this speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

REMARKS OF SENATOR JOHN F. KENNEDY, DEMOCRAT, OF MASSACHUSETTS, AFL–CIO CONVENTION, SEASIDE, OREG., MONDAY, AUGUST 3, 1959

It is a high honor to have this opportunity to participate in the discussions of this illustrious convention. In many ways I may be considered a fugitive from the most restrictive closed shop in the country—the U.S. Senate. We have a guaranteed annual wage for 6 years—but we have no job security, no pay for overtime, no unemployment compensation, and no assurance that our contract will be renewed. The strange part about our closed shop is that there are plenty of workers who want to take our place—but none of our current union members ever want to go out on strike.

In any event, I hope that I can—in the words of the oldtime orators—claim kinship here and have it allowed. I have been closely associated with the leaders and members of the AFL–CIO for 13 years, while serving on the Labor Committees of the House and Senate. And my credentials are written in the record of those 13 years. I come to you today as a friend of labor—I have never concealed or apologized for my friendship with labor, and I do not intend to start now.

Neither do I apologize, I should make clear, to my friends in organized labor for the record of recent years. Jimmy Hoffa may not approve of me—but I do not apologize for having earned his hostility. John L. Lewis may not approve of even the original Kennedy bill, as endorsed by the AFL–CIO—but I make no apologies for that legislation.

THE LABOR BILL AND INVESTIGATIONS

I do not say that the bill as it finally passed the Senate was perfect in every respect. Certainly I do not blame the AFL–CIO for trying to change some of the amendments added on the Senate floor. Certainly I share their regret that the reasonable, fair and responsible bill reported by the Senate Labor Committee—worked out carefully with President Meany and his lawyers, and supported by the executive council—was altered, undesirably and unfortunately altered, on the floor of a supposedly friendly Senate. But that debate—and the vote on the so-called McClellan bill of rights amendment—showed you and me the political facts of life which confronted us. And when that amendment carried by a one vote margin, we were forced to go on the defensive to prevent the antilabor forces from completely taking over.

It is easy to say that none of this would have happened had there been no Kennedy labor bill at all, going back to 1958—or to accuse George Meany and the executive council of making a tactical error in supporting responsible reform legislation in 1958 and 1959. But remember, if you will, that our only other alternative last year was to accept the Knowland bill of rights. Let us not forget that we succeeded in defeating those repressive amendments on the Senate floor only because Senator MORSE and I gave our assurance that a reform bill would be forthcoming from our committee; and the AFL–CIO executive council agreed there had to be a bill.

In short, there was a vacuum there, which the Knowlands and the Goldwaters and the Mundts were determined to fill—and it was my responsibility, as chairman of the Labor Subcommittee, to see that we reported a bill aimed at hoodlums and racketeers, not at collective bargaining. So I could only be gratified by the fact that in both years my bill has been endorsed by the AFL–CIO, attacked by Mr. Hoffa on the one hand, attacked by the NAM and the chamber of commerce on the other—and cosponsored both years by the man who is probably the most distinguished labor law expert in the Senate, Oregon's senior Senator WAYNE MORSE.

So I repeat: I have no apologies. I do not say these have been easy assignments, working on the bill and serving on the McClellan committee. There have been unpleasant occasions—there have been mistakes on both sides—and there have been some disagreements among friends. There has been a tendency among some people to lump in one confusing indictment both the Kennedy brothers, all the labor bills and all the McClellan committee investigations. I could have avoided service on the McClellan committee—as others did. I could have left the Labor Committee—as others did—for a less sensitive assignment. But bear in mind the fact that, along with Senator MCNAMARA—later succeeded by Senator CHURCH—we constituted a small minority on the McClellan committee. To leave the committee—or to abandon efforts in my own committee for a bill—would have simply turned the field over to the GOLDWATERS, the MUNDTS and the coalition of Republicans, aided by a small group of Democrats, who still control the Senate on these critical issues (as they did just 10 days ago in recommitting my bill to repeal the loyalty oath).

The danger now is that this same kind of Republican-southern Democratic coalition in the House of Representatives will substitute for a responsible committee bill, an antilabor, unworkable, punitive measure—and I hope you are lending your efforts to prevent that.

I did not intend to take this much of your time in presenting my own credentials—and I hope you will excuse these personal references. I only wanted to make clear what I said at the outset: that I come to you today as a friend of labor.

Certainly there has been nothing in the findings of the McClellan committee to change my attitude about the labor movement as a whole. There are roughly half a million local union officials in this country, another half a million business agents, lawyers, and other paid officials, and another 750,000 shop stewards and others employed in serving the labor movement. Of these nearly 2 million labor leaders, the select committee has neither investigated nor received complaints about more than the tiniest fraction—considerably less than one-hundredth of 1 percent.

The union movement, like any other part of American life, has its share of wrongdoers and corruption. But when we hear about bankers who embezzle funds, or financiers who misuse trusts, or politicians who betray the public, we don't condemn all bankers or all financiers or—I hope—all politicians. Why, then, should we penalize the labor movement as a whole? There is no reason whatsoever why anyone should blacken labor's name and restrict its legitimate activities simply because a few bad apples have been found in the barrel—and I hope we can make the press and public realize that fact.

THE ROLE OF MANAGEMENT

It is easier, I know, for the press and public to play up the misdeeds of the few hoodlums who have infiltrated the labor movement. But if that is true, then it is high time they also played up the findings of the McClellan committee concerning the misdeeds of management and the business community. It is time that the public recognized the employers' responsibility for labor-management racketeering. Our committee found numerous employers, large and small, collaborating in these racketeering practices—preventing legitimate unions from entering their plants—using mobsters to force their competitors out of business—financing the racketeers and their illicit operations in order to obtain their help in breaking strikes. I think it is clear that we are not going to get rid of the Dave Becks and the Jimmy Hoffas in this country until we get rid of the Nathan Sheffermans.

The NAM and the chamber of commerce do not like the Kennedy bill as it was reported by the Senate Labor Committee—they do not like the bill which Congresswoman GREEN has helped report in the House Labor Committee—they do not even like the bill in the form in which it passed the Senate. I think it ought to be obvious by now that they do not really want any bill at all unless it completely paralyzes labor at the bargaining table. They are not interested in penalizing irresponsible racketeers—they are interested only in penalizing responsible labor leaders. They want either repressive legislation or no legislation at all. They are more interested in breaking the power of unions at the bargaining table than they are in breaking the power of hoodlums.

They don't want racketeering to be eliminated. They would rather have a political issue—an old reliable whipping boy. They want a legislative vacuum, which they can then fill at the Federal and State level with the worst repressive measures you have ever seen. Despite the results of last fall, they are still talking about so-called right-to-work legislation. And I want to make it unalterably clear once again that I am now, always have been, and always will be completely opposed to right-to-work legislation in any form at any level.

NEW ISSUES

We face these same hostile forces on a number of other issues of importance to labor, as you know. I realize that there are some cynics, to be sure, who say that there is no longer any need for such action. They say that there are no longer any major issues—that the battles of the past have all been won—and that the American public in general, and our workers in particular, can now sit back and enjoy what they have achieved during the past 30 years.

But I am certain that no one in this hall agrees with that analysis. For the problems are not all solved and the battles are not all won and the issues are not all gone.

On the contrary, our agenda today is, if anything, even longer than it was in the 1930's. We have not yet eliminated the malignant effects of poverty, injustice and illness from the land. We can be encouraged by the recent trend toward reduction in unemployment but we can feel no elation while nearly 4 million people are still searching for work—and those that are still able to receive unemployment compensation checks must get by on an average benefit check of less than $31 a week. We have not yet met the needs of nearly 7 million families, in this, the richest land on earth, still trying to get by on less than $2,000 a year. We have not yet met the needs of some 15 million families housed under what the Bureau of the Census classifies as substandard conditions—of nearly 17 million persons who are unable to purchase enough food to achieve a bare subsistence diet. We have not yet ended the waste of our natural resources—reversed the decay that is blighting so many of our major cities—or, most tragic of all, found the means of stopping man's destruction of man.

Far from being a period of resting on past achievements, the period which lies ahead confronts the American economy with an unprecedented challenge. We can no longer invoke the solutions of the past—the programs and the policies which served us so well during the last generation. For now, once again, the age of consolidation is over—and, once again, the age of change and challenge has come upon us. We are faced with a whole new set of problems—a whole new set of dimensions. We are approaching the day of a 200 million population, a $600 billion gross national product, a trillion dollar economy. We are at the edge of this Nation's greatest age of expansion, growth, and abundance—at the edge of a new era for our Nation, our world, and all mankind.

This Congress—the Democratic 86th Congress—must lay the groundwork for the next 25 years—just as the 73d Congress in 1933, during the first 90 days of Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, laid the groundwork for the generation that followed.

And there are three items in particular requiring action by the Congress to make certain that this great new abundance which lies ahead—this unparalleled prosperity—is shared by all Americans. There are three gaps, serious gaps, in income protection; and those who fall into those gaps must look to the Congress for assistance. I am talking about the unemployed, the aged, and retired, and the unorganized workers who are unable to receive even a decent minimum wage.

INCREASING THE MINIMUM WAGE

There are those who say we cannot afford to increase minimum wages to $1.25 an hour and that we cannot afford to extend the law any further, and, with the cosponsorship of Senator MORSE, I have introduced the bill to carry out these obligations, and hope to report it to the floor next week. But I am convinced that we cannot afford to do less. Department of Labor statistics show that the average single worker, much less a family man, cannot survive on a wage of $1 an hour. Department of Labor statistics show that, since the dollar level was set 4 years ago, prices have risen substantially, productivity has risen substantially, and wage rates have risen substantially. But the head of that Department, the Republican Secretary of Labor, nevertheless came before our subcommittee this summer and opposed paying all American workers a decent wage. Substandard wages, inevitably, mean poor health, low efficiency, and great personal tragedies. This is what America cannot afford. Our greatest asset in the race for industrial supremacy is a strong, healthy, vital labor force. Our greatest handicap would be an ill-fed, ill-housed, ill-clothed labor force.

Unions such as yours cannot assume the full burden. The unprotected, unorganized workers at the bottom of the economic scale can only look to the Congress for protection—and Congress must provide that protection this year in the Kennedy-Morse bill.

STRENGTHENING UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

If we are to meet the challenge of the future we must also modernize our unemployment insurance system. When enacted, it provided benefits to workers large enough and long enough to enable them to pay their rent, their grocery bills and their doctor bills until work could be found. It was intended to put back into the community at least 50 percent of the loss in wage payments.

But a schedule of unemployment compensation payments that was adequate 21 years ago is grossly inadequate today. Less than 20 percent of lost wages is replaced today. Whatever data you may hear about prosperity, there has been a disturbing increase in the number of persons without a job for 4 months or longer. In many States that means the complete exhaustion of meager benefits and reliance upon either the bounty of relatives or public assistance. That is not the choice we should offer in a country with the highest industrial capacity in the world. Along with Senator MCCARTHY, of Minnesota, I have introduced a bill to give all unemployed workers at least one-half their pay for at least 39 weeks. I believe in our programs of foreign aid and mutual security—but we should also take care of our own. And the place to begin is by enacting decent nationwide standards for unemployment compensation.

IMPROVING CARE OF THE AGED

Third and finally is the challenge offered by the increasing number of older persons in our population. The death rate in this country has been cut in half during the 20th century. In 1900, a baby girl born into a nation where influenza, pneumonia, tuberculosis, and typhoid still took a high toll—where public sanitation was rare, nutrition was inadequate, and medical science was barely under way—could expect to live some 48 years. Today she could expect to live to the age of 73—and soon 10 percent of our population will be over the age of 65.

But their social security checks have been eaten away by inflation—their chronic illnesses are not covered by group insurance. Their housing needs are unmet. Those still able to work are the first to be fired and the last to be rehired. They are, in the words of the song, "too old to work and too young to die." The treatment of its older citizens is said by anthropologists to be one of the most basic tests of how civilized a society or nation has become. Surely the rich, powerful, democratic United States of America is not going to fail that test. These three items are, of course, only the beginning of our agenda. But the important thing now is to get started. This is no time for mere oratory instead of action. This is no time for halfway measures—for inaction or inertia. It is a time to move ahead—to meet the challenge of the future—to remember the words of Justice Holmes, that "whether we sail with the wind or against the wind, we must above all set sail—and not drift or lie at anchor."

Historic Time for Polish Trip

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HALE BOGGS
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the New Orleans Times-Picayune of September 3, 1959:

HISTORIC TIME FOR POLISH TRIP—WARSAW VISIT AT IMPORTANT MOMENT—BOGGS

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—Representative HALE BOGGS, a delegate from the U.S. Congress to the Interparliamentary Union Conference, has just returned from Warsaw where the 47th meeting of the group is now underway. In the following article he gives his impressions of Warsaw and the meeting.)

(By HALE BOGGS)

WASHINGTON.—I was in Poland on the day before the 20th anniversary of Hitler's attack.

No one there has forgotten the 800,000 people who died there and the other 5 million who died in Poland in World War II. Every block marks the event with flowers, with a clean-up program, with special services in the churches which flourish everywhere.

But a city 85 percent destroyed has come back to life. The architecture is beautiful. The old city has been restored. Over a million people live there now, but as George Healy said in his series on his recent trip through the Iron Curtain countries it is a sad country.

I was lucky; I had an English-speaking driver. He had spent 3 years in England in the Polish Army during World War II. He told me that he ran a very small motorcycle repair shop. Only the smallest family-run shops are permitted to be operated privately. All the rest are state owned. He said that the real hope of the people was that they would get rid of the Communists. Without that hope the nation could not survive and sadness would be displaced by utter despair.

STATE ENTERPRISE

Practically all the members of the family, husband, wife, children, work in some state enterprise. Even so they earn just about enough to keep themselves in clothing and food, both of poor quality. None of the luxuries which we know and enjoy are permitted to these people. Practically every automobile is owned by the state. Things that we take for granted—refrigerators, dishwashers, automatic laundry machines, and so on—are unknown in practically every household.

My visit to Poland coincided with several historic events. It was a few weeks after NIXON'S visit; Ike was in Europe preparatory to the Khrushchev visit to our country, about which the average Pole is skeptical, as are many other people that I met in attendance at the conference.

The glow of NIXON'S visit still remained. The press reports which I read in our country about his reception in Warsaw were certainly not exaggerated. People came from everywhere to see the Vice President of our country and obviously the Voice of America and Radio Free Europe must have been quite effective because I was informed the local Communist press gave practically no attention to the time of his arrival.

IN SHARP CONTRAST

I was told that the people somehow or other had to buy their own flowers which were thrown at the Vice President's party in profusion. His visit was apparently in sharp contrast to that of Khrushchev whose time of arrival and whose route of entry into the city were not only well advertised in the press, but workers were given time off and provided with flowers and other trappings. Despite this, I am told, the welcome was anything but enthusiastic.

Now a word about the Interparliamentary Union Conference, which was the purpose of my visit. This was the 47th meeting, and I talked about investment in the underdeveloped countries. But the main thing was that we stole the march at the conference and gained a tremendous psychological advantage. One of our delegates, Congressman THADDEUS MACHROWICZ, from Detroit, is a native of Poland. He served as an officer in the Polish Army in World War I and has since gained distinction as a judge and as an outstanding Member of our Congress. He represented our group in the opening speech. He spoke in Polish. He told of his own life and he hearkened back to the events of 20 years ago when the Hitler-Stalin pact led to World War II and the dismemberment of a great country. He received a tremendous ovation from the assembled delegates and one of the British—they are not neophytes in diplomacy—came to me and said, "That was one of the smartest things that you have ever done." A real compliment from an Englishman.

LITTLE ATTENTION

Again the Polish press gave little attention to the Machrowicz speech. My recollection of what one paper said was, "He had given a subjective account of the events of 1939." But the Voice of America and Radio Free Europe gave it wide circulation and in a matter of hours he had people calling on him from many places in Poland.

Many things stand out in my mind. Again referring to the Healy series, which mentioned that in Russia only the old men and women attended the few remaining churches. In Warsaw a great many churches have been rebuilt. They are quite beautiful and the people flock to mass, not only on Sundays, but on weekdays as well.

My wife and I attended mass last Sunday at one of the old historic churches, St. Alexandra, which incidentally is one of the symbolic edifices which was razed to the ground by Hitler's forces, but restored magnificently.

The church was packed and attended by young and old, middle-aged, men and women, children and babies. They were extremely devout. As a matter of fact all of the streets of Warsaw on that Sunday were packed with people going to and from church. This strength of religion is a tremendous deterrent to the communization of the nation.

SENSE OF HUMOR

Despite their lack of freedom, the Poles maintain a fine sense of humor and incidentally they are not afraid to speak out against the Communists or the Russians. Stalin built what is called the Palace of Culture, a monstrous looking skyscraper building completely out of keeping with the architecture of the city. The Poles say that the best place to see Warsaw is from the Palace of Culture because then one can't see the Palace of Culture.

We went to a concert of native music and dancing which was most delightful. The leading architect of the city, a Member of their Parliament, said, "On the stage we Poles can be ourselves."

There are other quotes worth repeating. A taxi driver said, "There is no parking problem in Warsaw." Believe me, there isn't. There are few automobiles and these are practically all owned by the state. Most of the cars are Polish or Russian with some imports from Western Europe.

Senator MONRONEY said it was a good place to take his wife. "Nothing to shop for. Nothing to buy."

You see practically no window displays; there is little advertising; gasoline sells for $1 per gallon. The soldiers are unkempt. They seem to have no sense of elan, and very little interest in being soldiers. I would hate to depend on them in a fight if I were the Russians.

YEARN FOR FREEDOM

Again I agree with the conclusions of George Healy. The Poles yearn for freedom. If there is a weak link in the Soviet chain certainly this must be it. The West must continue to hold out hope for these people who have valiantly fought for freedom for 1,000 years and who are noting not only the 20th anniversary of the attack on Warsaw by Hitler, but the 1,000th anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into this country.

On the way home we had a brief stop in Frankfurt. What a contrast. Frankfurt, too, was destroyed, and it too has been beautifully rebuilt, but here there is a hustle and bustle of a city moving ahead in freedom; automobiles everywhere, shops full of impressive looking goods and consumer items of every type. People well dressed, and seemingly quite happy. What a contrast between private enterprise and communism.

The American delegation in Warsaw was not the only one using free speech, and telling the story of world Communist conquest. The Indian delegates talked about the attacks on their borders and Tibet. The representatives of Vietnam talked about what was happening in their country and Laos. What an experience this must have been for the Russians and other satellite countries to see free speech in operation. Meetings of this kind can indeed penetrate the Iron Curtain.

The Jimmy McHugh Night at the Hollywood Bowl

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DONALD L. JACKSON
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, on September 5, the American entertainment industry will pay a most exciting tribute to one of its most distinguished, prolific and famous contributors on the occasion of his 35th anniversary as an internationally known songwriter. Mr. Jimmy McHugh will be honored by a presentation entitled "The Jimmy McHugh Night at the Hollywood Bowl," which will climax the season of that music mecca. I think that this anniversary is an occasion of international significance which certainly is deserving of the attention of my colleagues and of the entire American people.

Jimmy McHugh is best known, perhaps, as the composer of "Sunny Side of the Street," "I Can't Give You Anything But Love," and several hundred other "standards," as the classical examples of popular music are known.

Were these great songs his sole contribution to American cultural and social life, Mr. McHugh certainly would qualify as one of our most worthy and productive citizens. However, amazingly enough, this is only one phase of the magnificent work Mr. McHugh has performed and is performing for our society. He has also given generously and unstintingly of his time and personal resources to worthy civic, charity, and athletic causes.

Since it is his music, however, for which Mr. McHugh is best known, let me review briefly a few of his contributions which led a noted observer of the musical world to speak of Mr. McHugh as the Stephen Foster of his time. The titles of Mr. McHugh's songs alone immediately imply his position as the foremost creator of present day popular music. In addition to those McHugh songs already mentioned, "Don't Blame It on Me," "A Most Unusual Day," "I Feel a Song Coming On," "When My Sugar Walks Down the Street," "I'm in the Mood for Love," and many others have become a part of our American heritage.

Should any of my colleagues or, for that matter, anyone in the United States think back, I know he will find several Jimmy McHugh songs which are associated vividly with an important phase of his life. One of the greatest functions of the popular songwriter is to capture and express poetically and musically the emotions which we all encounter, and Mr. McHugh has become a master of this craft. His songs seem to underline our most private emotions and treasured experiences as though he had peered into us and written them personally for each of us.

As I am a music lover but not a qualified music critic, I would like to quote Dr. John Frederick Kilpatrick, music critic of the Dallas Times Herald and professor of music at Southern Methodist University:

> It is like talking to the man who invented doorknobs, the chef who created ham and eggs; it's like meeting up with the fellow who first thought of shoe laces, to be introduced to Jimmy McHugh. Like Stephen Collins Foster, Jimmy for so long has been incorporated in the weave of America that it is hard to realize that his songs were made by a living man and are not some sort of standard equipment that just comes with life.

It was Dr. Kilpatrick who referred to Stephen Foster as "the Jimmy McHugh of his time." Most Americans, certainly most members of the musical world, will give Dr. Kilpatrick's sentiments hearty seconds. Like Stephen Foster, Jimmy McHugh and his work have been a part of the fabric of our experience for the best part of our lives and, in the case of many Americans, for all of our lives. It was as early as 35 years ago that he composed such song hits as "When My Sugar Walks Down the Street" and "I Can't Believe That You're in Love With Me."

The Jimmy McHugh story is the American story. Like most of our great citizens, Mr. McHugh worked his way up from inauspicious beginnings. His first job was office boy at the Boston Opera House. His friendship with such operatic luminaries as Caruso, Puccini and Geraldine Farrar accounts for the fact that Jimmy McHugh songs never are written down to his public but rather live up to the qualities Puccini and Caruso might have expected of their young friend.

His career then followed the trail from piano player in a publishing company to composer of small shows in Harlem to his ultimate glory as one of the famous names of music. An idea of the scope of his work comes from the fact that he has written music for 45 motion pictures and 16 Broadway musicals, at one time having 4 hits on Broadway at the same time.

Another aspect of his importance in the entertainment world is his constant vigilance in discovering and promoting promising talent. Duke Ellington, Phil Harris, and the late Carmen Miranda are only a few of the famous personalities Jimmy McHugh helped uncover and develop.

Another phase of Jimmy McHugh's life which merits the attention of Congress and of the people of the United States is that gentleman's great patriotism and his work on behalf of his country. I know we all remember one of his great inspirational musical contributions to American morale during the Second World War—"Comin' In on a Wing and a Prayer."

In 1944 Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau commissioned Mr. McHugh to write the seventh war bond drive song, resulting in "Buy, Buy, Buy a Bond." It was eminently successful. Again in 1945, upon Government request, Mr. McHugh and his partner, Harold Adamson, supplied the theme song of the eighth war bond drive, "We Have Got To Buy Another Bond." The millions of dollars for which these songs accounted are inestimable.

In addition, the patriotic Mr. McHugh singlehandedly produced a bond rally "aquacade" at the Beverly Hills Hotel in 1945, and in one night's performance he sold $28 million worth of bonds. This was, and I believe still is, the largest single sale ever recorded.

Untold thousands of former soldiers can thank Mr. McHugh for their lives, saved by material purchased with the money he raised.

More tangible recognition came in February of 1947, when former President Harry S. Truman presented him with a Presidential citation in Washington for his contribution of war songs and his contribution to war bond sales. The composer's patriotism has remained untiring and unceasing. In February of 1953, Mr. McHugh was commissioned by President Eisenhower, Comdr. Harold B. Miller and Admiral Halsey to write the official "Crusade for Freedom" song for Radio Free Europe and Radio Free Asia. The resulting song, entitled "Crusade for Freedom," has been acknowledged by the members of those organizations as an important instrument in reaching the minds and hearts of the peoples of captive and neutral nations. It is still the official song of these organizations.

In that same year, Mr. McHugh and Mr. Adamson also wrote the official community chest song, "Give Every Child a Chance."

The creative and patriotic works of Jimmy McHugh, extraordinary as they are, do not overshadow his personal efforts on behalf of numerous charities.

One aspect of this extension of Mr. McHugh's activities is his effort to help promote recreational activity halls for teen-age boys and girls throughout the Nation. Mr. McHugh was honored for this several years ago by a testimonial dinner given by Georgetown University.

In 1951, Mr. McHugh organized the Jimmy McHugh Polio Foundation, the express purpose of which was to raise funds to buy and donate the miracle respirator created by Dr. Albert C. Bower. Since that time his group has presented approximately three dozen such expensive respirators.

In 1955 a single charity function sponsored by the Jimmy McHugh Polio Foundation raised $90,000 to purchase 15 such respirators.

The Polio Foundation was changed to Jimmy McHugh Charities, Inc., a few years ago, which move has permitted Mr. McHugh to devote his time and talents to raising funds for an ever wider field of charitable and worthy causes.

That Mr. McHugh would have any reserve time or energy for other activities is amazing, but it is true. His participation in the civic life of his present hometown, Beverly Hills, Calif., is indicated by the fact that he is known as the honorary mayor of that community. For nearly 15 years he has been on the board of directors of the chamber of commerce of that municipality, serving as president of that organization for a time.

The people of Los Angeles are further indebted to him for his many contributions to the Los Angeles County Museum of masterpieces from his famous collection of paintings.

His astounding energy and compulsion toward public service have brought him into the athletic life of the American people as well. He is one of the country's leading sponsors of amateur swimming. In recognition of his tremendous help in this field, the Amateur Athletic Union of America—AAU—has made him a lifetime member and, as well, he was an honorary official of the 1948 Olympiad in London.

One of the outstanding athletic events of the past decade was the 1949 national men's outdoor swimming meet. It was Mr. McHugh's effort which brought the Japanese swimming team to America to compete in that event, and it was at this meet that Japan's Furuhashi shattered 29 world records in one event.

Mr. McHugh's interests and the impact of his personality extend to many other fields but I would like to conclude with one which has great importance to the United States at this time of international unrest, a time of all too frequent cultural misunderstanding between nations, even on the part of leaders. In view of this condition, the fact that Mr. McHugh for over three decades has been one of our most vigorous ambassadors of international good will, has tremendous importance. The extent to which Mr. McHugh's songs have reached into the lives of people in other countries and stimulated consciousness of American culture is indicated by one anecdote from the glamorous and productive life of this great musician. The event occurred several years ago when Mr. McHugh was called upon to participate in a command performance before Queen Elizabeth II of England and the royal family. Following the performance, Mr. McHugh was presented to the Queen. With a gracious smile, the Queen of England acknowledged Mr. McHugh's bow and said:

Mr. McHugh, you seem to have written all of my favorite songs and, not only that, I sing them also.

The Gasoline Tax Issue

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT W. LEVERING
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, September 3, 1959

Mr. LEVERING. Mr. Speaker, as the record shows, I voted against the 1 cent per gallon increase in gasoline. I voted in this manner after the most careful study of all the facts and factors surrounding the highway program, its financing, and the manner in which we must finance additional construction in the future. I wholeheartedly agree that Congress must act to continue the highway program and, I favor the proposed legislation by Senator ALBERT GORE, of Tennessee, to take 1 percent from all other appropriations for Federal agencies and to allocate to the highway construction program the money thus saved.

Senator GORE, who was one of the leaders in the fight for the Federal highway program in 1955, has made two excellent speeches in recent days relating to the reasons why he opposes an additional hike in the gasoline tax for motorists. I wish to associate myself with his views, for I believe that he has used logical reasoning in his statement of the facts about the highway construction program and its financing.

Under leave to revise and extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I am inserting the two speeches Senator GORE made—one on August 24, and one on August 31. The speeches are as follows:

THE HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

(Speech of Hon. ALBERT GORE, of Tennessee, in the Senate of the United States, Monday, August 24, 1959)

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in February 1955, the President of the United States submitted to the Congress a report which dramatically called to the attention of the country the inadequacy and dangerous condition of our highways. This report, prepared by a Commission headed by Gen. Lucius D. Clay, pointed out that one-seventh of all Americans owned their livelihood either directly or indirectly to the highway and highway transportation industries. Particular emphasis was given to the tremendous loss, both economic and in terms of human life and suffering, which was being experienced daily because our highway construction program had not kept pace with expanding needs.

Highway building had been necessarily slowed by the priority demands of a wartime economy. The President recommended that in order to alleviate a critical problem the Federal Government should assume major responsibility for the construction of a new system of interstate and national defense highways, interconnecting our major metropolitan areas. The President gave particular emphasis to the importance of the new system of highways to national defense.

The proposal received intense consideration by the committees of the Congress for almost 2 complete sessions. There evolved the Federal Highway Act of 1956, of which it was my privilege to be coauthor. This act provided that the Federal Government should pay 90 percent of the cost of constructing this new System of Defense and Interstate Highways with a construction schedule calling for completion of the system by 1972 to design standards adequate to meet estimated traffic needs of 1975. It provided, also, for corresponding improvement of primary, secondary, and urban highways to a corresponding state of adequacy.

Construction progress is now well underway. The State highway departments and the highway construction industry have responded to the challenge. We are now, however, in a critical situation in which, unless appropriate action is taken by the Congress, construction will stop altogether on the vital Interstate and Defense System or, at best, be so slowed down and stretched out as to make impossible completion of the system on schedule as specified by the act of 1956.

A halt in construction of the Interstate System will be disastrous. State highway departments have geared their operations to the authorized level. Engineering staffs recruited with great difficulty and expense, would have to be disbanded only to be recruited again at great loss in money and time, if and when the program is resumed. The highway construction industry, having increased its capacity at the request of Congress, will be severely injured. The entire economy will receive a jolt from which it will not be easy to recover. Substantial increases in unemployment will be inevitable.

Meanwhile, if the program is halted, the gap between highways in being and those required will rapidly increase. Our highways will continue to get worse instead of better, and more people, instead of fewer, will be killed on our inadequate highways. Carnage on the highways and economic loss will go unchecked. Unless we take action to provide better highways, the situation will become much worse. Every year that passes sees the need for better highways become more acute. We cannot afford further delay. Even at the rate of progress authorized in the 1956 act we will barely hold our own between the need for highway improvement and the deterioration of the present system of highways.

The act of 1956 created the highway trust fund, earmarking the revenues from certain highway user taxes for transfer to that fund to be used to defray the Federal Government's portion of the cost. From the beginning, it was recognized that in the early years of the program revenues in the fund would be insufficient to meet annual expenditures. To meet this anticipated problem it was provided that when deficits occurred the trust fund would borrow from the general fund, with the borrowed sums to be repaid in later years when revenues were expected to exceed expenditures for highway improvements. Prior to final congressional action, however, restrictive language was written into the bill which was designed to limit annual apportionments to the States to such amounts as would be available in the trust fund with which to pay the bills when they came due. As a result of this restrictive language, the crisis which we now face was, from the effective date of the act, inevitable. This restrictive language has come to be known as the Byrd amendment; though in fact, I am informed it was advanced by the former Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. George Humphrey.

All responsible people agree that the Congress must act to prevent a collapse of the highway program. If we are to act properly, however, we must do so on the basis of a clear understanding of the problem.

To begin with, the highway trust fund will be out of money by October 1, 1959—unless this Congress acts the highway trust fund will be bankrupt by the time Representatives and Senators reach their home States.

The States will present during this fiscal year vouchers for reimbursement totaling an estimated $493 million for which funds will not be available for payment. Normally this deficit would be made up by borrowing from the general fund as provided in the Highway Revenue Act. However, the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act recently passed by the Congress limits appropriations to such amounts as "may be available in and derived from the highway trust fund." This amount is expected to be $493 million less than required. Unless we take action, the Federal Government will be forced to default in its obligations to the States. This default will occur in October, next October, October 1959, prior to the reconvening of Congress in January.

Moreover, no apportionments of interstate funds whatever can be made for fiscal year 1961. These apportionments should have been made last month. Unless the States receive this obligational authority they will be compelled to terminate even the planning of additional projects. If the Federal Government defaults on its obligations to the States, the States then will be forced to default in payment of their obligations pursuant to contracts performed and completed, unless they can raise the funds from their own resources.

Already many States have announced that no additional contracts can be awarded. Invitations to bid on contracts which have already been advertised are being withdrawn. In short, we face a complete stoppage of the construction of the new System of National Defense and Interstate Highways which the President declared necessary for national security and which the Congress proclaimed as necessary for national security and to promote a growing economy and safety on the highways.

The problem has two parts which, though related, are separate:

First, we must provide funds to the States in 1960 to meet the obligations that the States have incurred by contract pursuant to Federal commitments in the Highway

Acts of 1956 and 1958. Without congressional action, then, the States will be forced into default, or budgetary stringencies, on obligations falling due this fiscal year, and this situation, let me repeat, will occur very soon, unless the Congress acts. Solution of this phase of the problem will have a bearing upon the 1960 budget.

Secondly, we must take action to permit continued apportionments to the States to avert complete stoppage of the interstate program. Authorization of apportionments for fiscal 1961 must be made this year to allow time for proper planning, advertising of contracts, and award of contracts. Such authorization, however, can have no impact whatever on the 1960 budget because under the law the funds could not actually be disbursed until fiscal 1961. Actually, for the most part, fiscal 1961 apportionments would not be disbursed until 1962.

So, Mr. President, solution of this problem which, as I have said, has two parts, will have an effect on the 1960 budget with respect to obligations falling due within 1960, which arise from apportionments already made; but action to permit apportionments for 1961 will not have an effect upon the 1960 budget. Actually for the most part fiscal 1961 apportionments would not be disbursed until fiscal 1962.

Before proceeding to discuss possible solutions, I should like to dispel certain myths about the program and the cause of our present dilemma.

In the first place, the present crisis has not been caused by an increase of construction costs over estimates. On the contrary, contracts are being awarded generally well within or below estimates.

Only today the Bureau of Roads made an announcement that highway construction costs during the April-June quarter dropped by more than 2½ percent.

In the second place, this crisis was not caused by the Highway Act of 1958. As a matter of fact, the Congress was confronted with this same problem last year. The act of 1958 met this problem and averted a slowdown of the program at that time. While that act may properly be said to have postponed the crisis, it cannot be said to have caused it. The delay in resolving the problem and the acceleration provided in the 1958 act have combined to make the problem more acute today.

I think Congress must enact legislation to meet Federal obligations to the States and to permit continued interstate and defense highway apportionments on schedule.

There is no magic way to build highways without money. The only real source of funds for the Federal Government is by way of taxation. This is not to say, however, that there is only one type of tax or only one class of citizens and taxpayers upon whom to levy it.

The administration insists that the only solution to the problem is to impose a further increase in the gasoline tax. This proposal is labeled a pay-as-you-go plan. The implication is plain that users of our highways have not been paying their fair share of taxes and that they should be compelled to do so or else accept responsibility for stoppage of the highway program. Any such implication is highly inaccurate and downright misleading.

In the first place, the theory that highway users should pay the entire cost of the program by direct taxes levied upon them cannot be supported. Good highways benefit everyone and every segment of our economy. We do not levy a special tax on teachers and the parents of students to pay for schools because we realize that education not only benefits everyone but is a responsibility of the general public. The same rule applies, or should apply, I insist, to highways.

But even if we accept the thesis that highway users should pay the entire cost of highways, the administration position, as well as its implications, is unjustified. Highway users are already paying direct excise taxes far in excess of the amount needed for the highway programs. In addition, of course, the users of our highways pay income taxes and all other taxes, as do all of the people.

What are the facts, Mr. President, about highway user taxes?

In fiscal 1958 highway users paid in direct Federal excise taxes $3.493 billion. Of this amount, only $2.026 billion was transferred to the highway trust fund. In other words, of each highway user dollar collected, 58 cents went for highways while 42 cents went for other purposes, to be diverted from use on highways. On the basis of information now available, approximately the same ratio will be applicable, under the budget, to 1959 collections. I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD a table showing actual collections of highway user taxes in fiscal 1958 and indicating the amount of each transferred to the trust fund or kept in the general fund.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Highway user excise taxes, disposition—Actual collections, 1958

[Millions of dollars]

	Gasoline	Diesel	Lubricating oil	Auto	Truck and bus	Parts and accessories	Tires	Tread rubber, tubes, truck use	Total
Trust fund	$1,558	$50			$111		$244	$63	$2,026
General fund			$35	$1,170	95	$167			1,467

Mr. GORE. Throughout the years highway users have paid larger sums in taxes than were spent for highways. In 1934 the Congress passed the so-called Hayden-Cartwright Act. This act, which is still in effect, provides that any State which diverts to nonhighway uses a larger percentage of highway-user taxes than was diverted at the time the act was passed shall forfeit its right to Federal-aid highway funds. Thus, we encourage the States, by threat of withholding Federal funds, to use all their revenue from highway taxes for highway purposes. Yet the Federal Government does not follow that example. Indeed, it is now proposed that we levy still additional taxes upon the users of our highways, even though they are now paying more than $1.5 billion a year in excess of the amount actually used for highways. I am advised that for the current fiscal year the sum diverted to uses other than construction of highways will be approximately $1,600 million.

Some appear to have forgotten that highway-user taxes were substantially increased by the act of 1956. For the information of the Senate, I list here the taxes that were increased and the amount of the increase in each case:

Gasoline, from 2 to 3 cents per gallon.

Diesel fuel, from 2 to 3 cents per gallon.

Automobile tires, from 5 to 8 cents per pound.

Tread rubber, 3 cents per pound—a new tax.

Trucks, buses, and trailers, from 8 to 10 percent for 1957 and from 5 to 10 percent from 1958 to 1972.

Truck-use tax, $1.50 per thousand pounds—a new tax.

Also in 1956, although not in the same act, Congress extended an additional 3-percent excise tax on automobiles which otherwise would have expired. This tax has been extended annually since then. This 3-percent extension, which is also an increase in highway-user taxes, has brought in an additional $1,006 billion in the last 3 fiscal years.

All told, Mr. President, highway-user-tax increases since 1956 have brought into the Treasury $3.177 billion. Total expenditures from the highway trust fund for the interstate program through fiscal 1959 amount to $2.358 billion. Thus, the revenues from tax increases alone amount to more than total interstate highway expenditures since the act of 1956 was enacted.

It seems to me that we should keep these figures in mind when considering the possibility of imposing yet an additional increase in the gasoline tax. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a table showing revenues received from highway-user-tax increases in the last 3 fiscal years.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Revenues collected from increases in highway user taxes imposed by Highway Act of 1956

[In millions of dollars]

	1957	1958	1959
Gasoline, 1 cent	$432	$519	$535
Diesel, 1 cent	10	17	17
Tires, 3 cents	81	92	93
Tread rubber, 3 cents	11	13	14
Trucks, buses, and trailers, 2 percent (1957) and 5 percent (1958–72)	34	103	107
Truck use	26	33	34
Total	594	777	800
Auto excise, 3 percent	343	351	312
Total (including auto excise)	937	1,128	1,112
Total additional revenues for fiscal years 1957–59 (not including auto excise)			2,171
Auto excise			1,006
Grand total			3,177

Mr. GORE. Highway users accepted these new levies without undue protest. They did, however, seek some assurance that the question of equitable distribution of the burden of the cost of highways be subjected to study. Accordingly, section 209(b)(2) of the 1956 act declares it to be the policy of the Congress that "if it hereafter appears that the distribution of the tax burden among the various classes of persons using the Federal-aid highways, or otherwise deriving benefits from such highways, is not equitable," the Congress shall enact legislation in order to bring about such equitable distribution.

The distinguished Presiding Officer of the Senate at the moment was a member of the Public Works Committee when that provision of the law was enacted, thus giving to highway users assurance that if, after careful study, it was determined that they were paying more than an equitable and fair share of the burden of highway costs, the Congress would rectify the mistake.

Section 210 of the same act directed the Secretary of Commerce to make a study and to provide the Congress with information to enable it to determine what taxes should be levied and in what amounts "in order to assure, insofar as practicable, an equitable distribution of the tax burden among the various classes of persons using the Federal-aid highways or otherwise deriving benefits from such highways."

The Secretary of Commerce was directed to submit his final report no later than March 1, 1959. Subsequently, at the administration's request, the date of submission of the report was extended to March 1, 1961.

The new taxes levied by the act of 1956 have brought into the Treasury substantial revenues. During fiscal years 1957, 1958, and 1959, receipts from these increases alone have, as I have said, totaled $3,177 billion, more, I repeat, than has been used for interstate highway improvements since 1956.

Mr. President, we assured the highway users that the question of equitable distribution of the burden of the cost of highway construction would be restudied. The administration requested that submission of the study called for by the law be delayed from 1959 until 1961. If I had known at the time the request was submitted that there was a plan to ask that taxes be further increased on every gallon of gasoline, I would have opposed the extension. I think we should have such a study before we levy more Federal sales taxes on every gallon of gasoline every person puts in his car or his truck.

Yet without even establishing that the additional levies imposed in 1956 are equitable and fair, it is now proposed to increase the gasoline tax once again, while we wait another 2 years for the study to be completed.

Mr. President, a further increase in the gas tax at this time, at the very least, is not in accord with assurances given by the Congress to the highway users in 1956. The facts speak for themselves. A gasoline tax increase is grossly inequitable and completely unfair.

I should like to read at this time two paragraphs from an article appearing in the New York Times of yesterday:

"Today the tax on gasoline is at a higher rate than that on any other essential product; even that on many luxury items. If the Federal tax of an additional cent a gallon goes into effect on September 1, as provided in a bill approved recently by the House Ways and Means Committee, the gasoline levy will exceed 10 cents a gallon and will just about equal the refinery price of the product."

On what other commodity essential to our economic life do we have a 50-percent tax? At retail levels, every time a man drives up to a filling station in my State and has his tank filled or partially filled, one-third of what he pays is taxes. I repeat that a further increase in this tax is unjustifiable. I continue to read from the article:

"Some economists are wondering how much tax an essential product can stand before there is an adverse effect on the Nation's economy. With business expanding and wage rates moving upward, it is held that the general economy can sustain the present or a higher level without much difficulty. But if a recession should develop, it is feared the high gasoline tax would aggravate it."

The Ways and Means Committee of the other body, after long study and labor, has apparently approved an increase of 1 cent per gallon in the gasoline tax for fiscal 1960 and 1961. For the reasons I have already given, such an increase is without justification. Moreover, the plan proposed by the Ways and Means Committee is inadequate to meet existing needs. It falls short in the following respects:

First. For the remainder of fiscal year 1960 a 1-cent increase in the gas tax would bring in approximately $380 million. This would fall short by more than $100 million of providing enough funds to reimburse the States the amounts which will be owed. Figures released by the Ways and Means Committee indicate that as of January 1, 1960, under its proposal, the trust fund will still have a deficit of $309 million, and will still be in arrears by $107 million at the end of the fiscal year. On January 1, 1961, the deficit will be $351 million, and the deficit will not be eliminated until July 1, 1961. I cannot believe, Mr. President, that our preoccupation with a balanced budget will let us go so far as to undertake to balance it by simply not paying to the several States the amounts owed to them by the Federal Government. I cannot believe that the Federal Government will default on its commitments to the States. Yet this is what will happen unless additional funds are made available to the trust fund and appropriated for expenditure by the Bureau of Public Roads.

Second. The Ways and Means Committee proposal would permit the apportionment of $1.8 billion this year for fiscal 1961 and only $2 billion next year for fiscal year 1962. The 1956 act prescribes an annual level of apportionment of $2.2 billion. These apportionments were based upon the cost estimates submitted in the Clay report. Under more realistic estimates later submitted by the Secretary of Commerce, an annual level of apportionment of $2.5 billion will be required to complete the system by 1975. Even at this rate, there will be a 3-year stretchout of the program. With annual apportionments no higher than those which would be permitted by the Ways and Means Committee proposal, this brandnew system of National Defense and Interstate Highways would not be completed until long after 1975. The highways would be obsolete before they were even built.

This proposal destroys the integrity of the Interstate Highway and Defense System as a unified, integrated system of national highways, interconnecting all the principal metropolitan centers, to be completed on schedule and adequate to the needs of 1975.

In any event, a further appropriation act will be required this year if the States are to receive full payment, because the maximum amount appropriated in the bill already passed is insufficient to meet the estimated requirement for funds. Unless such an appropriation bill is passed, we shall have broken faith with the States.

Mr. President, the Congress must come to grips with this problem. In 1955 the President recommended that the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways be built within 10 years. At best this will now be almost doubled. We cannot allow a further stretchout. We cannot accept the proposal of the Committee on Ways and Means of the other body.

I am willing to meet head-on the question of raising additional revenue if the facts require it. This is admittedly difficult to accomplish in the Senate which cannot initiate revenue raising proposals except by way of amendment. There are many areas in our tax structure, however, from which additional revenue might be obtained far more equitably than by extracting yet another pound of flesh from highway users who are already paying sums substantially in excess of the cost of highways.

Earlier this year the Senate adopted an amendment to a tax bill which would have repealed the tax favoritism granted to dividend income by the Revenue Act of 1954. Had we been able to retain this amendment in conference, it would have increased revenue by $335 million in fiscal 1960—almost as much as would be obtained from a 1-cent increase in the gasoline tax. The administration, despite its pleas for additional revenue, was opposed to this amendment, and so were the conferees from the other body.

Mr. President, we have an obligation to implement the interstate highway program which both the President and the Congress have called essential to the national welfare. Pending submission of the study now being undertaken by the administration, and as long as highway user taxes are diverted to other purposes, a further increase in the gasoline tax is unjustified. We can and we should make available an additional portion of these revenues so that the program can go forward.

Why should discrimination be practiced on highway improvement? Why should all other programs, all other expenditures throughout our country and around the world, continue—be the budget balanced or unbalanced—yet stop dead still our vital interstate and defense highway improvements unless an additional Federal sales tax is levied on each gallon of gasoline? I reject this injustice, this total lack of reason.

Funds can be provided for continuation of the highway program in any one of three ways, or a combination of the three.

First. A direct appropriation from the general fund to the highway trust fund or dedication of a sufficient amount of revenue from existing highway user taxes to the trust fund, together with the repeal of the so-called Byrd amendment. To the extent that the amounts thus appropriated exceeded the amounts by which Congress has reduced the Presidential budget estimates, a budget deficit would result, assuming the accuracy of the budget estimates of revenue. The administration opposes this method.

Second. The levying of additional taxes with the revenue dedicated to the trust fund. The administration favors this course and has proposed that an additional Federal sales tax of 1½ cents be levied on each gallon of gasoline. Congress has declined to approve this recommendation. I think it will continue to decline such approval. I am vigorously opposed to this proposal, as are many others, for reasons already stated.

Third. Congress can make a further reduction in other expenditures by enacting a rescission of appropriations heretofore made by an amount sufficient to permit highway improvement within the total budget estimates. I propose this course as a solution. I introduce a bill to rescind 1 percent of all fiscal 1960 appropriation bills with discretion vested in the President to except fixed statutory requirements such as veteran pensions and other obligations made mandatory by statute, which are spelled out in the bill. My bill would dedicate to the highway trust fund such portion of the revenue from excise taxes on automobiles as may equal the total amount of such recision. It provides for a continuation of our highway improvement programs within the 1960 budget estimates.

This will afford the Senate a clear choice of reducing other expenditures or increasing gasoline taxes. When the highway bill reaches the Committee on Finance I shall offer this bill as an amendment thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 2588) to amend the Highway Revenue Act of 1956 so as to transfer to the highway trust fund a portion of the receipts from the excise tax on passenger automobiles collected during the 1960 fiscal years; to rescind 1 percent of certain appropriations made for the 1960 fiscal year; and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. GORE, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

REMARKS OF SENATOR ALBERT GORE ON THE FLOOR OF THE U.S. SENATE, AUGUST 31, 1959

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, with the passage of each day, the need for congressional action to avert a collapse of our program to build a National System of Interstate and Defense Highways becomes more acute. There is general agreement that action to insure continued construction must, and will, be taken. The question is whether we shall make continuation of this vital program conditional upon a further increase in the Federal sales tax on gasoline.

Mr. President, the power of Congress to levy taxes is one which must be used wisely. In determining what kind of a tax shall be imposed, consideration must be given, not only to the need for revenue, but also to the question of whether the proposal is fair and would result in an equitable sharing of the overall tax burden.

I have already pointed out to the Senate that highway users, in addition to paying all types of taxes levied upon taxpayers generally, are paying direct excise taxes in an amount substantially in excess of the cost of highway construction, a program of which they are one, but by no means the sole, beneficiary. Yet it is now proposed to impose upon them a still greater burden.

Gasoline is an essential commodity. Almost everyone must use it in one way or another to earn his livelihood. The burden of this tax falls equally upon all with no regard whatever to ability to pay. It is a regressive tax in every sense of the word. The wage earner pays at the same rate as does the top corporation executive.

With all the loopholes and areas of tax favoritism which remain uncorrected, I cannot believe that this Congress, after due deliberation, will determine that the highway user is the one class of taxpayer upon whom an additional levy may equitably and fairly be imposed.

Already gasoline is the most heavily taxed essential commodity. In many States the Federal and State sales taxes combined are approximately equal to the cost of the fuel at the refinery. Indeed, there are few luxuries which bear a tax proportionately as heavy as this essential commodity.

It is said that this additional levy is to be imposed only for a temporary period of 1 or 2 years, to meet an emergency. I would remind my colleagues that the history of taxation is replete with examples of temporary taxes which have become permanent fixtures. Just this year the Congress once again extended the corporate and excise tax rates. The excise taxes imposed on transportation and communications as wartime measures during World War II are still partially with us.

Should this Congress increase the gasoline tax for a definitely prescribed period, the same arguments will be made in the future for its extension that are now made in support of its adoption.

Some appear to contend, Mr. President, that we must increase the gasoline tax because there is no other fiscally responsible way to continue the highway program. The fact is, however, that there is another course of action which will permit the program to go forward without increasing overall appropriations from the general fund of the Treasury.

I have proposed that appropriations for fiscal 1960 be reduced by 1 percent, with the amounts derived from this recission transferred to the Highway Trust Fund to provide funds to pay the States the money the Federal Government is obligated to pay them. I emphasize, Mr. President, that the maximum amount by which any program would be reduced is 1 percent of the amount appropriated. In those instances in which the full amounts appropriated are required by law to be paid, the reduction would not apply, and the President is given the discretion to make this determination in instances other than those enumerated in my bill. I do not believe it can reasonably be asserted that a reduction of 1 percent would be disastrous to any of the many programs for which we annually appropriate funds.

To those who believe that the Congress should act to reduce expenditures, my proposal should appear indeed modest. Yet the amount of the reduction would be adequate to eliminate the 1960 deficit in the highway trust fund.

In addition to the sums already earmarked for the highway trust fund, highway users will pay into the general fund this year $1.6 billion derived from direct taxes imposed upon them. In addition, Mr. President, as I have said, they contribute otherwise to the general fund in the same proportion as do taxpayers generally. I see no valid reason why the highway program, which benefits the entire economy, should be made a stepchild with further progress contingent upon the levy of a penalty tax upon the highway user.

SENATE

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1959

(Legislative day of Monday, August 31, 1959)

The Senate met at 9 o'clock a.m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, since Thou hast planted our feet in a world so full of chance and change that we know not what a day may bring forth, and hast curtained every day with night, and rounded our little lives with sleep; grant that we may use with diligence our appointed span of time, working while it is called today since the night cometh when no man can work.

Grant us, we pray, some part in the coming of the commonwealth where those who toil shall be honored and rewarded, where every man's worth shall be reckoned higher than the price of the things he fashions with hand or brain, where science shall serve, not destruction or private gain, but the advancement of the common good.

Make our bodies Thy temple, and our hearts Thine altar where the sacred flame is ever burning. Amen.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the order entered on yesterday, morning business is now in order, under a 3-minute limitation.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

REPORTS ON REAPPORTIONMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS

A letter from the Director, Bureau of the Budget, Executive Office of the President, reporting, pursuant to law, that the appropriation to the Department of the Interior for "Management of lands and resources," Bureau of Land Management, for the fiscal year 1960, had been apportioned on a basis which indicates the necessity for a supplemental estimate of appropriation; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A letter from the Director, Bureau of the Budget, Executive Office of the President, reporting, pursuant to law, that the appropriation to the Department of Agriculture for "Forest protection and utilization, Forest Service," for the fiscal year 1960, had been reapportioned on a basis which indicates the necessity for a supplemental estimate of appropriation; to the Committee on Appropriations.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE NATIONAL DAUGHTERS OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC, DEPARTMENT OF WISCONSIN

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am always pleased to hear from organizations in my home State which reflect broad-scope opinion, of significance either to its membership, to the State, or to the Nation in general.

Today, I was pleased to receive from Mrs. Rose Meyer, assistant adjutant general of the National Daughters of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Wisconsin, two resolutions adopted at the 46th annual encampment earlier this year.

The resolutions relate, first, to the reissuance of stamps for the Civil War Centennial; and, second, to the dedication of a national memorial at Gettysburg for preserving the historic significance, not only of Lincoln's renowned address, but also commemorating the sacrifices of the gallant men who fought and died at Gettysburg.

Reflecting the interest not only of the Wisconsin membership, but of other members of the National Daughters of the Grand Army of the Republic throughout the country, as well as the interest of other organizations—particularly in Resolution 2—I ask unanimous consent to have the letter from the adjutant general, Rose Meyer, and the resolutions printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL DAUGHTERS OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC, DEPARTMENT OF WISCONSIN,
West Allis, Wis., July 21, 1959.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
U.S. Senator,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I have been instructed to write you regarding the action at the 46th annual encampment of the Department of Wisconsin, National Daughters of the Grand Army of the Republic, held at the Wisconsin Dells, Wis., June 17–19, 1959. Two resolutions were passed on several questions confronting the U.S. Government, which the organization felt were of great importance.

Inasmuch as our organization is composed of daughters and granddaughters, in whose veins flows the blood of those gallant boys, who offered their young lives on the altar of their country, and as we are banded together to perpetuate the memory of our heroic fathers, known as the Union Army, serving during the Civil War from 1861 to 1865; and preserve for future generations the history they established through their victorious struggles in creating and maintaining a united country. We wish to go on record as supporting the request of President Eisenhower, for the Government to purchase the grounds surrounding Gettysburg to maintain as a national memorial and thus keep it from being obliterated by billboards, hotdog stands, etc. This ground has been so consecrated by those who sacrificed and gave their lives here and where Lincoln made his famous Gettysburg address, known the world over, let us forever keep it so. We also wish to support a motion that the reissue of the GAR stamp be included along with some 30 other stamps which are to be reissued for the Civil War centennial.

A copy of these resolutions is herewith enclosed and we urge your support of these resolutions to help further action as desired.

Respectfully,

Mrs. R. A. ROSE MEYER,
Assistant Adjutant General.

RESOLUTION 2

Whereas there is to be a reissuance of some 30 stamps for the Civil War Centennial; and

Whereas there has been no mention of the GAR stamp being reissued by the Postmaster General's Department: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the 46th encampment of the Department of Wisconsin, National Daughters of the Grand Army of the Republic, held at the Wisconsin Dells, Wis., go on record as favoring the reissue of the GAR stamp; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Maj. U. S. Grant 3d, USA (retired), chairman, and U.S. Senators William Proxmire and Alexander Wiley.

Approved by board of directors June 17, 1959.

Endorsed by encampment June 18, 1959.

GERTRUDE PEASE,
JULIA LAVIN,
ROSE MEYER,
Resolution Committee.

RESOLUTION 3

Whereas Gettysburg has been consecrated by those gallant men of 1861–65, who sacrificed and suffered on the battlefield, it was here that Lincoln made his famous Gettysburg Address known the world over, and now as these hallowed grounds have their beauty marred by billboards, hotdog stands, etc., being put up; and

Whereas President Eisenhower has proposed that the United States purchase the surrounding grounds to maintain as a national memorial: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Department of Wisconsin, National Daughters of the Grand Army of the Republic, go on record as favoring the purchase of these grounds by the U.S. Government; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to U.S. Senators WILLIAM PROXMIRE and ALEXANDER WILEY.

Approved by department of Wisconsin board of directors June 17, 1959.

Endorsed by department encampment June 18, 1959.

GERTRUDE PEASE,
JULIA LAVIN,
ROSE MEYER,
Resolution Committee.

BILL INTRODUCED

A bill was introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BUTLER:

S. 2646. A bill for the relief of Lloyd C. Kimm; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES HEALTH BENEFITS ACT OF 1959—MOTION

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina submitted a motion, intended to be proposed by him, that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, with amendments, to Senate bill 2162, the Federal Employees Health Benefits Act of 1959, which was ordered to be printed.

ADDRESSES, EDITORIALS, ARTICLES, ETC., PRINTED IN THE RECORD

On request, and by unanimous consent, addresses, editorials, articles, etc., were ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

By Mr. KEFAUVER:

Address delivered by him before the Tennessee Law Enforcement Officers Association, at Knoxville, Tenn., on August 28, 1959.

By Mr. SPARKMAN:

Address delivered by him on the occasion of the presentation of the Paul Bunyan award to himself and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], by the Lumbermen's Forest in Israel, in the State of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. KEATING:

Statement by him concerning the situation in Laos.

Statement by him with respect to report of U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PUBLIC HEARINGS TO BE HELD JOINTLY BY CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS SUBCOMMITTEE AND JUVENILE DELINQUENCY SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY ON SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 116, SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 133, AND S. 2562

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] and myself, I wish to announce a public hearing to be held jointly by the Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee and the Juvenile Delinquency Subcommittee on Senate Joint Resolution 116, Senate Joint Resolution 133, and S. 2562.

The two joint resolutions propose constitutional amendments and the bill proposes changes to sections 1461, 1462, 1463, and 1465 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 259b of title 39 of the United States Code. Both of the joint resolutions and the bill deal broadly with the subject of the publication and dissemination of obscene material. They were sponsored and cosponsored by many Senators to all of whom I wish to extend my praise for their support in this area.

A joint hearing on these matters was held on August 28, 1959, at which time the Postmaster General of the United States and various religious and lay leaders testified.

The hearing which is presently being announced will begin at 10 a.m., Wednesday, September 9, 1959, in room 457 of the Old Senate Office Building. Mr. Herbert B. Warburton, General Counsel of the Post Office Department, will testify at that time. Other witnesses have also been invited.

ANOTHER ACCOMPLISHMENT OF SENATOR GREEN OF RHODE ISLAND

Mrs. SMITH. Mr. President, that the oldest Member of the Senate, the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], is one of the most alert Members, with one of the keenest minds, has long been acknowledged by many of us. A recent accomplishment of his is but another of the many illustrations of this. That achievement has been well summarized by an article in the August 29, 1959, issue of the Army, Navy, Air Force Journal.

I ask unanimous consent to have that article printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR CURES ARMY'S MENTAL LAPSE

In one of the fastest decisions in military history, the Army has cured itself of a mental lapse jointly diagnosed by Senator THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN, Democrat, of Rhode Island, and an eminent psychiatrist in the Senator's home State.

The psychiatrist last month called Senator GREEN'S attention to "USMA Form 5–413." This is the form used by the Army to tell aspiring West Pointers how they made out on their West Point entrance exams.

The form has three separate headings: "Mental," "Physical aptitude" and "Medical." If an applicant fails in the first category, he is "mentally disqualified."

That's what happened to the psychiatrist's nephew—son of a Regular Army lieutenant colonel—and how the doctor learned about "USMA Form 5–413" in the first place. He communicated the information to the Senator. The Senator took corrective action.

He advised the Army July 30 that neither of the other service academies nor leading colleges and universities any longer employ the word "mental" in their admission forms and notices. The word, used in connection with an entrance examination, carries an inference to the average layman of "some innate deficiency of the mind" or a "lack of basic intelligence," Senator GREEN said.

The 91-year-old lawmaker, commander of a provisional infantry company in the Spanish-American War, told the Army he thought the mental category should be erased.

In record time—17 days—the Army notified Senator GREEN that it has adopted a revised format. Next year, the word "academic" will be submitted for "mental" on "USMA Form 5–413."

The psychiatrist, who started the whole thing, remained anonymously in the background because of, as Senator GREEN'S office put it, "his aversion to publicity."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is concluded.

FOREIGN RELATIONS: LATE SUMMER 1959

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the order entered on yesterday, the Senator from Montana is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, at this moment it may seem a remote possibility, but at some point the first session of the 86th Congress will come to a close. The first snows of winter will undoubtedly have settled on the mountains of Montana by the time the final gavel falls. It may be that the first snows will even have descended in Washington. Sooner or later, however, we shall finish the work of this session. And sooner or later we shall adjourn.

I have sought the floor today in the expectation—perhaps unwarranted—that adjournment may come sooner, rather than later. I have sought it in order to make certain summary remarks on the international situation and the present state of the Nation's foreign relations.

It is not easy to draw up a balance sheet of this kind. Yet the attempt to do so on other occasions, I believe, has been helpful; and it may prove to be helpful now.

In broad terms, I suppose, one might say that since the Nation is not fighting a war in this late summer 1959, the balance sheet is fine. That sort of observation, comforting though it may be, tells us nothing of the stubborn international realities with which we must live, with which we must continue to contend.

It may be good politics to say that the absence of fighting on our part proves how successful our foreign policy has been. It may make for happy headlines. It may be good politics, but I do not know that it is good government. This superficial observation produces a false sense of security in the Nation. It masks the very likely possibility that we may be at a peace of sorts—not necessarily because of our policies, but in spite of some of them, and that pieces may now be falling into place in the complex pattern of international relations which, when fully assembled, may fuse into the full fury of nuclear war.

The observation that we have peace, moreover, shunts aside the domestic implications of present international policies. It completely ignores the grave burden of taxation, and the inflationary pressures which arise from the enormous cost of the Defense Establishment and oversea activities of various kinds which are involved in maintaining this so-called peace. We do not know, really, with any degree of precision the needs of any of these operations or how efficiently any are run. All we know is that these defense and other operations—as much as the Congress will allow—are pressed upon us on the grounds that they are required to maintain this so-called peace. At the same time, the administration has admonished the Congress to limit the buildup of essential domestic services and activities in education, housing, road construction, social security, slum clearance, law enforcement, resource development, and countless others under a budget which goes overwhelmingly for defense and international programs of one kind or another.

In short, to maintain this peace of sorts, we are eating into—or at any rate, not building adequately—our capital investment in the social structure of the Nation. That may be unavoidable in present circumstances; but when we talk lightly of having peace, let us not lose sight of what we are doing and of the monumental problems which the neglect of domestic needs is building up for the years ahead.

Who can speak, in all honesty, of the existence of peace in this late summer of 1959, when the continent of Europe remains divided by hostile and unreconciled ideologies and other spawns of conflict, when the concept of live and let live which encourages men and nations to rational settlement of their difficulties has still so little depth in that key region, when Western Europe shows evidence of serious fissures in its essential unity?

Who can speak, in all honesty, of peace when a wall of ignorance builds ever higher between this Nation and China, and behind it there develops a new and explosive power nurtured heavily on hatred of the United States? While this situation prevails, to talk glibly about the existence of peace today may be to exact a terrible price out of our children's tomorrow.

Who can speak, in all honesty, of peace, when in the great arc of nations extending from Korea, around the rim of Asia, through the Middle East and Africa, and even into the nearby Caribbean, there are only scattered oases of stability; when, in this vast area, too often there exists a seething violence just beneath the surface of daily life; when whole peoples grow restless in the search for new roots to feed their survival and growth?

Mr. President, by ignoring such realities as these, I suppose one may concoct a bright balance sheet of the world situation, and find in it reason to pride ourselves on the success of our foreign policies and their administration. Unfortunately, it also gives us cause for national self-delusion; and I, for one, cannot certify to any such balance sheet. Equally, I cannot join those who, seeing only such realities as those I have just enumerated, are plunged into a cynical gloom, a deadening hopelessness over the fate of the Nation and mankind.

No, Mr. President; I do not believe that we can conclude, from the present situation, either the certainty of a durable peace and continued progress, or the inevitability of retrogression and tragic war. The international situation in late summer 1959, as it has been for some time, is neither black nor white, but is many shades of gray. It would be best to dispel any illusions that we have peace in our times, and count mankind lucky that we even have peace for this day.

As a nation, we are still in the midst of a gigantic and enormously expensive holding action throughout the world. At some critical points in this action, there are rays of hope that potential conflicts will yield to reason, or, at least, that the vast cost of the holding action can be reduced. At others, we are staging merely a rear-guard action in which the way to a durable peace is not yet even dimly seen.

We shall do well, therefore, to put aside the glib evaluation of the state of the world as being one of peace in this late summer of 1959 and the state of our foreign policy as being one of success. At best, the world, and this Nation as a part of it, has just barely got its head above water . If there is any broad generalization that is applicable, it is that we are in a period of change in which we may go down or up, but one in which—in any event—we cannot remain just where we are. In these circumstances we shall increase our prospects of finding the way up, the way to peace, only as we turn our attention to the specifics, to the principal problems which confront us in the world. We shall find our way only as we try to gage accurately the changing content of these problems, only as we examine and reexamine honestly the present policies by which we are seeking to deal with these problems, and weigh and reweigh the effectiveness of the administration of these policies. In short, in an era of change in international relations we need to understand clearly the possibilities of the change and be prompt to act on them. If we fail to do so, we shall be left high and dry as the tide of change moves on and away from us.

GERMANY

In one critical area, Mr. President, in Germany, the pressure for change is great and it is rising. It is fed by developments within Germany, within Europe, perhaps even within the Soviet Union itself.

We may now be in a position to deal more successfully with these pressures than in the past. By successfully, let me add, I mean we may be able to deal with them in a way that leads toward a more durable peace without prejudice to freedom. Certainly, Mr. President, during the 86th Congress we have sharpened the tools of foreign policy for coping with the complex German situation. Our policies have been recast. Without alteration in basic principle, they have been redesigned more closely in line with the realities of the Germany and Europe of 1959 rather than of 1950 or 1945. In a phrase, we have refurbished these policies and brought them up to date.

True, the division in Berlin, Germany, and, in a larger sense, in Europe has not yet ended. But, at least, the revisions of our policy have helped to deflect, for the present, the headlong plunge toward open conflict in Berlin. At least, there is now some chance that the exchanges of heads and near heads of states may set in motion more tangible action on peace than the generalities which emerged from Geneva in 1955. There is no guarantee that such will be the result, but at least the hope is alive.

There is credit enough for all in this achievement. It is due in no small measure to the final efforts of the late Secretary of State. In his last visit to Europe and in his final press statements, Mr. Dulles set the stage for what has become a fresh, a positive Western approach to the problems of Germany.

This Congress has also made its contribution. For one thing, the Senate took the German question out of the deep freeze. It opened the question to full discussion and let in new thoughts and new ideas where for years there had been only ritualistic repetition of the old, the tired, and the increasingly unreal. Distinguished Members of this body, the outstanding chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE], and other Senators joined in these discussions at various times. And out of this many-sided debate emerged, I am sure, much that was useful for those charged with administering foreign policy.

The work of the President of the Senate [Mr. NIXON], on the occasion of his voyage to Russia and Poland was also of the greatest importance. He made an outstanding effort to bridge the almost unbridgeable gap in understanding between Russia and the United States and to enlarge the measure of civility in the relations between the two Nations.

Mr. Herter's work at Geneva, in difficult circumstances, was skillful and dedicated. In cooperation with other Western nations, he succeeded in reinterpreting Western policies with respect to Germany in the light of today's realities rather than yesterday's expectations. He set forth new proposals whose significance is not likely to be lost on the rest of the world, even though they may have fallen on deaf ears as regards the Soviet Foreign Minister at Geneva. One may hope, even, that their significance will not be lost on Mr. Khrushchev. Only last February he indicated that very similar proposals which I had listed in a speech in the Senate could form the basis for reasonable negotiation. I would hope that the President would call this particular matter to his attention when he meets with the Premier of the Soviet Union later this month.

BERLIN

As for Berlin, Mr. President, that city was and still is the crux of danger in Germany. I say that notwithstanding the fact that the crisis date which was originally concocted by the Soviet Union has come and long since gone without serious incident. I say that because Berlin in its location, in its continued division and uncertain status, still contains live seeds of conflict. I say that because a divided alien occupation of that city—Soviet and Western alike—is an anachronism almost a decade and a half after the end of war. I say that because the close proximity of antagonistic forces in the legal no man's land of Berlin constitutes a serious source of accidental or spontaneous military combustion.

Whatever it may appear to be from the Soviet point of view, from the Western point of view, I believe it is time for a change in Berlin. But let me stress, Mr. President, that when I suggest that it is time for a change I do not mean a change in West Berlin alone, as the Communists would have it. It is time for a change in all Berlin.

Because I believe that in any give-and-take negotiation, both parts of Berlin must be involved, I find it disconcerting to discover that Western diplomacy has permitted the discussion of the Berlin issue to center more and more on the status of West Berlin alone. I do not see that this issue—this issue of a dangerously divided Berlin—is an issue of Western troop levels in the city. Nor is it one of the type of arms which Western troops may bear in that city. It is not one of whether the Russians will or will not guarantee our rights there for 1 year, 5 years, or forever. Yet, these matters were the center of discussion regarding Berlin at Geneva. It seems to me that if we mean it when we say we shall stand fast in West Berlin, these are not matters for discussion.

To permit talks with the Soviet Union to center on them seems to me to reveal a temptation to buy the continuance of our presence in Berlin at the price of unilateral concessions. I do not believe that will work, for the price once paid is likely to go higher and higher. And even if it did work, what would we have bought? We would have bought nothing more than an indefinite and expensive prolongation of the present unsatisfactory, costly, and unstable occupation. We would not have advanced one step toward a more rational, a more durable peace. Until when would this occupation continue, Mr. President? Until 1970, 1980, or until the year 2000?

If the issue is not negotiable by a change in the status of West Berlin alone. is it negotiable by a change in the status of all Berlin—of West Berlin and East Berlin? It will not be negotiable in these terms if those who use the words of peace are not prepared to act for peace. We shall not know whether that is the case, however, unless we are clear in our own minds that we seek, as a positive act for peace, a new status for all Berlin. If we are clear on that point, then I believe we may, with profit to all, assume the advocacy of internationalization of the entire city, on an interim basis, until it is once again the capital of a unified Germany.

Again, let me stress, it is one thing to internationalize only West Berlin under the auspices of the United Nations as the Russians have proposed. It would be an entirely different matter to internationalize the entire city of Berlin—East and West—under those auspices, as an interim arrangement. In that, there might well be a valid quid pro quo.

In recent days there have been reports that the Russians are prepared to accept West Germans as replacements for the non-German garrisons now in West Berlin. I have no way of telling whether these reports are accurate. If there is any truth in them, I do not see that the idea should be rejected out of hand. On the contrary, the idea may well be advanced for exploration by the Western nations themselves, even if the Russians have not done so. If West Germans can replace other Western forces in Berlin and if Soviet troops are withdrawn from the city, at least the rudiments of an all-German administration of Berlin will exist. If this administration operated, on an interim basis, under ultimate U.N. or other international control, with guaranteed rights of free access to all from all directions, a new and more durable situation might exist in Berlin than that which now prevails.

I should be less than frank, Mr. President, if I did not state my view that we have not yet sufficiently explored the potential role of the United Nations and West Germans in the Berlin situation. I think there is time to remedy that shortcoming. Indeed, it might well be done in conjunction with the coming exchanges between Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Khrushchev.

WESTERN EUROPE

Turning to another major aspect of the international situation, I should like to consider briefly the state of relations among the Western European nations and among the NATO members. There have always been differences among these nations; that is not in itself the problem. The problem is that in recent years short-range differences have threatened increasingly to overbalance the long-range cohesive forces which hold the Western nations together.

That is the danger, Mr. President. It is a danger, ironically, which does not come primarily from the Russians, although they have long sought the disruption of the alliance. Rather it comes primarily from developments within the Western alliance itself. And, ironically, the danger comes in part from the very success of the alliance.

The sense of restored security—the prosperity and progress of recent years—has permitted national clashes of interest within the very institutions which did so much to bring about the improvement in the Western nations. This is evident in the decline of respect for the military command of NATO and it is evident in the clash of economic purpose as between the inner six of the European Common Market and the outer ring of European nations which is forming in self-defense or for the purposes of economic countermeasures. It is evident, too, in the tendency of a legitimate national pride sometimes to give way to a questionable national conceit which sees itself as the sole source of wisdom and leadership for the West.

If present tendencies in the Western alliance persist, I am afraid it will not be long before the handwriting will be very evident on the wall. Increasingly, individual states or inner groups of states, in pursuit of their own immediate national advantage and oblivious or indifferent to the needs of others, will spur the rest to the same course. The short-range interests of each shall take precedence over the long-range needs of all, and to the degree that they do so the house of Western unity, built with great care and at great expense, will be threatened. To be sure, the institutions are likely to remain, but they will be, increasingly, stripped of substance.

I do not know whether present trends can be reversed. I do not know how much influence the United States can exert to that end. The fact is that major changes have taken place within Western Europe in recent years. The effect, perhaps the inevitable effect, of these changes has been to reduce the influence of the United States and to heighten that of the Europeans themselves in European affairs.

It will serve no useful purpose to wring our hands over this situation, to look for scapegoats, or to continue to bury the problem in words of unity and immodest presumptions of American leadership as usual. Rather, it will be better to learn to live with the changes in Europe which we did so much to bring about with the Marshall plan and our actual postwar leadership. What is important now is to try to preserve what needs to be preserved, to try to preserve the essentials of Western unity.

It is helpful, I believe, that the President has gone to Europe. He is, in his person, an ambassador of hope. He is one of the great symbols of Western cooperation. I do not think, however, that symbols are enough. Not even well-spoken words of unity are enough. We have had those at every conference of the Western nations but the differences have continued to accumulate.

I believe the time has come to put aside the generalizations on unity and to look squarely at, and talk frankly to, the points of disunity in the Western alliance. I think the time has come for a blunt conference which puts the cards on the table with respect to the condition of NATO. We need to delineate the extent of the erosion. We need to determine what revisions are necessary to revitalize this organization and other institutions of Western unity in the light of the changing European situation. In short, we need to face what it is that is bothering the members of the Western alliance if we are to do anything constructive about the difficulties.

I think the time has come, especially, for a frank conference on the economic rivalries which are beginning to plague the European nations and which, sooner or later, will make their effect felt on this country.

It may be, finally, that the time has come for us to move out of the full glare of the spotlight of NATO activity and to welcome from the Europeans—British, French, Italians, Germans and others—the assumption of a greater measure of leadership in its undertakings, a greater measure of responsibility and contribution commensurate with their growing strength and the evolving situation in Europe. I trust that this observation will not be interpreted as an advocacy of American withdrawal from Europe. It is not intended as such. Rather, it is intended as a frank recognition that circumstances have changed in Europe and, in consequence, a change in the position of the United States in Western European affairs may also be warranted and desirable.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will yield briefly, because I have only 45 minutes.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I am curious to know the Senator's views as to how Mr. Khrushchev's visit fits into that picture which he is describing. Does the Senator believe that will have any substantial effect on our situation in Europe?

Mr. MANSFIELD. As the Senator knows better than I, one of the main tenets of the Communist faith is that the Western alliance, NATO, must be broken up and disrupted. So far as Mr. Khrushchev's visit is concerned, I do not know what he can do to break that alliance, because I think, if anything, it will be strengthened.

I should like to point out that while I was opposed to the visit of Mr. Khrushchev some months ago, because I felt that no good could be accomplished. Now that the President, as Chief of State of this Government, has made his decision, I think the only thing we can do is to support him to the best of our ability, regardless of our personal feelings.

I am sure it was a difficult decision for the President to make. Mr. Khrushchev will not be here to pass on the social amenities. But the President, in his wisdom, decided this visit would be in accord with the objective of our foreign policy. On that basis, and in line with the President's decision, I think, while I am skeptical and do not expect much, if anything, to be accomplished, we ought to support the President to the best of our ability.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. The Khrushchev visit has been described by some persons as a diplomatic victory for the Soviets. I wonder if the Senator is in agreement with that point of view.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would say that is a fair statement. I think it represents a diplomatic victory for Khrushchev.

Insofar as the people of many countries in the world are concerned, especially those in the captive areas, I think Mr. Khrushchev has come out on top because of the invitation extended to him by our President, although we must recognize that in return he has extended an invitation to the President, who will visit the Soviet Union later in the fall.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield briefly.

Mr. KUCHEL. First, I congratulate the Senator. He speaks like an American.

Mr. President, shortly the President of the United States will return from Europe. He has given of his bone and his marrow with an unbounded selflessness to demonstrate to the world his devotion to the cause of a just peace. What a magnificent thing the President of this country has done. The response by the people of the free nations of Europe gives us cause to be grateful for the strength among the peoples who are free, and the determination which they share to keep their freedom.

The people of this country recognize that the President, in his wisdom, has entered into an agreement for reciprocal visits with the leader of Soviet Russia. If from those talks the cause of a just peace can be advanced, then the President of the United States will have made one more contribution not only to our generation, but also to generations yet unborn.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator. I agree with the Senator wholeheartedly in what he has had to say.

THE AMERICAS

Turning next to Latin America, Mr. President, it seems to me that the situation, particularly in the Caribbean, is a most uncertain one. It is going to require patience and great effort by all of the American States if a series of little wars spawned by dictatorship and revolution is not to plague that region for months or, perhaps, even years to come.

When a revolutionary fervor, nurtured on years of oppression and brutality achieves its ends, perhaps counter-excesses are inevitable. Tyranny is grim business, and it is not surprising that it produces revolutions which are also grim in their consequences.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, before the Senator gets into a discussion on Latin America, I wonder if he would mind answering a question about France. The Senator has mentioned France only indirectly. What is his view of the Algerian question, if he cares to express it?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is a matter which the French and the Algerian peoples themselves will have to decide. However, I did read in this morning's papers a statement to the effect that there seemingly is accord between President Eisenhower and President de Gaulle relative to a mutually compatible situation on which we both can agree at the forthcoming United Nations meeting in mid-September.

I do not know what that agreement is based on, but several years ago I advanced respectfully, because after all this is a French-Algerian matter and not an American matter except indirectly, the idea that perhaps if consideration were given by France vis-a-vis its relations toward Algeria in the same manner that our country has undertaken vis-a-vis Puerto Rico the idea of a commonwealth based on the Puerto Rican experiment, possibly that would be the answer to the predicament in which France finds itself at the present time.

After all, the Puerto Ricans are citizens of Puerto Rico and the United States. They are given certain privileges because of their commonwealth status, and they hav- the right at any time, as President Eisenhower stated before the United Nations in 1953, I believe, to achieve their own independence by a majority vote of the people.

So I should say that this might be something which France might consider.

Based on the success of our own experiment, it might work just as successfully for the French.

Mr. President, there comes a moment for an end to excesses. There comes a time to settle down to construction of the new after destruction of the old, a time to put aside the fury, if the high ideals which drive men to understandable revolt are not to be lost in a continuing flow of blood and hatred.

I hope that moment will not be lost in the situation in the Caribbean. If it is not lost, there is reason to believe that we are at the beginnings of a beginning of a new and promising era in inter-American relations.

This new stirring, I believe, found official expression in the recent declara- of Santiago. Unless I misinterpret that document, it points to a further evolution in inter-American relations. The Americas, I believe, may be on the verge of bringing into the good neighbor concept—into the doctrine of nonintervention—another concept, that of the conscience of the Americas. If this interpretation is correct, it means that as the Hemisphere deplores intervention in the affairs of one nation by another, it deplores equally the brutal denial, by dictatorship, of basic human decency anywhere in the hemisphere.

Good neighbors normally stay out of each other's family affairs and those who meddle or intervene are rightfully condemned. But sometimes the affairs in one house reach such a point of tyranny that good neighbors can no longer be indifferent to the agony of injustice and brutality which emanates from it. No single American nation can decide when that point has been reached. Not even two or three. But, it seems to me that when two-thirds or three-quarters of the American Republics reach such a conclusion, then the good conscience of the entire community is involved and the community has a responsibility to do something about it. In time, Mr. President, we shall find ways, common ways, inter-American ways, to make the distaste and indignation of the Americas felt by those who outrage the conscience of the Americas. Perhaps, then we shall see an end to the cycle of dictatorship, revolution, dictatorship which, for too long, has been the curse of many parts of this hemisphere.

For our part, Mr. President, I believe our policies are evolving to adjust to the changing concept which I have just outlined, as well as to other new needs of inter-American relations. The change comes in good time because, for years, we have been consuming the goodwill which the good neighbor policy of another generation created. The intentions of the people of the United States, as expressed in the Congress these past few years, have been good. Where we have failed is in the administration of policy. In that connection, we have shown a singular lack of awareness of the changes in attitudes, hopes, needs, and values in Latin America. In consequence, we failed to develop the new ideas, the alert leadership and the inspired official representation in Latin America which would permit us to act in accord with these changes. Now that defect is, I hope, in the process of being remedied.

Much has been done about alerting us to the situation in Latin America. The initiative has come largely from the Congress. I have in mind particularly the work of the subcommittee under the chairmanship of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and the bold and constructive ideas of the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS] who has shown such a consistent and intelligent interest in that area. I believe, too, that the increasing currency which has been given in this country to the views of the distinguished Governor of Puerto Rico, Mr. Muñoz-Marin, and to the Puerto Rican experience generally has been most helpful.

Mr. President, I should like to add one further observation to these remarks on the Americas. When we talk of the Americas, scarcely, if ever, is Canada included in our thoughts. There are, of course, noteworthy exceptions, as during the course of the debate during the past week and this week on the matter of the proposed Chicago diversion of the waters of Lake Michigan, when the present occupant of the chair, the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE], and his colleague, the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], the Senators from Michigan [Mr. HART and Mr. MCNAMARA], the Senators from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK and Mr. SCOTT], and the Senators from New York [Mr. JAVITS and Mr. KEATING], and others all became suddenly interested in our foreign relations with Canada. I believe it was a good thing for both our countries, because too long have we been taking our northern neighbor for granted.

I should say also that one of the outstanding individuals, about whom I will have more to say later, who participated in this particular debate, was that outstanding friend of Canada, the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN].

It is seldom, if ever, that Canada is included in our thoughts in this connection. That is not merely oversight. It is a habit of mind with decades of usage behind it.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Montana has pointed out in his usual able manner that the debate of last week over the Chicago diversion bill performed an extremely useful purpose. The present occupant of the Chair, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE], took a very prominent part in that debate and did yeoman service. If it did nothing else, that debate pointed out the intricate manner in which our fortunes are interlaced with those of Canada. It pointed out the necessity, the urgency, of working out our mutual problems together, which I believe can be done. I believe that the matter which we were discussing last week and this, the matter of Chicago diversion, can be worked out with Canada. I do not know why not.

We have a tribunal set up in the International Joint Commission to handle matters of that kind. I hope that it will be seen fit to take that issue up through the International Joint Commission.

Canada has tremendous water resources. We have tremendous need for water on this side of the line. I am sure that our Canadian friends, as well as our folks in the United States, are very anxious to work these problems out amicably, and in such a manner that the greatest benefit may be received by both countries.

In bringing the matter up this morning the Senator from Montana, whose own State is heavily involved in Canadian matters and with Canadian resources, has again focused attention on the need for close cooperation with the Canadians.

I was also glad to note that the Senator from Montana pointed out the necessity for closer and more understanding relations with the Latin American States. I am free to admit that we have neglected our friendship south of the border. They think we have taken them for granted. They have a great deal of substance to back up that supposition of theirs. Actually we do not take them for granted, but when one is considered a member of the family, sometimes one does not bother to say the things or do the nice things or have the understanding one would have with somebody who perhaps looks more glamorous at a far distance. Certainly there is no part of the world so important to us, aside from Canada, as the Caribbean area and the other Latin American States.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, no one can speak with greater authority on Caribbean affairs or Canadian affairs than the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont. He has anticipated my thinking, because in addition to discussing matters relative to our immediate concern with Canada, I am going to mention in the course of the speech an idea which the Senator from Vermont has discussed with me many times relative to Canada's position in Latin America. What I say at that time will be largely because of the inspiration and the advice furnished by the senior Senator from Vermont.

I was talking, Mr. President, about whether or not our relations vis-a-vis Canada are a habit of mind or whether it is based on sheer inertia. Personally, I believe that it is the latter. Congress has taken a significant initiative in recent years, in remedying this situation. I am thinking now of the work of the Canadian-United States Interparliamentary Group. On the Senate side, this work is being carried out under the chairmanship of the able, constructive, and conscientious Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], and his contribution has been an outstanding one.

Mr. President, I recognize that Canada has farflung commitments, in the Commonwealth, in the United Nations and in other associations. I wonder, however, whether the time has not come for the American Republics to recognize that Canada is also of the Americas and may have much to offer and to gain by closer association with the other nations of this hemisphere. What I am suggesting, Mr. President, is that it may be desirable to undertake, in the Canadian-United States parliamentary meetings and in other appropriate ways, a preliminary exploration to determine whether or not Canadian membership in, or association with the Organization of the American States may not be of benefit to all concerned.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am delighted to yield. Incidentally, what I have just stated is the result of the talks I have had with the Senator from Vermont; and if there is any credit due, he is entitled to it.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator.

When the parliamentary groups were meeting in Ottawa and Montreal, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] made this suggestion to the Canadians. The Canadians have, we might say, a conflict of interest. They belong to the Commonwealth group. They are naturally tied closely to Great Britain and other members of the Commonwealth group. Nevertheless, the question was brought up by the Senator from Oregon. I am sure that the Canadians realize that economically there is a close relation not only with the United States, but with the Latin American States as well. The fact is that Canada, Mexico, and the United States are all in competition in the production of certain mineral commodities as well as agricultural commodities.

The suggestion of the Senator from Montana is very timely, because, while we are in competition with the neighboring States, we should also be in cooperation with them in carrying out mutual programs. At one time or another I have suggested that some day we might have to treat our collective production as a mutual supply or stockpile. That would not be easy to do, because of the many complications. We have them. Canada, Mexico, and the other Latin American States have them, too. However, it is something which must be considered.

I am sure that our neighbors to the north—and probably those to the south—are considering this very subject. By pointing out the necessity for a closer association the Senator from Montana has again performed a service, because it is only by continuous attention to these problems that we shall eventually find the solution.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator is correct; and it is wise of him to emphasize the economic interdependence, not only between this country and Canada, but between this country and the countries of Latin America. It is a factor which we all too often overlook.

OTHER AREAS

Our attention of late, Mr. President, has been fixed on Germany, Europe, and Latin America, but we find that very little is ever said about the emergence of new nations on the African Continent. The scope of our relations being worldwide, we may anticipate that from time to time other nations, other areas will move into the forefront of our awareness.

Rarely in the spotlight, yet never far from it is the emerging continent of new nations in Africa. Since 1951, six independent countries have appeared in regions which were formerly colonies. I believe that we have a good chance to get off on the right foot with these new nations. Certainly, the Department of State in response to the initiative of Congress, has reorganized in a fashion which creates a better opportunity to bring about that result. Heretofore, African affairs were buried in separate niches in the various European desks. Now, however, on the basis of legislation pressed by the distinguished chairman emeritus of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. GREEN] there is an Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs. This means among other things, Mr. President, that official information and evaluations with respect to the African nations no longer are passed through the viewpoint of other countries and areas before they flow into total U.S. policy. In short, Mr. President, the independent nations of Africa now stand on an equal footing with those of Europe, Asia, and elsewhere, as far as the machinery of our foreign policy is concerned.

Elsewhere in the world, Mr. President, with rare exceptions, we are just muddling along in the patterns of past policy, at great expense to the public and with few tangible evidences of achievements leading to a greater stability and progress in those areas and, hence, to more beneficial relations with them in the future.

In the Middle East, for example, we find the same tendencies, as in the past, to transfer high official hopes, almost in desperation, from ruler to ruler, from nation to nation, as the sands of international political intrigue in that region shift first in one direction and then in another. The Eisenhower doctrine, as many of us anticipated at the time it was enunciated, lies almost buried in these sands. The Baghdad Pact acquires a new name but even less content.

And still, the real problems of the Middle East remain: The refugees; the denial of the use of Suez on an equal basis to all; the monstrous poverty and ignorance of the many in the midst of the vast wealth and culture of the few; the border questions and the smoldering hatred and suspicion between Israeli and Arab. None of these—the real problems of the Middle East—appear to be any closer to solution than they were a decade ago. Nevertheless the outpouring of public funds for the region goes on in the bland assumption that we are doing something about these problems. How much longer, Mr. President?

Sooner or later, in the administration of policies with respect to the Middle East we are going to have to make up our minds. Sooner or later we are going to have to face the fact that, for this Nation as a whole, there are some things more important that Middle Eastern oil, military bases or the soothing of the ultranationalistic tantrums of one nation or another.

Sooner or later, we are going to have to decide who in the Middle East works sincerely and with forbearance to end the state of fear and incipient war which prevails in that region and who intrigues to perpetuate it. We are going to have to decide which governments render a decent measure of justice to their peoples and act for their peaceful progress and which governments exploit their passions for selfish or destructive ends.

When we have made these decisions then, perhaps, we may be able to devise policies for which we need not apologize, policies which will have some strength to stand in the midst of political intrigue and against the inroads of communism into the region—policies which will begin to bring to an end the largely indiscriminate use of public funds for what are often self-defeating purposes.

Farther to the East, Mr. President, moving towards the Pacific, there is little in the situation in which to find comfort. We go on, as we have been doing for years, spending, with little question, vast sums of public funds, at best to hold a line against communism. Yet despite this outpouring, the line shows signs of breaking down in a Laos just a few months after we have been told that foreign aid had built the line solid in that country. And when a situation of that kind arises, when it catches us unaware, what is the answer, Mr. President? More of the same; more aid in the same pattern as in the past.

As for stability and progress in any of these nations, except in Japan and in India and one or two isolated spots, there is little evidence of it. The lot of vast populations remains just about as miserable as ever; the enticement of authoritarianism are as intense as ever. I repeat that so far as U.S. policies in Asia are concerned, they constitute, largely, an enormously costly holding action from Korea to Pakistan and a holding action of very dubious reliability. Moreover, they constitute a holding action which is developing disturbing overtones. I refer to what is, apparently, a trend toward military or quasimilitary authoritarian dictatorships in southern and southeast Asia. Those who administer our policies seem inclined to look the other way, to find the rationalizations which put off the facing of the realities inherent in this trend. To be sure, one can find good in the development. Military dictatorships produce more stability and order, at first. They are easier to deal with, at first. They even promise a measure of progress away from the corruption, the inertia, the inadequacy that characterized many of the predecessor governments, at first.

But no person bred in this Nation—alive to its premise that man is fit to govern himself—no person bred in that tradition can look with equanimity, much less with eagerness, on the appearance of military or quasimilitary regimes in so many lands with which we are intimately associated. I must ask, Mr. President, is this the only answer which freedom can pose to communism?

I can only express the hope that those who are responsible for the administration of our policies and particularly our aid programs, know what they are doing. I can only express the hope that this military-authoritarian trend in non-

Communist Asia is a temporary phenomenon, that it is a step toward responsible and popularly responsive government of those lands.

There are things worse than instability in this world; and one of them is the iron hand of tyranny—Communist or any other. I cannot look with pride on any action of this Government, advertent or inadvertent, that acts to close that hand on any people—no, not even in the mistaken zeal that this will somehow save them and us from communism.

ADMINISTRATION OF POLICY

In my remarks so far I have been discussing matters over which, for the most part, we do not—as a nation—exercise unilateral control. What happens in the Far East, the Middle East, in Europe, the Americas or elsewhere is not within our capacity alone to determine. Nor is the responsibility for developments there uniquely that of this administration or any other. In most parts of the world our influence ranges from important to peripheral but, in a practical sense, it is not absolute anywhere; and the sooner we disabuse ourselves of any idea that it is, the sooner we shall use with greater deftness, with less waste of public resources, such influence as we do possess.

There is an aspect of foreign relations, however, which is wholly within the province of the United States, wherein responsibility rests solely with this Nation. I refer to the manner in which we make up our minds in foreign policy and, after we have made it up, what we do and the way to do it. In short, I refer to the formulation and administration of policy.

Other nations do not tell this Nation what to decide, as regards its foreign relations. To be sure the attitudes of others, the circumstances abroad, our relationships with others influence our decisions. Indeed they should, for we are not a nation in a pressurized nose cone somewhere off in space. But awareness of the rest of the world, notwithstanding, in the last analysis, we decide for ourselves. We act for ourselves. We make right decisions or wrong decisions. We act intelligently or foolishly as a result.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. The Federal Government has had long experience in providing aid to the States, which, after all, do possess some element of sovereignty. Primarily this aid has been designed to help the States in activities in which the Federal Government does not function directly. It seems to me that the Federal Government can benefit by those lessons in determining how to provide aid to nations around the globe. In supplying aid to the States, the Federal Government sets certain standards as a condition for receiving such aid. If those conditions are not fulfilled, the aid is withdrawn until the States comply with the requirements.

It seems to me that the same pattern should be followed in supplying aid to foreign lands. We have observed in many instances that foreign governments indulge in all sorts of waste and graft and in a misuse of the resources which they receive from us in the form of aid.

I wonder if the Senator from Montana believes we should have some way of insuring our knowledge of what is happening to the aid we furnish. Does he agree with me that we should insist, sooner or later—and the sooner the better, so far as I am concerned—that the aid we provide should be used effectively for the purpose for which it was intended; and that otherwise it should be terminated, regardless of the country which is affected?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator from Louisiana is correct. If he will bear with me, I am coming to that point in my talk. I think that what I shall say will fit in with the questions he has raised.

Mr. President, we bear the responsibility for these national decisions and actions. In short, the buckpassing stops or should stop at the water's edge. We—not others—determine for what purpose we have a State Department, an aid administration, a Central Intelligence Agency, an Information Service, and a host of other agencies which carry on activities abroad on the basis of appropriations from public funds and on behalf of the entire Nation. We alone decide how they shall function.

When I use the term "we," Mr. President, I mean, of course, the people of the United States. In matters of foreign relations, however, the responsibility for interpreting what we want and how we are to pursue it rests, in a theoretical sense, with the elected President, acting in some instances with the advice and consent of the elected Senate and in others with the concurrence of the elected Congress.

That is the constitutional theory, Mr. President, but what is the fact? The fact is that the power to interpret the will of the Nation in respect to our vast and complicated relations with the rest of the world has been diffused through the enormous labyrinth of the executive branch of the Government. The power to decide, in short, has been scattered and diluted to the point where it has become virtually impossible to fix responsibility. It has been scattered and diluted to the point where it has become virtually impossible to use the public power effectively to bring about adjustments in policy and its administration at somewhere near the time that these adjustments are needed.

In these circumstances, national interests frequently become so interwoven with bureaucratic interests and conflicts that we are less and less able to adjust the total needs of the Nation to the changing circumstances of the world. More and more we have a policy determined by executive agency accommodation and less and less by the leadership and decision of the responsible political officials of the administration and the Congress. I believe the able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] illustrated this point most forcefully a short time ago on the floor with regard to policy formulation on the testing of nuclear weapons. He showed how agency conflicts were producing a situation that undercut our negotiators in Geneva. His statement apparently was heard at the White House for the President made a decision on this question shortly thereafter. But, Mr. President, this is the kind of decision which should be forthcoming promptly within the administration on the basis of need. It ought not to require prodding from the Senate.

I realize that this problem has been with the Nation for a long time. It is not amenable to easy solution. Nevertheless, Mr. President, we must deal with it, if responsible government in the field of foreign policy is not to degenerate into a catch phrase. We must stay with this problem—the President and the Congress—until it yields to rational solution.

The able Senator from Washington [Mr. JACKSON] has recognized the deplorable creakiness of the decision making machinery of the Nation in critical matters of foreign relations and defense. He has supplied the initiative and set in motion a special Senate investigation of the problem which has been promised the cooperation of the administration. That cooperation is essential because responsibility for this problem rests primarily and preponderantly with the administration.

I should like to suggest, Mr. President, that we may find the way to a reasonable solution to this problem in a diligent assertion of the primary authority of the Presidency in matters directly or indirectly related to foreign policy and a reassertion, under the President, of the responsibility of the Secretary and the Department of State for the conduct of foreign relations.

If the Department of State is not organized to handle these matters in their totality, then let us reorganize it. If it is not equipped, then let us equip it. If its personnel is not properly trained, then let us seek to provide the training. If it has not sufficient resources, financial or otherwise, then let us make these resources available to it.

But let us not, in an effort to compensate for the real or imagined shortcomings of the Department of State so scatter responsibilities in foreign relations through the military departments, the agricultural department, the ICA, the CIA, the Commerce Department or whatever, that the costs of administering foreign policy rise enormously and, in ratio, the constructive results decline drastically. We have already carried this process so far that in our official representation abroad, the employees of the Department of State, numerous as they may be, are in many instances far outnumbered by the representatives of other United States agencies. And although the Department of State bears ultimate responsibility for relations abroad, it exercises only the most nominal influence over the use of the resources and the actions of the personnel of these other agencies.

I believe this session of the 86th Congress has made a highly significant advance which can act to bring about a major improvement in the administration of foreign relations. I refer to the authorizing legislation which the Congress has passed in the field of foreign aid. If it is reasonably interpreted by the administration, this legislation, as extensively amended by Congress, can act to fix authority and responsibilty for this significant undertaking much more decisively, than is now the case. One amendment provides for an Inspector General in the Department of State to probe the weaknesses in every aspect of the aid program. A second provides for the ending of the nonsecurity related secrecy which has surrounded this program. Still another separates military aid from other forms of aid but provides for close control over the entire program by the Secretary of State.

Finally, a fourth amendment—I call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to the fourth amendment—requires the executive branch to submit plans for the gradual termination of massive grants, as the program moves more and more to a loan basis. These amendments, Mr. President, can do much to end aid by force of habit and to give to the program more purpose and direction within the context of our total policy. They can reduce the waste and any tendencies toward corrupt practices.

The congressional action on foreign aid is only a first step in bringing about a more integrated, streamlined and responsible administration of the Nation's international affairs. Much remains to be done in regard to other agencies which have injected themselves or have been injected into these matters without adequate coordination under the Secretary of State and without adequate control by the elected officials of this Government.

CONCLUDING COMMENTS

Mr. President, I have talked at great length today. But there is much that needs saying on this subject of the Nation's foreign relations and their administration, much more than I have said. I wanted these thoughts, however, to be on the record at this time. For, in the near future, discussions of the highest importance to the Nation will be taking place between the President and Mr. Khrushchev and others. It is possible to question the wisdom of these meetings at this point in time and circumstance, as has been done. But the decision to hold them has been made by the President and, at a recent press conference, he put the significance of these meetings in proper perspective when in response to questions as to their propriety he stated:

> We are talking about the human race and what's going to happen to it. * * * Any President that refused finally to use the last atom of prestige or the last atom of his energy—in this quest for peace—ought to be condemned by the American people.

Yet these impending discussions—however well-intentioned—are but a part of the search for a better road for this Nation and mankind. The work of securing the well-being and the peace of the people of the United States will not end with the impending exchanges. We shall be better prepared to do what still needs to be done if we understand more clearly the worldwide dimensions of the undertaking which confronts us, if we ready our spirits and determination for the tasks which the impending conferences may make possible.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LAUSCHE in the chair). The time available to the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Montana may proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered; and the Senator from Montana may proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, will the able assistant majority leader yield to me?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, it is always a pleasure to be on this floor and hear the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] discuss matters with respect to our foreign policy. No one works harder than he does on this subject, as well as on others. No one has greater authority in this field. It has been a privilege to listen to his remarks this morning, and I should like to commend him for his able and thought-provoking presentation.

I wish to ask a question of the able assistant majority leader. He mentioned India. How does he size up the situation there, particularly with respect to the Chinese probings on the Indian border? What does the Senator from Montana think of the conditions there, and what does he think we should do about that matter?

Mr. MANSFIELD. There is not much, if anything, that our country can or should do about what is happening in India. India is an independent and sovereign nation with a great past and, I believe, a glorious future. The only people who can decide what India should do are the Indian people themselves. Of course, their spokesman is Mr. Nehru.

However, I venture the assertion that, due to the recent events in Tibet and in the Indian protectorates of Bhutan and Sikkim, on the northeast frontier, bordering on Assam, and in the region of Ladakh, a part of Kashmir, Mr. Nehru is having second thoughts on his policy of calculated neutrality.

I hope Mr. Nehru will consider the possibility of bringing these matters—which seem to be acts of direct aggression on the part of the Communists, in all those scattered areas belonging to, or bordering on, or under the protection of India—to the United Nations, for consideration.

In view of the fact that Ladakh, in Kashmir, seems to be one of the focal points of the aggression, I express the hope that the Indians and the Pakistanis will try to do away with their differences over Kashmir, and will endeavor to settle this difficulty in their mutual interest, and will get together on a common basis, because of the dangers which both of them face from a common aggressor.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I thank the Senator from Montana for his wise remarks.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President——

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, if my able colleague, the Senator from Oregon, will permit me to ask a further question of the able assistant majority leader, I shall appreciate it.

What does the Senator from Montana think at this time about our relations with Japan?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would say that at present the relations between the two countries are excellent. It is my understanding that at present there is in process at least the formulation or the possibility of the formulation of a new peace treaty, to revise the treaty of peace with Japan which was negotiated in 1952 by the late Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, and which replaced the earlier MacArthur arrangements of 1945. I understand that the treaty of 1952 or related security agreements are now the subject of negotiations between our Government and the Government of Japan. I believe it is high time for that to be done.

I should like to see the relations between the two countries become increasingly better. I also would like to see the day come—although it will not come in the immediate future—when, for example, we can withdraw from the Bonins, Okinawa, and other islands which we hold at the present time, in line with our mutual security program with Japan, and that at the same time the Soviet Union will withdraw from the islands it occupies north of Hokkaido, as well as from the Kuril chain, which the Soviet Union took over in 1945.

In my opinion, Japan is the real bulwark of democracy in the Far East. Japan has, every day, the enormously difficult problem of feeding her large population. I hope——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROXMIRE in the chair). The additional time yielded to the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Montana be allowed 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered; and the Senator from Montana may proceed for 2 more minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I hope the rest of the world will recognize the worthiness of Japan, and will do what it can to alleviate the distressing economic situation which exists in Japan, and thereby relieve Japan of the possibility of being forced over into the Soviet orbit.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Montana. Again I congratulate him on his remarks of this morning.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, together with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD], I commend him for the very statesmanlike speech he has made this morning. I sincerely hope that the State Department and the President of the United States will give heed to it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I, too, wish to commend the Senator from Montana for the very excellent presentation he has made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional time yielded to the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Montana may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered; and the Senator from Montana is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I should like to make a comment in connection with the mutual security program, to which I generally subscribe. My comment is predicated upon a letter I received from the Reverend Anton Merkun. His letter is written in Slovenian. He says:

> YOUR EXCELLENCY: I am very nearly blind. I cannot hear. I have a heart sickness. I have sugar diabetes. It is with great difficulty that I write.
> Badly do I need money which is in Yugoslavia. I will be thankful to you if you can be of any help.

He attaches to his letter a form letter which obviously has been addressed to various Members of Congress. It reads as follows:

> I am an American citizen, and your constituent; and I am turning to you for your kind assistance.
>
> I have real property in Yugoslavia; and although I cannot get any income from the property or make any disposition of the same for several years, I still am the owner of the land registered, and I hope that the intervention of the Department of State would help us to protect our ownership.
> In December of last year the Yugoslav Government finally issued a law on nationalization, by which all apartment houses and building lots in cities were nationalized, and a ridiculous compensation was set up, of 10 percent of the present rent, payable each year, for 50 years. So I shall get at least 10 percent of the rent, as the owner of my property, but not as compensation.

Other statements are made in the letter, but I shall not read them.

I believe some consideration should be given the fact that the Yugoslav Government has confiscated the property, and, as compensation, has said, "We will give you, each year, 10 percent of the rental value, for a period of 50 years, at which time your rights come to an end."

I hope our State Department will give heed to what I have said. That development is nationalization of the very worst type. Ten percent of the rent is the annual compensation for 50 years, and nothing else.

My sympathy goes out to Rev. Anton Merkun. I know the man. He is in his eighties. Here he is in his country, with his property confiscated, left helpless and sick. While we are giving aid to Yugoslavia, that country is taking their property away without compensation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would hope the State Department would pay heed to what the Senator has just said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I pay tribute to the efforts and the dedicated work of the very able Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD]. He has made a great contribution to the Senate, to the country, and to the free world in his study, and in his thoughtful remarks made here today. I know of no man in public life for whom I have greater admiration or affection than for the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I appreciate the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Texas very much.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, the address made to the Senate by the Senator from Montana is probably the best of any which he has made on the international situation. As usual, the address is thought provoking. He has put forward some ideas with which some will disagree, but which ought to be made the subject of widespread discussion in the Senate and elsewhere.

The Senator from Montana is entirely correct when he states that the diffusion of responsibility has probably complicated our handling of international matters. He has performed an extremely useful service in making this speech.

I want to add that I believe that while the international situation today is extremely challenging, it is not hopeless. Some good things have been accomplished, which indicates that we may be able to do more than we think we can now toward bringing about lasting peace in the world and understanding between nations.

Not many years ago we felt that the Trieste situation was insoluble. Then we woke up one morning and found that the Yugoslavs and the Italians had agreed on that question, and apparently agreed successfully, because they seem to have happily resolved that problem in a satisfactory manner.

Not long ago what had appeared to be the insoluble situation with respect to Cyprus was brought to a conclusion. We hope it is a lasting conclusion, and that the people of Cyprus may live peacefully with one another as time goes on.

We all remember the crisis of the Israeli-Egyptian war of 2 or 3 years ago. That fighting has stopped. Things have, I hope, changed for the better there. At least, the Suez Canal is operating successfully, so far as I know, even though we were told that the Egyptians would not be able to get a boat through that canal in any way at all.

The civil war in Lebanon was brought to an end.

More recently, just last week, I believe, it was announced almost simultaneously that we were reopening our consulate in Poznan, and that the Poles were reopening their consulate in Chicago. Almost the same day it was announced that we were airlifting small arms into the country of Laos, in interior Asia. I ventured the opinion at that time that the reestablishment of relations with the Polish people would probably be more effective in the struggle against communism than would the shipment of small arms into the interior of Asia.

So these problems come, and eventually they are settled. If they are worth a solution, there is a solution somewhere, if we will just devote our efforts to finding it.

So, Mr. President, in pointing out these matters, the Senator from Montana has performed, as usual, an extremely useful service to the country and to the Congress.

I have been particularly gratified lately at the work of the International Bank in arranging what appears to be an amicable settlement for the division of the waters of the Indus River between Pakistan and India. That arrangement seems to be a means toward a solution of that problem and the establishment of closer relationships and better understanding between those two countries of southern Asia.

Mr. President, I am not sure that these problems are all bad. If we once became complacent, if we ran out of problems, we would stagnate. There would not be any need of a space committee, I may say to the Senator from Texas. If it had not been for some of these problems, if it had not been for suspicions between the Russian Government and the Western World, we would not be making anywhere near the progress we are making today in the scientific world. I think, however, these events were planned; they were planned correctly. But there is a great satisfaction in working toward and helping to find solutions to problems which seem to be almost insoluble.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator from Vermont for his comments.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for not more than 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I wish to congratulate the junior Senator from Montana for the very constructive speech he has made. He has placed these issues above partisan politics and has made a major contribution to a better understanding of the problems we face.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I wish to express my deepest thanks to the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for not to exceed 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KUCHEL. During the excellent address of the Senator from Montana I had occasion to congratulate him and to comment on some of the points which he was making. I am very glad, as one from this side of the aisle, once again to salute my friend for the clarity of his thinking and of his views, all of which deserve serious consideration by the Congress and our Government.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator from California.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to make a brief statement? We are operating under limited time.

Mr. WILEY. Yes; I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator make that request?

Mr. WILEY. Yes.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that 5 minutes be given to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. Are we laboring under a limitation of speech in this august body, or what is the situation? I was not here earlier this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Wisconsin that morning business has been concluded. The Senate is now operating under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. WILEY. I ask unanimous consent, then, that I may have 5 minutes, first to comment upon the matter which we have just disposed of, and then that I may have a minute or two to put matters in the RECORD. I must say my understanding yesterday was that the distinguished Senator from Montana was to start in at 9 o'clock, talk for an hour, and after that we would have a morning hour. That was only my understanding, of course.

Now, may I get back on the track. I want to say I have listened to the very complimentary remarks that were made by the majority leader and the acting minority leader [Mr. KUCHEL] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] in relation to my good friend MIKE MANSFIELD. Always, when I have the opportunity so to do, I speak out in praise of the Senator. He is not only a thinker, a solid thinker, but one who is friendly in his approach.

I received a copy of the Senator's speech only a few minutes ago. I am sure I shall read it with profit.

GRAVE SITUATION IN FAR EAST

Mr. President, the grave situation in the Far East is a matter of deep concern to all of us, and to the free world.

The invasion of the Chinese Communists is first, a violation of international law; second, a violation of the integrity of another nation's territory; third, and a threat to world peace. Too, it is also reportedly causing serious disruption in the internal affairs of India.

In the past, there have been criticisms of India's policies aimed generally toward nonentanglement in the East and West conflict.

We recognize, however, a nation's right to respect for policies it finds necessary to adopt, in its own self-interest—that is, if such policies are peaceful—not aggressive policies.

The world, I believe, well recognizes the dedication with which Prime Minister Nehru and his government have adhered to the principle of trying to find peaceful, nonmilitary solutions to problems.

Now, India finds itself the target of military aggression. If the Red Chinese pursue tactics which lead to open warfare, it may well enflame all of Southeast Asia and perhaps the world.

The inexplicable factor in the Communist aggression is the difficulty of determining why the Chinese Communists would deliberately antagonize—indeed, attack—a nation which in the past has supported the Red Chinese bid for recognition, particularly in efforts to secure membership in the United Nations.

Today the Chinese and Indian peoples are faced with tremendous economic problems at home. Surely it would be tragic, not only in terms of threats to world peace, but also in terms of the effects upon the Indian and Chinese peoples, if these nations, confronted with such gigantic domestic economic problems, were now to dissipate their resources and manpower in a destructive war.

Time after time the responsible nations of the world have demonstrated the need for outlawing war. Nevertheless, we still find that outlaws exist among us. In policy they remain incorrigible, unwilling to abide by recognized standards of international conduct, and willing to violate territories of other nations for their own purposes.

This new act of aggression, of course, is more solid evidence of why Red China should not be admitted to the U.N.

Again the world—particularly the free world—finds itself faced with a fateful decision on how to deal with aggression by a major power.

The decision, of course, depends on just how far the Chinese Communists intend to carry their territorial violations.

All of us hope and pray that this new aggression can be localized and resolved without major conflict.

Nevertheless, the Red Chinese tactics should alert us, the uncommitted nations and the free world, to the fact that communism has not changed its spots; that it continues to be dedicated to aggressive policies, including military aggression, to achieve its goals of expansion of influence and control over more people.

EXTENSION OF AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, Senate bill 1748.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1748) to extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is S. 1748, to extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, and for other purposes, as to which there is a unanimous-consent agreement to limit debate to 30 minutes on amendments, motions, or appeals, except a motion to lay on the table, and 2 hours on the bill, the time to be equally divided.

The clerk will state the committee amendments, reported by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] on August 25, 1959.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "1960" and insert "1962".

On page 1, it is proposed to strike out lines 8 through 11 and insert the following:

(2) Section 103(b) (prescribing limit on appropriations) is amended, effective January 1, 1960, to read as follows:

"(b) Agreements shall not be entered into under this title during the period beginning January 1, 1960, and ending December 31, 1962, which will call for appropriations to reimburse the Commodity Credit Corporation, pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, in amounts in excess of $4,500,000,000, plus any amount by which agreements entered into in prior periods have called or will call for appropriations to reimburse the Commodity Credit Corporation in amounts less than authorized for such prior periods by this Act as in effect during such periods."

(4) The first section (which provides the short title) is amended to read as follows:

"That this Act may be cited as the 'Food for Peace Act of 1959'."

(5) Section 102(a) (which relates to the carrying out of agreements) is amended by inserting the words "or for grant" after the words "domestic exporters" in clause (1), and by inserting the words "or grant" after the word "sale" in clause (2).

(6) Section 104(k) (relating to scientific activities) is amended by striking out the colon and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "and to promote and support programs of medical and scientific research, cultural and educational development, health, nutrition, and sanitation:".

(7) Section 104(o) (relating to assistance to educational facilities sponsored by United States citizens) is amended by striking out so much thereof as follows the semicolon.

(8) Section 104 (relating to uses of foreign currencies) is further amended by inserting after paragraph (o) the following new paragraphs:

"(p) For supporting workshops in American studies or American educational techniques, and supporting chairs in American studies;

"(q) For assistance to meet emergency or extraordinary relief requirements other than requirements for surplus food commodities: Provided, That not more than a total amount equivalent to $2,000,000 may be made available for this purpose during any fiscal year;

"(r) For financing the preparation, distribution, and exhibiting of audio-visual informational and educational materials, including Government materials, abroad: Provided, That not more than a total amount equivalent to $5,000,000 may be made available for this purpose during any fiscal year;

"(s) For financing the services of technicians, advisers and administrators who are nationals of any friendly country, which may be needed to further economic and social development programs in other friendly countries;".

(9) Section 104 is further amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That foreign currencies shall be available for the purpose of subsections (p) and (s), in addition to funds otherwise made available for such purposes, only in such amounts as may be specified from time to time in appropriation Acts".

(10) Title I is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 110. In order to implement the resolution adopted by the United Nations on February 20, 1957 (United Nations Resolution 1025 [XI]), which was sponsored by the United States, calling for international cooperation in the establishment of national food reserves, surplus agricultural commodities may be made available by the President on a grant basis for such reserve purposes pursuant to an agreement with the recipient country requiring that payment shall be made when such commodities are withdrawn from the reserve: Provided, That no payment shall be required for any quantities of such commodities which are used by agreement of the President and the government of the recipient country for purposes provided for in section 201 of this Act. Agreement under which commodities are provided pursuant to this section shall specify whether any payment made thereunder shall be in foreign currency or in dollars, and the purposes authorized under section 104 of this Act for which any such foreign currency payments may be used. Such agreements shall require the government of the recipient country to maintain the reserve at agreed levels unless the President specifically approves a reduction below the agreed level, and shall contain reasonable safeguards to assure that the commodities in the reserve are not used for speculative purposes. In negotiating agreements under this section the President shall give effect to the requirements prescribed in section 101 for agreements entered into under that section."

(1) Such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE IV—ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 401. The President may carry out the functions conferred upon him by this Act and section 402 of the Mutual Security Act of 1954, as amended, either directly or through an administrator designated by him. The administrator shall perform his functions as assigned by the President in accordance with the provisions of this Act under the general supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may suggest the absence of a quorum without the time necessary for the call of the roll being charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Johnson, Tex.	Moss
Byrd, W. Va.	Kuchel	Prouty
Carlson	Lausche	Proxmire
Chavez	Long, La.	Schoeppel
Clark	McClellan	Thurmond
Cooper	Mansfield	Wiley
Green	Morse	Young, N. Dak.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union meetings at Warsaw, Poland.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is absent because of illness.

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is not present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

After a little delay, Mr. ALLOTT, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. BEALL, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. BIBLE, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. BUSH, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BYRD of Virginia, Mr. CANNON, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. CARROLL, Mr. CASE of New Jersey, Mr. COTTON, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. DIRKSEN, Mr. DODD, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. DWORSHAK, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. ENGLE, Mr. ERVIN, Mr. FONG, Mr. FREAR, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. GORE, Mr. GRUENING, Mr. HART, Mr. HARTKE, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. HICKENLOOPER, Mr. HILL, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. HRUSKA, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, Mr. JORDAN, Mr. KEATING, Mr. KEFAUVER, Mr. KERR, Mr. LANGER, Mr. LONG of Hawaii, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. MCCARTHY, Mr. MCGEE, Mr. MCNAMARA, Mr. MONRONEY, Mr. MORTON, Mr. MUNDT, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. MUSKIE, Mr. NEUBERGER, Mr. PASTORE, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. SMATHERS, Mrs. SMITH, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. STENNIS, Mr. SYMINGTON, Mr. TALMADGE, Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey, Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware, Mr. YARBOROUGH and Mr. YOUNG of Ohio entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT in the chair). A quorum is present.

RECESS TO 1 O'CLOCK P.M. TODAY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 1 o'clock p.m. today.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 48 minutes a.m.) the Senate took a recess until 1 o'clock p.m. today.

The Senate reassembled at 1 o'clock p.m., and was called to order by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock has arrived; and the Senate will come to order.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Hawks, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8575) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 8678. An act to amend the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958 to make certain adjustments in the Federal-aid highway program, and for other purposes; and

H.J. Res. 513. Joint resolution designating the 17th day of December 1959 as "Wright Brothers Day."

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 53. An act to amend the Acts approved April 16 and June 27, 1906 (34 Stat. 116 and 519), so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands on the Huntley reclamation project, Yellowstone County, Mont., to school district numbered 24, Huntley Project Schools, Yellowstone County, Mont.;

S. 2424. An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934 in order to provide that the equal-time provision with respect to candidates for public office shall not apply to news and other similar programs;

S. 2524. An act relating to the power of the States to impose net income taxes on income derived from interstate commerce, and authorizing studies by congressional committees of matters pertaining thereto;

H.R. 213. An act to provide additional time within which certain State agreements under section 218 of the Social Security Act may be modified to secure coverage for nonprofessional school district employees, and to permit the States of California, Kansas, North Dakota, and Vermont to obtain social security coverage, under State agreement, for policemen and firemen in positions covered by a retirement system;

H.R. 2411. An act to amend paragraph 1629 of the Tariff Act of 1930 so as to provide for the free importation of tourist literature, to liberalize the tariff laws for works of art and other exhibition material, and for other purposes;

H.R. 2906. An act to extend the period for filing claims for credit or refund of overpayments of income taxes arising as a result of renegotiation of Government contracts;

H.R. 8374. An act to amend Public Law 85-880, and for other purposes;

H.J. Res. 406. Joint resolution to facilitate the admission into the United States of certain aliens;

H.J. Res. 444. Joint resolution for the relief of certain aliens; and

H.J. Res. 445. Joint resolution to facilitate the admission into the United States of certain aliens.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 513) designating the 17th day of December 1959 as "Wright Brothers Day," was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New York may proceed for 3 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, to demonstrate that the problems of civil rights in the country are just as much on the minds of the people as they are on the minds of the Members of Congress, and that action is demanded and dictated by the whole situation which faces us, not only in the South, but also elsewhere in the Nation, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a letter from the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, signed by officials of the leading organizations in the whole civil rights field, including the American Council on Human Rights, the American Jewish Committee, the American Veterans Committee, the Americans for Democratic Action, the American Jewish Congress, the Friends Committee on National Legislation, the NAACP, the American Civil Liberties Union, the Sleeping Car Porters, and the United Steelworkers of America.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS,
New York, N.Y., September 3, 1959.

The Honorable JACOB K. JAVITS,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JAVITS: It is a tragic thing that at this late date, on the eve of adjournment of the present session, the Senate has not yet had an opportunity to pass meaningful civil rights legislation. Like a broken record, the same theme has been played again and again. The Constitutional Rights Subcommittee has voted out a bill, albeit woefully inadequate, after extensive hearings, and thereupon the filibuster in the full Judiciary Committee has been going strong.

In light of this situation, we welcome the actions which have been taken to bypass the Judiciary Committee. It now appears likely that through one route or another the Senate may have the opportunity to act on civil rights legislation before it adjourns.

Because of the timing of the probable action, however, we are greatly disturbed over the possibility that the Senate might feel compelled to accept so little substantively that the final product would be a civil rights bill in name only. If the issue comes to the floor of the Senate just prior to an announced adjournment target, we urge the friends of civil rights not to be stampeded into accepting a token civil rights bill.

Although men of good will may disagree on the last details of a meaningful bill for 1959, we think that there really is no room for disagreement on the imperative need to include in any bill provisions for explicit and substantial implementation of the school desegregation decisions which have now been the law of the land for more than 5 years. The most effective provision thus far proposed towards this end is the part III which was struck from the 1957 bill. Events since then have only underlined the need for this provision giving the Attorney General authority to institute civil actions on behalf of those whose rights have been denied.

Part III is included in the amendment to S. 2391 which Senator HENNINGS has already offered to the Senate for calling up at any time and on any bill. This amendment, as a matter of fact, includes all of S. 810, the Douglas-Javits-Humphrey-Case bill. We support this amendment as the most complete and meaningful "package" of civil rights proposals and earnestly request your support for it, and, if the parliamentary situation should develop that way, against tabling it.

The newspapers have been speculating for some time now about a possible package which will be offered by the leadership of the Senate on both sides of the aisle. We cannot, of course, appraise a proposal which has not been unveiled. We feel compelled to state, however, that if the press reports of its probable contents are accurate, this token bill will be opposed by civil-rights groups of the Nation. No other proposal, written or rumored, packaged or separate, which omits backing for the law of the land as contained in the Hennings amendment we endorse can win the backing of those seeking vindication of rights protected by the Constitution.

Regardless of the particular parliamentary situation which may develop, we call upon the friends of civil rights not to yield to adjournment jitters, to filibuster threats, to cries for party harmony, or any other excuse for doing less than is morally justified at this crucial moment in the battle for human rights.

Sincerely yours,

Roy Wilkins, Chairman, Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, and Executive Secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; American Civil Liberties Union, Patrick Murphy Malin, Executive Director; American Council on Human Rights, Mrs. Aretha B. McKinley, Director; American Jewish Committee, John Slawson, Executive Director; American Veterans Committee, Irving Lechliter, Executive Director; Americans for Democratic Action, Joseph L. Rauh, Vice Chairman for Civil Rights; Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, Analee Stewart, Washington Representative; American Jewish Congress, Isaac Tobin, Executive Director; Friends Committee on National Legislation, E. Raymond Wilson, Executive Secretary; Japanese American Citizens League, Mike Masaoka, Washington Representative; International Union of Electrical Radio and Machine Workers, James B. Carey, President; Jewish War Veterans, Bernard Weitzer, National Legislative Director; National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary; United Auto Workers of America, Walter Reuther, President; Committee on Civil Rights, United Steelworkers of America, Francis Shane, Executive Secretary; Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, A. Philip Randolph, President.

(These signatures are authorized.)

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the key to the whole letter is the deep feeling that now is the time—unless we are going to let the country down—when we must enact civil rights legislation. In that connection, I read the concluding paragraph of the letter:

> Regardless of the particular parliamentary situation which may develop, we call upon the friends of civil rights not to yield to adjournment jitters, to filibuster threats, to cries for party harmony, or any other excuse for doing less than is morally justified at this crucial moment in the battle for human rights.

Mr. President, the letter makes perfectly clear to all of us that what they are talking about is not just a civil rights label, but a meaningful civil rights bill which will include part III which was stricken cut of the 1957 bill, and which is now shown to all of us to be urgently required in order to give the Attorney General authority to institute civil actions on behalf of those whose civil rights have been denied.

I conclude by stating, as I have said before, that no consideration in regard to ending the session or going home or doing anything else or not being here when Mr. Khrushchev is in town—which I, myself, think is of very small moment—should prevent us from enacting at this session a meaningful civil rights bill. No one can guarantee that it can be done; but at least we can seek to make a successful try.

I must state here and now that we have every reason to expect that civil rights legislation will be called up by the leadership before we adjourn but if we have no other opportunity to bring up civil rights legislation, I have proposed to afford the Senate such an opportunity by means of the resolution to discharge the Judiciary Committee from the further consideration of the civil rights bill, which resolution is now on the calendar.

MEETING OUR NATION'S WATER RESOURCE NEEDS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Montana may be recognized for 3 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, the veto of the public works appropriation bill and the failure of the House of Representatives to override it constitute a grievous setback for the entire Nation.

The development, conservation, and wise use of natural resources are basic to the strength of every nation. The United States has strength for freedom in international affairs, because we have strength at home. From the start of our Nation, we have grown through the will and the courage to develop our natural resources for productive uses. This is the core of national policy, and we dare not let the veto become an epitaph of our Nation's growth and progress.

There must be new starts, because they are our investments in national resources. Like the business organizations that fail when they cease to invest in new production capacity, a nation stag-nates when it ceases to develop its resources.

To brand the public works appropriations bill as "overspending in respect to water resources" is both false and dangerous. It is dangerous because it threatens to trap us into continuing underdevelopment of our resources, continuing lost production, and lost opportunities to conserve and develop our resources.

The paramount issue is that the Nation must maintain the basis of its strength and well-being. The administration asserts that the United States is unable to provide for the water-resource developments that are needed by our people. This misstatement and other distortions of the facts misrepresent the issues.

The veto is a harsh denial of the needs of every section of the United States. The appropriation bill passed by the Congress responded to widespread needs for water-resource development, and it would have financed the most urgent projects within the amount of the President's budget request.

This veto and the failure to override it will mean continued restriction of natural-resource programs, contrary to the intent of Congress.

The public works appropriation bill passed by the Congress is an economical measure—too frugal, in my view. In responding to the widespread need for water projects, by breaking through the iron curtain of "no new starts," the bill stayed within 3 percent of the budget estimate transmitted by the President. This fact refutes the charge of "overspending."

There is no excuse for the accusation of "overspending" for natural resources. We know from our own experience that the United States has ample capacity to carry out necessary resource development and conservation. There also is authoritative advice from business and financial leaders and from outstanding economists that we have the ability to develop needed resources, and that such development increases the national income and the Government revenues.

The preceding administrations of President Roosevelt and President Truman joined with the Congress in extending natural-resource programs. They started the projects on which this administration has been coasting. Even the Colorado River storage project, for which the present administration seeks credit, was planned and prepared for congressional authorization under President Truman.

In place of vigorous natural-resource programs of the preceding administrations, this administration suppresses them. It has reversed the trend. In 1950, the budget requests for the Bureau of Reclamation and the Corps of Engineers amounted to 2½ percent of the total budget; but this year they amounted to less than 1½ percent.

The veto is directed against the increase provided in the appropriation bill passed by the Congress, but even with that increase the water resource program for 1960 would be short of the 1950 level.

The veto message is pointed against the cost of the new starts; but the total cost of the reclamation new starts, with the funds to be expended over a number of years, would be only as much as the cost of a single year's reclamation construction program of 10 years ago.

The "no new starts" program that has prevailed for 7 years is not an economy program. It is a program that wastes human and natural resources. It does not husband public funds; instead, it minimizes public revenues. This restrictive program hoards money while it dissipates resources.

For 7 years, "no new starts" has been a gate barred against the needs for all sections of the country. Unsatisfied needs for irrigation, for municipal and industrial water supplies, for flood control, for navigation, and for hydroelectric power have accumulated; and now they constitute a major deficiency in the economy.

The administration's refusal to undertake these needed projects has denied to millions of our citizens opportunities for better living conditions and useful employment. Production has been restrained, for lack of developed water resources; new income has been missed; and tax revenues have been lost.

In many quarters, there is lack of understanding of the necessary relation between national growth and new investment in resource development—and that means new starts. This is the same necessary relationship that exists in the business world between investment in new production capacity and industrial prosperity.

The United States is growing rapidly. Soon our population will be 250 million. Production must increase with population growth and with the increased requirements for civilian and defense uses. Our national capabilities have grown, too. Our gross national product—the sum of the goods and services produced—approaches the $500 billion mark. These facts certainly do not support the veto statement that the appropriation bill "ignores the necessity of orderly development of America's water resources within the Nation's fiscal ability."

Two weeks ago, I introduced Senate bill 2549, the proposed Natural Resources and Conservation Act. One of the purposes of that measure, Mr. President, is to forestall the sort of error that is perpetrated in the veto of the public works appropriation bill. Enactment of Senate bill 2549 will provide the Congress, the executive branch, and the people with an authoritative, factual appraisal of what development and conservation measures are needed by the country and what means should be used for their accomplishment. Enactment of that measure should clear up a great deal of the misunderstanding about new starts, and it should put them in a sound relationship to national growth.

Hearings on the proposed Natural Resources and Conservation Act will proceed during the fall, in order to provide for full discussion by responsible officials and leading citizens. It is my hope that the bill may be reported to the Senate for early action.

The veto of the public works appropriation bill, again shutting out needed water projects, warns us of the urgency of revitalizing natural-resource programs. We must assure that needed development and conservation measures will proceed, and that they will be measured by sound and courageous standards in the American tradition.

Only by this means will the United States remain strong at home and abroad—a bastion of free people everywhere.

CONDITIONS IN THE MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I am certain every Member of the Congress who is at all informed knows of the precarious state of our mining industry. An adequate supply of metals from within our own borders is a keystone to our security for defense in war and our prosperity and progress in peace.

Yet, as the result of foreign policies over which the Congress has been able to exercise little, if any, control up to this time, our once great mining industry has gone from very bad to much worse. A further proof of this fact is one of the leading articles in the business and financial section of the New York Times for Sunday, August 30. This article is illustrated by several pictures, one of which spreads over four columns. This picture shows a small group of students attending a lecture at the Montana School of Mines—one of the great mining schools of our country, Mr. President—and the caption points out that there now are only four or five candidates for mining degrees in each of our leading schools.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the article in the New York Times be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ENGINEERS STEER AWAY FROM MINES—CAREER IN INDUSTRY LOSES APPEAL AGAINST GLAMOR, PAY OF SPACE FIELDS

(By Jack R. Ryan)

The future of mining engineering is beginning to look a little shaky, judging from the meager amount of new blood being pumped into the profession.

It's one of the oldest, and certainly among the most basic, of all branches of engineering, charged with the vital task of seeking out and recovering the mineral raw materials of industry and defense.

But in the midst of all the ballyhoo over rocketry and space-age science, mining engineering apparently has lost much of its allure.

This year, throughout the Nation, only 208 new mining engineers received their first degrees (usually bachelor of science), according to the Engineering Manpower Commission. That compared with 469 only 8 years ago. Total first degrees in all branches of engineering exceeded 35,000 annually in recent years.

It is true that most other engineering branches also posted declines from the levels of the early 1950's, when graduation rolls were swelled by veterans finishing their work under the GI bill. But no branch had anywhere near the drop experienced by mining.

CLASSES SMALL

Several of the 29 fully accredited colleges and universities offering mining degrees graduated only 1 to 6 new engineers last June. Some had more professors than graduates. Columbia University here, which once conferred bachelor's degrees on 50 to 100 a year in mining engineering, this spring awarded only 5. The School of Mines at Columbia was founded in 1864, was the first of its kind in the United States and is the oldest engineering department at the university.

Why has the profession lost the popularity it once had among the bright young men seeking their fortunes? Engineers, educators, and industry executives, asked that question last week in a series of interviews, offered dozens of reasons.

Mining cannot compete just now with the glamor fields—rocketry and the advanced chemistry and electronics that support it, they said. The starting salaries may be as high as in other traditional forms of engineering (some young engineers dispute this), but they are still below those being offered in the new nuclear and space-age fields.

OLDTIMERS COMPLAIN

Some oldtimers in the metals industry complained that today's youngsters lacked the venturesome spirit that fired the mining engineers of 40 years ago.

"Nowadays all some kids think about is security," said one copper executive. "They used to be more concerned with the chance to strike it rich, of becoming boss of the mine, of making their own way rapidly in the world even if it involved a few risks."

But a younger mining engineer retorted, in a typical comment:

"The kids wouldn't mind being exiled to some lonely mine out in the cactus or the jungle if the rewards were commensurate with the hardship.

"But what usually happens? The new engineer gets stuck with underground surveying or sampling for months or years.

"Only a few companies are doing any real research that would provide challenging, professional work—the kind he could find quickly in aircraft or chemistry, for example. And with so many little mining companies swallowed up by the big ones these days, what are the real chances any more of striking it rich or becoming a boy-wonder boss?"

Others said the lack of economic continuity in the profession had discouraged many. They noted that during the recent recession, many mining engineers—and not the newcomers alone—were laid off. If the present widespread strikes in the major nonferrous metals companies continued long, more engineers would be out of jobs, too, they predicted.

"These engineers should be looked on as part of a company's permanent investment," said one who now holds an important editorial post in the field. "In times of strikes or recessions, they should be put to work trying to cut mining costs or reduce safety hazards or doing some other kind of essential research—not just laid off."

William A. Vine, professor of mining engineering at the Montana School of Mines, suggested that many of the young men who were not choosing mining engineering as such were branching off into allied specialties, such as geology, geophysical engineering, petroleum engineering and so on, and were being graduated in those fields.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND

Some mining executives shrug off the problem, say it's one of simple supply and demand: when a real shortage of mining engineers develops, salaries and other incentives will be forced up and students will flock into the profession.

Other observers, pondering the long-range future of the minerals industry, have been voicing increasing concern recently. Who, they ask, is going to provide the Nation's metals, mineral chemicals, and fuels a decade or two from now when ore bodies have become leaner and deeper and harder to find?

One asking such questions is Roger V. Pierce, a well-known Salt Lake City consulting engineer and a national vice president of the American Institute of Mining, Metallurgical and Petroleum Engineers. He believes that one of these days, the easy-to-mine deposits abroad—being mined for their high-grade ore now, the way ours were 35 years ago—will be depleted to the point that leaner ores still available here will be in urgent demand.

"We're not training the boys now for that coming period when we'll need them," he said. "We're not preparing the future minerals engineers to keep up with other industries. We don't stop training Army, Navy and Air Force officers just because we're not currently fighting a hot war, do we?"

SCHOOL SHIFT URGED

In speeches to engineering and college groups of several States, Mr. Pierce has been urging that the 29 present accredited schools giving mining degrees be consolidated into 6 or less. These, he says, should be strategically placed so that students could get first-hand training in commercial mining operations, and should be supported financially by the Federal Government and by industry through endowment funds.

"Ninety percent or more of our mining engineers are coming from State-supported schools, not one of which has enough money to put a first-class faculty on the campus," he contends.

Nathaniel Arbiter, professor of mineral engineering at Columbia, is concerned over what he sees as the dwindling supply of qualified students to conduct research in ore beneficiation and extractive metallurgy. Such research is flourishing abroad, he reports, and is being given massive support by governments in the Communist bloc.

Clyde E. Weed, chairman of the Anaconda Co., and himself a mining engineer, said there were still "rare opportunities" for young engineers in his company.

"The kind of young man who will succeed is the kind of fellow who is interested in adventure, not security," he said last week. "He's concerned with creativity, not the comfort of routine. He's a gambler of his energies on the calculated risk. He's capable of living with a quiet confidence and self-sufficiency in remote areas. He delights in the prospect of giving life to barren lands. He wants opportunity in life, not somebody's plan."

PUBLIC WORKS APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I was greatly disappointed and distressed by the action taken by President Eisenhower in vetoing the public works appropriation bill. I thought it was a good bill because it looked to the future and provided for the continued orderly development of our natural resources. It represented an investment in America which would have benefited our own people. As far as I am concerned the members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations should have absolutely no regrets about the public works appropriation bill which they sent to the White House.

The veto of this money bill is a great blow to the people of my State. It not only provided funds for continued construction of projects, like the Helena Valley unit and the second powerplant at Fort Peck Dam in Montana, but it also provided funds for a modest start on the East Bench unit at Dillon in the southwestern part of the Treasure State.

The bill that the President vetoed was not a spender's bill. We in Montana had reconciled ourselves to the fact that we could not get everything we wanted. For instance, we have the finest multipurpose project in the Nation ready for construction—Yellowtail Dam. We wanted to see it started this year, but because it is such a large project and it would have considerable effect on the reclamation program, the Appropriations Committees felt, in their wisdom, that this project should wait a year.

On the other hand, we have the East Bench unit in the Beaverhead. It is a fully repayable irrigation project. The Congress provided an appropriation of $1 milion to begin work on the project in the current fiscal year. It is not a big project as its total estimated cost is slightly in excess of $20 million. A new start for East Bench is not going to bust anybody's budget.

Secretary of the Interior Seaton reports in the press that East Bench unit is one of eight projects that he will request funds for in the next fiscal year. This is fine but another year may be too late. In addition, the Secretary's request may not be cleared by the all-powerful Bureau of the Budget.

If we have to wait another year it is very likely that the cost of the project will be increased an additional $2 million. The State highway department in Montana has planned for some time to start construction of a new defense highway in the area of the proposed reservoir in November of this year. They have been persuaded to postpone this project 1 year so that their plans can be coordinated with the location of the dam and reservoir which will be created by East Bench. Any more delay will be expensive because the operation and maintenance of the old road is expensive and the timetable of the interstate highway program does not provide for extended delay. Unless construction funds are provided so that the Union Pacific Railroad can be relocated, this highway must then be routed through the proposed reservoir. The highway cannot be relocated around the proposed reservoir prior to relocation of the railroad because of excessive costs for crossing structures and acquisition of necessary rights-of-way.

In addition to the engineering facts that support the construction of this project this year, it is important to remember that this project will mean a great deal to the economy of the area. East Bench unit will provide new and supplemental irrigation for 49,804 acres of land. This will bring new land under cultivation in a State which at present has only 2 percent of its gross land area, or about 13 percent of all the cropland, under irrigation. It will not produce products which are now in surplus supply. The economy of the Dillon area, in addition to mining, is largely livestock, predominantly cattle, which are not under any Federal Government support program. A major portion of the area is devoted to the production of hay and pasture for stock. Grains grown in the area are also practically all used for stock feeding. The construction of the East Bench unit would greatly increase livestock production and stabilize the economy of this area.

Mr. President, before concluding I would like to discuss something which concerns me greatly. Each time public works appropriations are considered I get the impression from so many that we are appropriating funds for subsidized projects. They are not, they are an investment in the future development of our Nation. These appropriations are not grants of Federal money, they are loans and the cost of these projects is fully repaid with interest. This is done by the irrigation districts through repayment contracts which are signed before any work is ever done on the project. In the case of large multipurpose projects a large part of the repayment is received from the sale of hydroelectric power.

In western Montana we have a large multipurpose project which is paying for itself, in fact it is ahead of schedule in its repayment schedule. I speak of Hungry Horse Dam. I am justly proud of this project. It is a real investment in the future of western Montana because it has provided flood control, regulation of the flow of waterways, recreation, and above all it has expanded the economic base of Flathead Lake area of the State. There are several new industries brought in because of this new source of power. They have provided employment, expanded the tax base and contributed to the economic development of the local communities.

The public works appropriation bill the President vetoed provided for an orderly development of our resources, benefiting millions of Americans.

I cannot help but express the wish that the United States would realize as many benefits from its foreign aid grant program as we do from the development of our own natural resources. If we are to grow and prosper in the eyes of the world we are also going to have to do something here at home.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have an editorial which appeared in the August 31 issue of the Billings Gazette printed at the conclusion of my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY GET ACTION NEXT YEAR ON YELLOWTAIL DAM

In an address before the Senate, Monday, August 17, Senator MIKE MANSFIELD, of Montana, expressed disappointment over the failure of a Senate-House conference committee to agree upon appropriation of $3 million for making a start on the construction of Yellowtail Dam in the canyon of the Big Horn River some 40 miles southwest of Hardin in Big Horn County. The Senate Committee on Appropriations included an allocation of the funds in a measure previously approved by Public Works Subcommittee, but when the bill went to a conference committee, the House members of that committee declined to accept the item which was, therefore, deleted from the bill.

Replying to the statement by Senator MANSIELD, Senator CARL HAYDEN of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and also chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Works, explained why it was not considered feasible to make the appropriation at the current session but did say that the funds for starting actual construction of the dam should be made available for the 1960–61 fiscal year.

The cost of this project is fixed at $100 million, but, unless this inflationary spiral is reversed, that cost may rise as time goes on. Also, the history of many of these Government dam projects shows that in all too many instances, the final cost of the undertaking greatly exceeds the estimated cost made at the time the project was authorized. This has something or other to do with the way many of the bureaus of our Federal Government transact business.

It may be assumed that most of the older residents of this section of Montana and some of the later arrivals know the history of the Yellowtail Dam project. Actually, agitation for the construction of this dam was begun not too long after the Reclamation Bureau in the Department of the Interior was established in 1902. There was much to recommend the construction of this dam. First was the advantage which would accrue from the reclamation of several thousand acres of semiarid land. Next was the fact that the site of the structure up there in the Big Horn Canyon was one of the most nearly ideal to be found anywhere in these Western States.

The construction of projects of that kind in States of the West and particularly the Great Plains area, for the irrigation of arid and semiarid lands was the chief reason for the establishment of the Reclamation Bureau under the terms of a measure introduced by Senator Newlands, of Nevada. During his second term, 1905–11, Senator Thomas H. Carter, of Montana, did much toward establishing that Bureau on a firm foundation and for obtaining money for the lower Yellowstone, Huntley, and Sun River projects in Montana.

John Harris, a resident of Hardin until he moved to Chicago in his later years, spent years trying to promote a start on Yellowtail Dam. He made repeated trips to Washington during those years and really kept alive the movement favoring the dam even when success appeared all but hopeless to most of the other backers of the plan.

Harris made some trips to the National Capital while the writer was down there and once, during a vacation period, took us up to the site of the proposed dam. It was then a rugged trip but worth the trouble.

The engineers for the Reclamation Bureau have long recognized the merit of the plan for building a dam up there and have conducted exhaustive surveys and done considerable other preliminary work, but efforts to get started on the project were stymied by an inability to reach an agreement with members of the Crow Indian Council on the damsite and the land to be inundated by the lake created by the dam construction.

While there are some differences between the Federal Government and the Indian council still to be disposed of, there is no longer any substantial hindrance to the start of construction except the lack of an appropriation of funds by the Government and, as Senator HAYDEN has promised our Montana congressional delegation, that will probably be forthcoming after the next session of Congress—at least a sum sufficient to make a good start on the project.

Yellowtail will be a multipurpose dam as are most of those now being constructed by the Federal Government. In addition to making possible the irrigation of a large area of land, it will be equipped with generators to produce a great deal of electric power and serve as an important unit of the upper Missouri River flood-control system.

The hundred million or more dollars to be spent for the construction of the dam and the additional sums required to construct an irrigation system and facilities for the generation of electric energy will contribute greatly to the economic progress of this southeastern section of Montana. The progressive little city of Hardin will share with Billings many of the advantages resulting from this project. Members of the Crow Indian Tribe are already assured of a substantial sum of cash for the damsite and land which they will surrender to the Federal Government.

CONDITIONS IN THE STEEL INDUSTRY

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter appearing in the Washington Post of August 23 and one appearing on August 25. The former entitled "Inflation and Steel Prices," is by Eugene Havas, formerly economic adviser to the Royal Hungarian Embassy, contributor to the London Economist and well-known financial and investment consultant. In his letter, Mr. Havas reaches the conclusion that, at the present levels of demand, existing steel capacity, financed largely by consumers and taxpayers, is excessive; that the steel companies, recognizing this fact, have raised their prices to such a level that they can make substantial profits while operating well below capacity. Mr. Havas calls attention to the recent report in Great Britain of the council of "three wise men" criticizing prosperous British companies for paying higher dividends instead of lowering prices. He ends with this provocative question:

With our steel companies preparing for stock splits and increasing dividends again, is it not high time that we have a fact-finding board on prices and productivity and an authority to defend the consumer from corporate exploitation to reverse the inflationary expectations caused by the unrestrained profit appetite of the steel industry?

The letter of the 25th is by Prof. Allan G. Gruchy, professor of economics at the University of Maryland. Professor Gruchy points out that as long as the steel companies pay high dividends while at the same time forcing the consumer to pay for their capital expansion the industry will continue to insist that its profits are not excessive. Professor Gruchy calls attention to a new report from Norway on the control of inflation written by an economist at the University of Oslo and three government officials. Speaking of this report, Professor Gruchy writes:

The conclusion of this very significant report is that the inflation problem will never be solved, even where there is a fairly extensive system of economic controls as in Norway and Sweden, until labor, management, and government are willing to come together to agree upon how the earnings of industry are to be shared by both sides and the public in those lines of economic activity where the forces of competition are no longer effective in their control of the market.

This is essentially the same problem which I have discussed in previous remarks, namely how to distribute the gains of technological progress among management, labor and consumers in noncompetitive industries where the allocation is not made automatically by the unseen hand of competition. Apparently, this problem is not confined to the United States but has been a source of some concern at least in Great Britain and Norway as well.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 23, 1959]

INFLATION AND STEEL PRICES

The senior economist of the Federal Reserve Board, Winfield Riefler, in a recent address dealing with inflation and growth stated that misallocation of funds for excessive capacity building is one of the recent forces of inflationary expectations.

What I believe is even worse than the funds diverted to such purposes is the source of such funds and the manner they are used to exploit the consumer from whom these funds are exacted in the form of higher prices in our economy which is neither free nor market determined.

Besides the cost to the consumer these quasi monopolistic highly concentrated industries financed a considerable part of their excess capacity from the accelerated depreciation allowances, causing billions of revenue losses which the Treasury can ill afford and could have used for better purposes.

Apart from the steadily rising cost of living this built-in inflation in excess capacity production is also causing evil social consequences. We are just becoming aware of it in the present steel dispute. Steel capacity is about 145–150 million tons but only 85 million tons were produced last year. That is less than 60 percent of capacity.

In the first half of this year the industry was operating at 87½ percent capacity and produced about 64 million tons of steel. Without the strike the total annual production would have reached probably 115 million tons in view of the general economic recovery. This is, however, less than 80 percent of the overbuilt steel capacity so that the industry can produce advantageously all the economy needs in about 9 months and be idle for 2 or 3 months.

Thus through this excess capacity built from the consumer and the taxpayer's involuntary contributions the steel industry is able and willing to force a showdown from this socially questionable position of strength in its dispute with the steelworkers which can only lead to permanent bitterness in industrial labor relations.

Even before the strike started the trade paper Iron Age warned management not to try to regain at this time all it bargained away in 18 years. The industry's self-styled noninflationary contract offer is not fair. It denies to the consumer and the worker any share of the tremendous productivity increase obtained in the first 6 months of 1959 which sent profits to an all-time high. Big and small steel mills rivaled each other in the record earnings which surpassed the total profits for the full year of 1958 in the first half of 1959. Even more significant is the fact that the industry earned more profits producing 64 million tons in 6 months than 85 million tons last year.

The industry is offering small wage increases and pension benefits to the steelworkers if they would consent to working rule changes. Thus the industry is contradicting its own platform that all wage increases, no matter how small, are inflationary. It proves that the management wants to have its cake and eat it, too.

In Great Britain the government appointed a council of three "wise men" 2 years ago to review prices and productivity. In their last report the nation's industrialists were told that it is particularly regrettable that at this time the prosperous companies are paying higher dividends instead of cutting prices.

With our steel companies preparing for stock splits and increasing dividends again, is it not high time that we have a fact-finding board on prices and productivity and an authority to defend the consumer from corporate exploitation to reverse the inflationary expectations caused by the unrestrained profit appetite of the steel industry?

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 25, 1959]

ECONOMICS OF STEEL

As long as the steel industry insists upon paying high dividends and at the same time retaining large undistributed profits to finance a major portion of its capital expansion, the industry will continue to insist that profits are not excessive.

More financing of capital expansion through the issuance of securities to the public rather than through the accumulation of undistributed profits would mean a smaller need to build up earned surpluses, and would make possible wage rate increases without raising steel prices.

Any profits above the level needed to attract new capital and to finance capital expansion should be made available for (1) wage rate increases related to improvements in productivity, (2) reductions in the price of steel, or (3) a combination of the two. Since neither the steel industry nor the steelworkers' union is in a good position to make unbiased studies of the profit requirements of the steel industry, the Government should assume responsibility for these studies.

After such studies have been completed, a settlement of the strike that would be reasonable in terms of wages, steel prices, and profits could be arrived at only through negotiations by management and labor within an economic framework based upon the Government's investigation of the steel industry's profits.

It is interesting to observe that this is precisely the direction in which the wage-price-profit issue is moving in the Scandinavian countries.

A most interesting report on the control of inflation, written by the well-known economist Trygve Haavelmo of the University of Oslo and three government officials, has recently come out of Norway.

The conclusion of this very significant report is that the inflation problem will never be solved, even where there is a fairly extensive system of economic controls as in Norway and Sweden, until labor, management, and government are willing to come together to agree upon how the earnings of industry are to be shared by both sides and the public in those lines of economic activity where the forces of competition are no longer effective in their control of the market.

The report goes on to assert that the problem of inflation in Norway, and we might say the same thing for the United States, cannot be met until there is negotiation within an appropriate overall economic framework such as we do not yet have available to management and labor in our key industries.

Until collective bargaining in this country is raised above the current level of a two-party squabble, there can be no hope for wage settlements without inflationary consequences.

EXTENSION OF AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1748) to extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, and for other purposes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, early this year the Department of Agriculture sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a suggestion that Public Law 480, the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act, merely be extended for 1 year, with a title I authorization increase of $1,500 million and a title II authorization increase of $300 million for that year. The present authorization expires on December 31 of this year.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Acting Counsel of the Department of Agriculture outlining that suggestion be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter referred to was ordered to be printed, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D.C.

Mr. HARKER T. STANTON,
Counsel, Agriculture and Forestry Committee, U.S. Senate.

DEAR MR. STANTON: There is transmitted herewith a draft of a bill, together with an explanation thereof, that would put into effect the proposal for extending Public Law 480 in accordance with the President's agricultural message and the testimony of the Secretary at the hearing before the committee.

The draft legislation would extend title I of Public Law 480 for 1 year and increase the amount authorized to be expended under title I by $1,500 million. The draft legislation would also extend title II of Public Law 480 for 1 year and would increase the amount authorized to be expended under title II from $800 million to $1,100 million.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD M. SHULMAN,
Acting General Counsel.

Mr. ELLENDER. If the bill as reported by the committee were passed in its present form, title I would be extended for 1 year—that is, up to December 31, 1960, with an authorization of $1,500 million; and title II would be extended for 1 year, with an additional authorization of $300 million.

On the day the committee reported the bill, the Department sent us another letter, suggesting that the bill be expanded—that is, that certain amendments be added to the bill. The committee had no time to look into the proposed amendments, because, as I have said, they arrived in the committee room only about 10 minutes before we acted on the bill.

The amendments proposed would permit the purchase of materials for the United States for civil defense purposes; and a new section would be added, in order to utilize foreign currencies to purchase nonfood emergency relief. A third suggested amendment was that a new section be added, to authorize grants of commodities under title I for national food reserves.

I ask unanimous consent that this second letter, dated July 14, 1959, be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter referred to was ordered to be printed, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D.C., July 14, 1959.

Hon. ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, U.S. Senate.

DEAR SENATOR ELLENDER: On April 17, 1959, the General Counsel of this Department furnished the Counsel of your committee a draft of legislation to carry out the President's recommendations for extension of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, as amended (Public Law 480, 83d Cong.). On April 21 you introduced this draft as S. 1748.

Subsequently the Department has given further study to this proposed legislation, particularly in connection with its relationship to the Food for Peace program recommended by the President. As a result of the further study, which was conducted in cooperation with interested Government agencies, we wish to recommend the enactment of S. 1748 in an amended form. For your convenience we are enclosing a copy of the bill as it would be amended.

It is proposed that (1) section 103(b) be amended to increase the title I authority by $1.5 billion; (2) section 109 be amended to extend the terminal date through which title I transactions can be undertaken from December 31, 1959, to December 31, 1960; (3) section 104(b) be amended to permit the purchase of materials for U.S. civil defense purposes; (4) new section 104(p) be added to permit use of foreign currencies for nonfood emergency relief; and (5) new section 110 be added to authorize grants of commodities under title I for national food reserves.

Title I of Public Law 480 authorizes the President to enter into agreements with friendly nations or organizations of friendly nations to provide for the sale of surplus agricultural commodities for foreign currencies. The current authorization of $2¼ billion expires on December 31, 1959.

The request for the additional $1.5 billion and the extension of the terminal date is presented at this time in order to permit orderly programing and shipment of agricultural commodities without interruption to those areas of the world which are urgently in need of these commodities. The surplus situation with respect to many commodities will worsen in the foreseeable future. The carryover of wheat, feed grains, cotton, and other commodities will continue high and will be considerably larger than our ability to sell them for dollars. The Commodity Credit Corporation's investment in agricultural commodities was reduced to about $7 billion on June 30, 1958, from a previous high of nearly $9 billion. This investment, however, is now rising rapidly and is expected to continue to rise.

The requested extension and increase in authorization will permit title I sales to continue at the same rate currently authorized. Every effort will be made, consistent with the objectives of the Food for Peace program, to maximize the utilization of our surpluses, however, and any additional authorization needed will be requested of the Congress before the end of the fiscal year 1960.

Amendment of section 104(b) is required to facilitate the acquisition of materials and products which should be stockpiled as essential to the survival of the civilian population in event of nuclear attack on the United States. To the extent that foreign currencies could be used for this purpose, the amendment would eliminate the need for dollar appropriations.

New section 104(p) is required to permit the President to more fully meet the emergency needs of friendly peoples abroad. Food can be donated quickly under title II of Public Law 480; however, this additional use of foreign currencies generated by title I sales is necessary to furnish blankets, medicines, and other nonfood items in times of emergency.

In furtherance of the President's Food for Peace program, new section 110 is requested to allow grants of food to underdeveloped countries for national food reserves, under terms requiring such food to be paid for if it is used for other than to meet agreed emergency needs.

In order to permit continuation of the useful activities which have been possible under title II of Public Law 480 (relating to famine relief and other emergency assistance), it is proposed that section 203 be amended by increasing the authority by $300 million; it is proposed that section 204 be amended by extending the terminal date for undertaking such programs from December 31, 1959, to December 31, 1960.

In furtherance of the President's Food for Peace program, amendment of section 202 is requested to authorize broader use of grants for economic development. The principal effect of this amendment would be greater use of commodities to assist in the funding of works projects.

An additional amendment of section 203 is requested to permit payment of general average claims under title II. Such claims for loss or damage on part of a ship's cargo are distributed among all owners of cargo on the ship. Since commodities are donated for humanitarian purposes under title II, it is believed desirable that the United States pay these charges rather than the recipient country. Such claims are infrequent and involve relatively small amounts.

Enactment of the proposed legislation would result in no increase in employment or administrative costs in the fiscal year 1960. The cost of shipments recorded by CCC against the proposed authorizations in the fiscal year 1960 is estimated at about $50 million. Additional shipments with a cost of more than $1 billion are expected to be recorded during that year against previous authorizations.

A copy of these proposed amendments is being submitted to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations at the request of Senator HUMPHREY.

The Bureau of the Budget advises that enactment of the proposed legislation would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

TRUE D. MORSE,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. ELLENDER. After the Agriculture Committee reported our bill, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] in his capacity as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee held hearings on a bill similar to the existing law, Public Law 480, the Foreign Relations Committe reported a bill, paralleling existing law, except for the declaration of policy.

The Senator from Minnesota and other Members proposed to change the title of the bill to make it a Food for Peace program, instead of a surplus disposal program designed to develop trade in surplus agricultural commodities.

After Senator HUMPHREY's bill was reported to the Senate, the Senator from Minnesota—who, as I said, happens to be a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, as well as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry—requested that the Agriculture Committee consider certain amendments to the bill we previously reported. As chairman of the committee, I readily consented. The committee, by a narrow margin, voted out several amendments, which I understand will be offered by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota. In due time it will probably be my purpose to accept some of those amendments, and to oppose others.

Mr. President, Public Law 480 was enacted in 1954, and it was designed primarily to expand international trade, encourage economic development, pay U.S. obligations abroad, promote collective security, foster foreign policy, and relieve famine and need at home and abroad.

Title I of Public Law 480 provides for the sale of surplus agricultural commodities for foreign currencies.

The foreign currencies received in payment for commodities are deposited to the account of the United States overseas and are used for purposes authorized in section 104 of Public Law 480 and specified in the sales agreement. Several departments and agencies have responsibility for administering the expenditure of these currencies. For example, the Department of Agriculture is concerned with the use of currencies for agricultural market development purposes; the International Cooperation Administration for currencies loaned back to importing countries for economic development purposes; and the Export-Import Bank of Washington for currencies loaned to private business firms.

As of June 30, 1959, agreements have been signed with foreign countries totaling $3.7 billion. Of this amount only about 1.4 percent has been programed for use in market development, while 8.3 percent has been programed for use in military procurement; 6.3 percent for grants for multitrade and economic development; 6 percent for loans to private enterprise; 27.4 percent for payment of U.S. obligations; 47.7 percent for loans to foreign governments; and 2.9 percent for other uses as specified under section 104. The actual amounts and percentages for each purpose by country can be found in table I, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[2] In order to provide flexibility in the use of funds, agreements concluded July 1958 to June 1959 provide that a specified amount of foreign currency proceeds may be used under various U.S. use categories including the new currency uses which are limited to amounts as may be specified in appropriation acts. Distribution among these uses will be made when allocations have been completed.

[3] Amounts shown in this column may differ from amounts in table I which reflects purchase authorization transactions.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, not all of these moneys have actually been allocated by the Bureau of the Budget. As a matter of fact only about $3 billion has actually been allocated. A breakdown of the amount and percentage by use of funds actually allocated can be found in table II, which I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated as a part of my remarks at this point.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the committee was very much interested in the amount of funds being used for agricultural market development, and pointed out in the report that it is the intent of Congress that foreign currencies be used to the maximum extent possible for this purpose.

TITLE I

Under title I, agreements signed since the beginning of the program provide for the shipment of 840 million bushels of wheat, 4 million bales of cotton, 33.5 million bags of rice, 3.3 billion pounds of vegetable oil, 210 million bushels of feed grains, 250 million pounds of tobacco, 120 million pounds of meat, 180 million pounds of lard, 285 million pounds of dairy products, 175 million pounds of fruit and vegetables, as well as other commodities.

In 1955 and 1956, the first full year of operation of title I, foreign currency shipments totaled $427 million at export market value, or 12 percent of total U.S. agricultural exports. During 1956 and 1957 title I shipments amounted to $900 million, nearly 20 percent of the total; during 1957 and 1958, about $650 million, approximately 16 percent; and during 1958 and 1959, $725 million, about 20 percent.

For certain commodities the program has been particularly important. For example, more than half the total U.S. wheat exports during the past fiscal year, or about 230 million bushels, moved under title I; also, about 750 million pounds of soybean oil and cottonseed oil, or about 65 percent of total edible oil exports; about one-third of rice exports; and one-fifth of cotton shipments.

The value and quantity of commodities which have been programed under agreements signed during fiscal year 1959, and cumulative totals, are shown in tables III and IV, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TITLE II

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, title II of Public Law 480, at the present time, authorizes the use of up to $800 million of commodities held in stock by Commodity Credit Corporation to help friendly foreign people to meet famine or other urgent or extraordinary relief requirements. Payment of ocean-freight costs for these commodities as well as donations of surplus foods for use abroad under title III of the act, may be financed from this authorization. This authorization is increased by $300 million by the bill under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROXMIRE in the chair). The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield myself 1 more minute on the bill.

As of June 30, 1959, a total of $546 million has been obligated, which includes $251 million for bread grains, $51 million for course grains, $32 million for fats and oils, $4 million for dry beans, $57 million for dairy products, $38 million for rice, $16 million for cotton, and $97 million for ocean transportation.

Mr. President, I firmly believe that the bill as reported from the committee should be passed as written and as presented.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, first, I yield myself 10 minutes on the bill, and following that I shall offer an amendment.

The bill before the Senate, as the distinguished chairman of the committee has pointed out, is S. 1748. That bill does but one thing: It merely extends for 1 more year Public Law 480, with the existing provisions being maintained for an additional period of 12 months.

Reference has been made to S. 1711, which is on the calendar, and which was reported by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. That particular bill, known as the food-for-peace bill, was introduced by me and a number of other Senators.

Hearings were held upon this particular bill in the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. Members of the Senate may be interested to know why the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations should interest itself in matters relating to the use of our food and fiber. The interest and the jurisdiction rested upon the fact that the currencies which are generated as a result of the sales of surplus food and fiber under title I of Public Law 480 apply to the objectives of American foreign policy.

In other words, under title I, when a certain quantity of wheat is sold to a country which is in need of the wheat supplies, but which is unable to purchase such wheat with dollars, although it can purchase the wheat with its own native currency, the currency which is generated as the result of that transaction is deposited to the account of the U.S. Treasury. That currency is then made available under the terms of Public Law 480 for a number of purposes.

One of the purposes under Public Law 480 is, of course, trade development. I think more needs to be done in that area, and I have encouraged such action.

Another purpose for which these currencies may be utilized is for the payment of costs of the U.S. Government operations in the area where the currencies are usable.

A third purpose is to provide for economic development in the country where the currencies have been obtained. This is accomplished by the purchasing country entering into an agreement with the United States for long-term loans of available currencies as the result of the sales of agricultural commodities. Those loans are repayable with interest to the Treasury of the United States. Those loans are currently being repaid with interest. The loans may be repaid either in the form of soft currencies of the country involved, or in terms of dollars, whatever the agreement specifies.

A fourth purpose relates to the uses of funds available under Public Law 480 transactions spelled out in amendments to Public Law 480, particularly under section 104. Those include not only economic development but also education, health, nutrition and sanitation. There are a number of things for which money can be either loaned or granted.

I have not listed all the purposes or the objectives of Public Law 480, but I have touched upon the main ones.

What is the issue at stake? The distinguished chairman says that Public Law 480 is essentially a surplus disposal program. The Senator is correct in the fact that it is a program designed to utilize surplus commodities. But I say to my colleagues of the Senate that this program should not be tagged as a surplus disposal program. Rather, it should be considered a constructive program for the use of food and fiber to further the objectives of American foreign policy, to relieve human suffering and want, and to make a contribution to the betterment of mankind at home and abroad. In other words, it is a program of food for peace, food for economic development, food to improve the living conditions of people in the countries as to which we have deep concern regarding the political and economic development of those countries. Above all, it is a program for the well-being of mankind.

Some of the amendments which will be proposed today have as their purpose the cloaking of Public Law 480 in the garments of the fulfillment of American foreign policy objectives of peace, freedom, social justice, and economic development. Why should we not use our abundance of food for economic development? Why should we not use our abundance of food for purposes of health and education?

Of course, we are currently doing that. But we seem to do it with a feeling of shame, rather than embracing what we are doing and saying, "This is its purpose. The purpose is not merely to dispose of surplus food." If that were the purpose, surely we would not seek simply a 1-year extension, because there is not anyone in this body who can accurately predict there will be a balance between production and consumption in the foreseeable future. The fact is there is no possible way, that anyone in this country has been able to design, to limit production of agricultural commodities to the point where production will meet only normal exports and domestic consumption. We are going to have an abundance of food and fiber for the foreseeable future.

The question is, What are we going to do about the situation? Are we going to continue to pay $1½ million per day storage costs? I want my colleagues to know that we are paying $1½ million a day for storage, in the United States, for this food. And some of it rots. Or are we going to use, instead, the same amount of money for the purpose of seeing to it that people obtain the food for health, for education, for improvement of diets, or for economic development of the country receiving the food?

Mr. President, there has been quite an argument as to whether we should emphasize the words "food for peace" in Public Law 480. Indeed, I think we should. That does not mean there will be no emphasis upon international trade. Indeed, there is an emphasis upon international trade.

The President in his state of the Union message this year, outlined what he called a program of works for peace. One of them was health for peace. One was education. One was food. It seems to me the time is at hand to take a good look at Public Law 480, which, by the way, will be extended under the terms of either bill and will be amended only. We should call the program what it really is, a dramatic demonstration on the part of the American people of the use of food and fiber for constructive purposes, not merely for relieving ourselves of surpluses.

If all we want to do is relieve ourselves of surpluses, there are other ways of doing it. We can bury them. We can destroy them. I hope we never will, but it could be done.

We ought to look upon this abundance of food and fiber as a blessing. We ought to put it to work. We ought to put it to work abroad and at home, in terms of helping humankind, in an exercise of compassion, or helping countries which are our friends and neighbors by providing economic assistance.

What do our amendments propose? The first amendment proposes to make this a 3-year program instead of a 1-year program. I say there is no defense for making this a 1-year program, except that it will make it necessary to do it all over again next year. There has not been a single study which has ever been made of this program by any group which did not recommend at least a 5-year program, instead of a 1-year program.

I repeat, no study has been made of Public Law 480 by anyone, by either a public or private group, which has not recommended a long-term program.

I am happy to note that the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], only a couple of months ago proposed on this floor that Public Law 480 be made a 3-year program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I congratulate the Senator from Illinois for his proposal. The record reveals, according to the minority leader, that this proposal had the support of the administration. It is an interesting thing to me that the administration can tell the minority leader it is in favor of a 3-year extension of Public Law 480 and then tell the committee it is in favor of only a 1-year extension of the law.

Frankly, I do not believe the administration is deeply concerned about this matter. I think the administration would readily accept a 3-year extension of the law, if it provides for sound programing and better administration.

HOUSING ACT OF 1959—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 52)

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will it suit the convenience of the Senator from Minnesota if we have the housing veto message read and then have an hour of debate on it, and then vote to override the veto?

Mr. HUMPHREY. If I hear correctly, a veto message on the housing bill has been received. I may say to the majority leader it would not only suit my convenience, but I wish to join in the denunciation of such a veto.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the housing veto message be read, and that following its reading the time for debate be equally divided to be controlled by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] to the extent of 1 hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROXMIRE in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROXMIRE in the chair). A quorum is present. The clerk will read the veto message from the President of the United States.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 2539, "an act to extend and amend laws relating to the provision and improvement of housing and the renewal of urban communities, and for other purposes."

On July 7, I returned an earlier housing bill, S. 57, to the Senate and set forth in an accompanying message of disapproval many of that bill's objectionable features. Although some of these features have been removed in S. 2539, and some partially corrected, in its most important provisions S. 2539 represents little overall improvement over S. 57. In one respect—the setting of an expiration date next fall on the new loan insurance authorization of the Federal Housing Administration, with potentially serious disruptive effects on the building industry—S. 2539 is worse than the earlier housing bill.

Clearly this bill, like its predecessor, goes too far. It calls for the spending of more than 1¾ billion of taxpayers' dollars for housing and related programs over and above the vast expenditures to which the Federal Government is already committed for these purposes. The history of the bill indicates that the Congress intends it to be a 1-year bill. So regarded, S. 2539 calls for Federal spending at virtually the same rate as that provided for by S. 57—a rate far in excess of my recommendations to the Congress.

At a time when critical national needs heavily burden Federal finances, this bill would start two new programs, certain to cost huge sums in the future, under which taxpayers' money would be loaned, at subsidized interest rates, for purposes that could be better met by other methods.

One of the new programs would have the Federal Government make direct loans to colleges for classrooms and related facilities and equipment by methods that would tend to displace the investment of private funds in these projects. This is Federal aid to education in a highly objectionable form.

The other new program would have the Federal Government make direct loans for housing for elderly persons despite the fact that a program is already in operation and working well, at no cost to the taxpayer, and under which private loans for this same purpose are guaranteed by the Federal Government.

Among its other objectionable features, this bill would authorize 37,000 new units of public housing while many thousands of previously authorized units have not been completed or occupied. These, too, would be subsidized, on a basis that would cost the taxpayer many hundreds of millions of dollars over the next 40 years. The bill would also authorize $650 million of Federal grants to cities for urban renewal projects. This sum considerably exceeds the first-year amount recommended by the administration for these purposes.

This is not the kind of housing legislation that is needed at this time. It does not help the housing industry for the Federal Government to adopt methods that in these times would increase inflationary pressures in our economy and thereby discourage the thrift on which home financing is heavily dependent. Nor does it make sense to purport to assist any group of citizens, least of all elderly persons living on fixed retirement incomes, by legislation that tends further to increase the cost of living.

There is still time for the Congress to enact a sound housing bill, and I once again urge that it do so. These things can be and ought to be done: (1) remove the ceiling on FHA mortgage insurance authority; (2) extend the FHA program for insurance of property improvement loans; (3) enact reasonable authorizations for urban renewal grants and college housing loans and adjust the interest rate on the latter; (4) extend the voluntary home mortgage credit program; and (5) adjust the statutory interest rate ceilings governing mortgages insured under FHA's regular rental and cooperative housing programs.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 3, 1959.

The Senate proceeded to reconsider the bill (S. 2539), to extend and amend laws relating to the provision and improvement of housing and the renewal of urban communities, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Under the unanimous-consent agreement 1 hour is allotted on the veto message, to be equally divided.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I suppose it is needless for me to say that I regret exceedingly to see this action taken by the President of the United States. I do not question his right to exercise the veto power, but I do believe that it was wrongfully done in this case, and I wish very briefly to point out some of the statements in the veto message which do not give a clear picture of the situation.

In the first place, the President says that the bill calls for the spending of more than $1¾ billion. That statement needs considerable explanation, much more than I can give in the time I have at my disposal. However, that figure includes all the public housing over the next 40 years. It includes urban renewal, for which the money will be spent over a period of 15 or 20 years. It includes all the loans that will be advanced under various programs and paid back with a profitmaking rate of interest to the Government of the United States.

The President refers to the college classroom provision as being particularly objectionable, and says that it is Federal aid to education in a highly objectionable form.

We might have an explanation as to why it is objectionable—certainly not so far as the amount is concerned, because his own program calls for $500 million in grants to private colleges, whereas the bill calls for loans to both tax-supported and private colleges, in the amount of $50 million, to be paid back at a rate of interest which actually would make money for the Government of the United States.

The President refers to the public housing units. With respect to public housing units, the figures we took are the figures which the administration officials themselves gave us as to the number needed in order to meet the backlog that had been built up. I admit that the President makes a little change from the veto message on S. 57 when he talks about those that are unbuilt. He says they have not been finished and occupied; but remember, they are allocated.

Again, I remind the Senate that on the one hand he is urging us to enact legislation that will speed along the Interstate Highway System; yet no town or city can afford to take the Interstate Highway System through it unless it has the means of assuring the Federal Government that it has a place in which to put any family that is displaced by reason of the highway program, and all other Government programs, so far as that is concerned. That is the principal use to which public housing units are put these days.

One word with reference to the expense of this program. So far as the 1960 budget is concerned, the bill would have a minimal effect upon it, or even upon the 1961 or the 1962 budget. We worked out a table, and placed it in the RECORD when the bill was before the Senate before, which would cover the next 10 years. To read the veto message, one would think the bill would have a terrific impact upon the budget immediately. The impact which the program would have on the 1960 budget is less than the loss the Government willingly and willfully would sustain in transferring FNMA mortgages for the benefit of the bondholders in a special class which has been proposed by the President, and against which the Senate voted the other day. The administration blandly talks about sustaining a loss of as much as $50 million in that category. That will not hurt the budget, to listen to the administration. But the $24 million proposed in this bill would, they say, destroy the budget of the Nation. That simply does not make sense.

The President speaks about urban renewal being a 1-year program. It cannot be a 1-year program, because we have already lost a year and a half. We have had no urban renewal, so far as that program is concerned, over the last year and a half. We must have this program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield me 2 more minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield 3 additional minutes to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall not go into further detail about the veto message. This is the sixth time the housing bill has been before the Senate. This will be the sixth time the Senate will have acted upon it.

I recognize, and I have said so on the floor many times, the constitutional right of the President of the United States to exercise the veto power. But I also feel a great responsibility as a Member of the Senate, as a member of a legislating body. Under the Constitution, it is the function of Congress to adopt the legislation which it believes should be submitted to the President.

Our subcommittee and our full committee have worked hard. We worked hard on the bill to meet the President more than half way. I submit we have met him more than half way.

In all frankness, I do not know what the position of the leadership will be in the event the Senate fails to override the President's veto, but I feel a sense of absolute futility with reference to going on. So far as I am concerned, I think we might as well quit if we do not succeed in overriding the veto. Let the country see what it will be like not to have a housing program for a few months. I think perhaps it would give us a different outlook.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Why do we keep putting the provision for classrooms back into the housing bill? That is one thing to which the President objects.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I made this statement on the Senate floor previously; I renew it today. We feel there is a great need for such a program. If the Senator from New Mexico would read the hearings before our committee, he would see, I believe, what the need is.

As I said on the Senate floor when the bill was under consideration, the administration's answer to us is that they have their own program in another committee, and that committee is working on the program. We all know it will not be acted on this year. Many of us doubt that it will ever be enacted. But I have said before that if such a program is enacted, and if it makes provision for the flood of students who are beginning to enter universities and colleges, I would be willing to see the program we have proposed simply phased into the other program. We do not want duplicate programs. But classrooms are needed, and are needed now. We are providing housing for students. What good is housing without classrooms?

Mr. President, I earnestly hope the Senate will vote to override the veto.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, my question is: If we keep bumping into a stone wall, why do we continue to bump into it? Classrooms are not housing. Why continue to include them in a bill any more than we would include mercantile stores downtown? I voted against the classroom provision because I wanted housing and not an issue. I think that if we want a housing program, we should remove the provisions for classrooms and housing for the elderly from such a bill. Why include them again?

The Senator from Alabama says he feels a sense of futility. Why not take out of the bill classrooms, which obviously are not housing, and try to pass an acceptable bill? I do not object to the 37,000 units. I would vote for them. But why do we continue to travel the same road we have traveled so unsuccessfully so many times?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I believe that if the Senator from New Mexico would read the veto message, he would arrive at the conclusion that even leaving classrooms out—and that was proposed in our committee, but the committee voted against it——

Mr. ANDERSON. But very closely.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. That matter was proposed on the Senate floor, and the Senate voted against it by a substantial margin.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know how substantially, but by a large enough margin to cause a veto.

Mr. SPARKMAN. But the House, with that provision in it, and with objection being made to it, voted for the bill by a margin of 3 to 1.

This is not the first time that facilities of a similar nature have been included in a bill. Housing bills have always—at least for a good many years—contained a section providing for community facilities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I do not think there should be any surprise because the President vetoed the housing bill. The indications were very clear during the debate that unless certain amendments were adopted, and which were offered from this side, it would likely invite another veto of the housing bill. I deplore the fact that the President has found it necessary to take such action, but I cannot confess to any surprise that he has done so, because I thought he made it quite clear in his original veto message what the objections were as he saw them, what the needs for housing were, as he saw them, and he made his position very clear, indeed.

I thought, while we were working on the new bill in the subcommittee that we were making some headway; but as we came before the full committee it became clear to me that we had been outfoxed; that we did not have the kind of bill I thought we were getting.

As the President has pointed out in the veto message, we ended with a bill which is in effect a 1-year bill, but a 1-year bill providing amounts which should be spread over several years.

This is true of the urban renewal features of the bill, and it is true of the bill in general, because it puts a termination of the FHA authority to do business 1 year from next October. Therefore, as the proponents of the bill have said in other language, it gives them a gun to point right at the administration, to demand more and more programs in addition to existing programs, with the threat that they will not extend the authority of the FHA.

The President has pointed out again that he objects to two new programs. Perhaps they are not big in the amount of $50 million each at the outset. But every Senator has seen such programs start with small amounts and grow, grow, and grow.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will suspend until the Senate is in order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. BUSH. I thank the Chair. The housing program for elderly persons under the FHA insurance program is going very well. It was pointed out in the debate that if the direct loan program were adopted, it would simply mean switching the business which is scheduled for FHA insurance into a direct loan program, thus destroying a program which is progressing very well, and putting an increasing burden on the Federal Government merely to do exactly the same thing. So the President objected very strongly to that item.

On the classroom construction proposal, the President again objected strongly. He pointed out clearly that this is one of the most objectionable features of the bill. It does not belong, as I believe I heard the Senator from New Mexico say across the aisle a little while ago, in a housing bill.

This is an aid to education program; and such a program belongs in an education bill relating to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, not in a housing bill.

Mr. President, an effort has been made to make it appear that this administration is not interested in housing. However, nothing could be further from the truth. The President has repeatedly sent to Congress, both this year and in prior years, educational programs adequate to meet the needs of the Nation.

After all, however, the President has to consider all the other needs of the Nation, including the national defense needs and the needs in connection with the operation of the various governmental departments and agencies. He has to consider all of them; he cannot play favorites.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 2 additional minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BUSH. So, Mr. President, the President is the one who has been obliged to balance one need against another. I believe that in his customarily deliberate and careful way, and certainly with the best interests of the people at heart, and I believe that today the people show greater faith and affection for President Eisenhower than they have ever before had—the President has come forward with programs which, in his opinion, and in the light of all he sees by means of the great agencies which are under his direction, are proper, adequate, and liberal programs for housing in its various aspects.

As an evidence of that good faith, the President has stated at the conclusion of his veto message, a copy of which is now on the desk of each Senator, that there is still time for Congress to enact a sound housing bill; and the President says "and I once again urge that it do so."

The President points out what a good housing bill should contain.

Mr. President, certainly there is ample time for our Banking and Currency Committee to bring to us, next week, a housing bill which will meet the housing needs of the Nation at this time and will insure signature by the President.

In his veto message, the President calls for removal of the ceiling on FHA mortgage insurance authority; he calls for extension of the FHA program for insurance of property improvement loans; he calls for the enactment of reasonable authorizations for urban renewal grants and college housing loans, and adjustment of the interest rate on the latter.

Heretofore, the President has made clear what he considers reasonable amounts in those connections.

In the veto message, the President also states that the Congress should extend the voluntary home mortgage credit program, and should adjust the statutory interest rate ceilings governing mortgages insured under the FHA's regular rental and cooperative housing programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional time yielded to the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, may I have 1 more minute?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 1 additional minute to the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized for 1 additional minute.

Mr. BUSH. Certainly, Mr. President, that does not seem to me a cause for a sense of futility, as stated by my dear friend, the Senator from Alabama. I do not feel any sense of futility about this matter. I want a housing bill enacted; and I want it just as much as the Senator from Alabama does. But I want one which which the country can live and which the President will sign. We can have such a bill; and there is no reason for any sense of futility.

Mr. President, I hope Senators will vote to sustain the President's veto, and that the Senate may have a chance to pass a bill in accordance with the recommendations the President has so wisely and soundly made today.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I have worried and fretted with housing bills for 15 years. I have worried and fretted with this one since last January. I am the ranking Republican member of the Banking and Currency Committee. I was not consulted by the President or by any of his staff in connection with the veto. They did not ask for my opinion of it; and, therefore, I did not give them my opinion.

I wish to make two points only:

First, if we had included the provisions for classrooms in the regular college housing section—in other words, if we had made provision for dormitories, classrooms, and so forth, and had not included a new section—there would not have been any argument at all about the classroom provisions, because for years we have helped build dormitories.

For years, a section in regard to housing for the elderly has been included. The Government guarantees the mortgages 100 percent, in the case of nonprofit oganizations.

Here, again, if the new section on housing for the elderly to which everyone is objecting had been made a part of the old section, and if we had simply provided that in certain instances the Federal Government would lend the money, this difficulty would have been avoided.

In his veto message, the President states that the bill would authorize 37,000 new units of public housing, which he says would be subsidized on a basis which would cost the taxpayers many hundreds of millions of dollars during the next 40 years. But if we had included provisions for housing for the elderly in the old section, and if we had simply provided that the Government could lend up to $50 million, there would not be any argument at all about the matter, in my opinion.

As regards the authorization of 37,000 new units of public housing, let me say that from the very beginning I have been opposed to public housing. But I was the author of the 1954 bill on urban renewal; and we wrote into that bill—and it is still the law—a provision that slums in which the poor people of the Nation live cannot be torn down unless other accommodations for those people are available. The other accommodations do not necessarily have to be public housing; they can be old houses or new houses. But at least some adequate housing must be made available for them.

At the moment, anyone who can show that such provision can be made except by the provision of public housing is wiser than I am.

If these three things had been handled in slightly different ways, we would not now be talking about them.

As I have said, I was not consulted at all about them.

I have always tried to be honest, fair, and sincere in dealing with these subjects, and I have not gotten angry with others. But certainly we should know the facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from Indiana has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am disappointed that the President has seen fit again to veto the housing bill, as he did before.

The President has acted by way of accommodation with the Congress in instances very analogous to this one—for instance, in connection with the veterans' pension bill and in connection with the railroad retirement bill; and he, himself, has sponsored the idea that legislation is a compromise.

I think we have gone a long way in trying to meet the views set forth in the President's first veto message.

Therefore, I am quite disappointed that the President has seen fit to veto the second housing bill, as well.

Mr. President, on the merits, I think there are two difficulties—and perhaps they represent a very deep difference in outlook: Housing is not inflationary. When housing is built—and all of this bill relates to the construction of housing—we add to the total wealth of the Nation. It is essential that we understand that although what we owe is important, what we have is equally important.

Therefore, Mr. President, when we add to the stock of housing, we increase our assets, because we then bring about the participation of others, those outside the Government, far more than we increase our liabilities.

In the second place, Mr. President, I cannot be a party to a housing bill which is not balanced. I join in the very fine statement made by my colleague, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART]—namely, that it is impossible to remove slums in which poor families live, without at the same time providing for their housing needs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, may I have an additional minute?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield an additional minute to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 1 more minute.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, finally, let me say that today approximately 70 percent to 80 percent of the people of our country are living in urban areas. We think nothing of voting for the expenditure of billions of dollars to help those who live in rural areas. But when it comes to voting for the appropriation of a sum far smaller than that, to help in the most intimate, personal way to fructify the life of those who live in the cities, we suddenly become very economical and money conscious. It simply is not just.

So, Mr. President, I deeply believe that, even with all due deference and respect for the President, the Senate should vote to override the veto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional time yielded to the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 3 minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield the Senator from Minnesota 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the message that has just been released by the White House, giving the President's veto and the alleged reasons can be answered very simply. I wish that our President would remember that he is President not General Eisenhower. This is not the "Crusade in Europe" where unconditional surrender by the enemy was the order of the day. We are not enemies. We are citizens in the same Republic, and we are a coequal branch of Government having a responsibility here in this body to legislate to the best of our ability and our judgment. Yet, the President demands unconditional surrender from the Congress.

This housing bill has been up the hill, down the hill, around the hill, and over the hill, in an effort to accommodate an administration that seeks to have only one kind of legislation—the kind it wants. Maybe we should adjourn and just let the President write the legislation—Government by Executive order and edict.

It might not be a bad idea, before Mr. Khrushchev arrives, to let the people of the world know that the Congress in the United States has a little something to say about the policies of Government. I realize the Russian visitor pays little or no attention to the will of congresses or parliaments. I hope we are not getting into a similar pattern in this country. The President insists that the Congress be not only a rubberstamp, but a subservient body bending to Executive dictation. Apparently the Bureau of the Budget, the right arm of the Presidential Office, has an insight into the Nation's problems that far exceeds the combined individual and collective wisdom of both Houses of Congress. The number of vetoes would indicate that the majority position is to be brushed aside. Minority rule has superseded the accepted principle of majority rule.

Two items among others that are cited as reasons for the veto are two of the best reasons why the bill should be retained and the veto overridden. First, is housing for the elderly. This administration lacks the sense of social conscience to do something about the problems of the elderly. The administration loves to talk about the elderly, but when we suggest a program of action for the elderly, the administration says, "Stop. Remember the budget." Well, elderly people have budget problems, too, and the private programs for housing for the elderly has not been the phenomenal success the administration claims. Direct housing loans are needed because this is a particular type of housing for a particular kind of clientele. It is more difficult to obtain financing for housing for the elderly than for ordinary FHA housing.

Secondly, the President says he does not approve the bill because it involves Federal aid to education. Some of our colleagues said that it would have been better to omit this section on the basis of lack of relevancy to housing programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY. May I have 1 additional minute?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield 1 additional minute to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 1 additional minute.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The administration has had many conferences, including the White House Conference on Education recommending Federal aid to education. This is the same administration which, after sputnik, said we must do something about our colleges and higher education and that we must begin to meet this problem with improved facilities, including more and better classrooms. Well, this housing bill does just that. It provides loans for classroom facilities.

Is there any Member of this body who does not know that there is a great shortage of classroom space in our colleges? The bill does not provide for a gift. It provides for loans. The bill provides for loans to colleges and universities so that they may build classrooms.

Finally, it gets a little ridiculous to be told when a foreign aid bill—a program which I support—comes before the Congress, that we are admonished by the President not to cut a dime of it. We are told that if we do, we shall jeopardize the security of the country. But everytime there is a rivers and harbors bill, a REA bill, a farm bill, a housing bill—everytime there is a bill for the good and welfare of the people, and the prosperity of the country—and there can be no foreign aid without this country's great productivity and prosperity—everytime there is a bill to aid this country, if it does not meet the rigid criteria and prejudices of the Bureau of the Budget, down it goes. We are given one alternative—unconditional surrender. I refuse to surrender. I think we ought to override the veto. I shall vote to do so.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Utah [Mr. BENNETT].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, when this bill was under consideration, the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Utah tried their level best to point out to the Senate that there were five items in the bill to which the President definitely objected.

The Senator from Utah pointed out that the committee partially cured one by its amendment to the FHA deadline, and the Senate itself cured another by adopting the amendment I suggested, knocking out the mandatory purchase of Wherry housing.

There were two left which have been referred to by the President as reasons for his veto, one of which we certainly could have handled. We almost did handle it. That was the proposal that the funds in the bill for college classrooms be added to the amount authorized for college housing, on the very simple theory that if the colleges had that much more money to spend for housing, they could use funds of their own, which otherwise might have been spent for housing, for classrooms.

That particular amendment, offered in two forms, got 40 votes in one case and 41 votes in the other. A few more votes might have prevented the veto.

I still think it was a serious mistake to insist on forcing the President to accept in a housing bill the proposal for classrooms.

The President has a program to assist colleges to get facilities. I am sure we shall be voting on the question again before we get through next year, if not this year; but this reminds me of another comment I made during the debate, which was that this program, which was originally instituted to help private individuals buy housing for their own purposes, has now become a program to set up institutions of one kind or another—public housing, urban renewal programs, college housing, housing for the elderly. The original purpose of the bill has largely been forgotten, if, in fact, it has not been made a hostage in order that those who are interested in developing the institutional aspects may have a leverage to apply on any administration that tries to continue, even at the tremendously expanded rate, the original program of making it possible for single families to acquire housing in which they can live.

The President sends the bill back to us now because we did not take out the proposal for classrooms.

The other chief objection he makes is to the proposal for direct loans for housing for the elderly. This veto message is being taken up so quickly that the Senator from Utah has not been able to examine into the record to review the figures which, as he remembers them, plainly show that the voluntary program, the program of Federal insurance of private funds to be used to build housing for the elderly, has been moving on at a very satisfactory rate.

The Senator from Utah now has these figures available. There were 56 applications.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Utah has expired.

Mr. BENNETT. May I inquire if the Senator will yield me more time?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 2 additional minutes to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BENNETT. Under section 207 of the National Housing Act, there have been to June 30, 1959, 56 applications received totaling more than $55½ million and representing 6,262 units of rental housing specially designed for the elderly. Forty of these have been committed at $35 million representing 4,036 units. Already 22 at $23 million representing 2,686 units have been insured. Twenty-three States are represented in the 56 applications. For anyone to say that failure to keep this provision in the bill would deprive the elderly people of housing would be ridiculous. The result would simply be that $55½ million would be transferred from voluntary programs to a direct loan program, if the provision remains in the bill, thus becoming a burden on the Federal Treasury.

Mr. President, I think the Congress should recognize these two very sound reasons for the veto. We should support the President in his veto. There is still time to send the President a bill which will contain the important FHA program and the important title 1 program, which will make it possible for the basic housing program of this country to continue.

Mr. President, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I shall vote to sustain the President in his veto. My belief is that if the Senate had listened to the President's admonition about converting the guaranteed loans into direct loans and about including the new lending program for college classrooms in the bill we would not now be required to decide whether we will or will not sustain the President's veto.

I believe in a housing bill. I am convinced the President wants a housing bill. I would be remiss in my responsibility to the people of this country and to the people of my State unless I gave recognition to the fact that the U.S. Government cannot now sell its bonds. We are trying to borrow money to refinance bonds which have matured and we cannot borrow the necessary money. Despite that, the bill which we are now about to act upon contemplated direct loans of money which we do not have and which we would have to borrow from lenders who are unwilling to lend to us.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] asked the question, "Why insist on placing the college classrooms in the bill, when the President directly admonished us that they should not be included?"

Classrooms are not housing. No one can construe classrooms to be housing. In my opinion, these classrooms were placed in the bill as a direct challenge to the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield 1 additional minute to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for 1 additional minute.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I think a housing bill can be drafted with ease. Omissions can be made of the provisions which are not rightfully to be included in the bill.

In the Senate there are probably 20 men who formerly were Governors of States. These men have had experience with legislative bodies writing into a good package bad things, intending to coerce them into accepting the bad with the good. The President has refused to be coerced, and I commend him for his action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I deeply regret that the President has vetoed this bill. During the last consideration of the housing bill, I was willing to transfer the $50 million from college classrooms to dormitories.

This is a lending program for college classrooms, about which so much has been said. I supported the motion by the Senator from Connecticut, not because I do not think there is great merit in the program, for I think there is a need for it and merit in it. I supported the Bush proposal solely in an effort to compromise, and perhaps to induce the President to sign the bill.

A very small matter is involved here. All of these items are relatively small.

I have had a calculation made, Mr. President. I find that the President has vetoed 143 bills since he has been President. I think there is nothing comparable to that in our history. There have been 57 direct vetoes, and 86 pocket vetoes.

What this indicates to me is a breakdown in our system of checks and balances. This has been coming on now for a long time. We have a divided Government under the Constitution; that is, as among the three branches of the Government. We now have one party in control of the legislature and another in control of the executive branch. I submit that the President is not using, responsible judgment in trying to conciliate and trying to get along with the legislature, which is as important an element in our Government as is the Executive. I think the President is taking advantage of his power of the veto, and he has abused it, in my opinion.

This is the second time we have had a housing bill vetoed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield an additional minute to the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized for 1 more minute.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator from Alabama has stated that he feels a sense of futility, and that he lacks any desire to go forward with the legislation. It happens that in my State this is not an all important matter, but I think it is all important to the Nation. I have supported a housing program every year. I did so this year.

I think the situation which confronts us is a very serious one, and that this question of a reasonable attitude of conciliation toward the other branches of the Government is involved. The Executive should not be permitted to completely dominate the legislative branch by its use of the veto power.

I certainly think, if we are going to have any balance in our Government, this Congress has to assert its right to consideration in regard to legislation, and I hope it will override this veto.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to my colleague from Texas [Mr. YARBOROUGH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Texas is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, as was so ably pointed out by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, this is not a golf game that we are playing with the President. The President treats it like a golf score, "Who got in with the low score?" If it were a golf game, it would be time that the Congress of the United States scored in the game.

Mr. President, this college classroom provision has been strongly attacked by the Executive and by many other people in the country who are opposed to it. It is only a $50 million program out of a $1¾ billion program. It is not a giveaway program. It is simply a lending program, to loan $50 million to the colleges so that they may build classrooms.

Why has this been provided? It was provided because of the college situation. In 1955 there were 2,380,000 students in colleges in this country. In 1958, last year, there were 3,200,000 students. This year the estimate is that there will be 3,950,000 students. It is estimated that by 1965 there will be 4,750,000 students in colleges, and that by 1970 there will be 6 million students in colleges.

With all the private financing the colleges can get, with all the State financing the colleges can get, and with all the denominational financing the colleges can get, they are not going to be able to house the students who wish to go to college, or to furnish classrooms for them.

We have had a college housing program for years. What is so evil about building classrooms for the students to sit in, when the Federal Government is lending money to colleges to build dormitories for the students to sleep in? The students sleep only about 8 hours a day, and they are in the classrooms more than that.

The President says that this program is Federal aid to education in a highly objectionable form. What is wrong with it? In 1862 the Government passed the Morrill Land Grant College Act and established whole colleges. The party in power at the time was the Republican Party. Many great colleges in this country were formed and created under that act.

If it is all right to create a whole college by the use of Federal money, what is so wrong with this college classroom program?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 1 more minute?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield 1 additional minute to my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. If it is all right to build dormitories for the students to sleep in, why is it so wrong to build classrooms for the students to study in?

The first precedent I have been able to find, Mr. President, goes far beyond the Morrill Land Grant College Act of 1862. In 1791 the first President, George Washington, in a message to the First Congress called on the Congress to do something about education. He said the question of establishing a national university or granting moneys to seminaries of learning now in existence is for the Congress to determine. We have never heard of George Washington being referred to as a socialistic radical. If assisting education was progressive enough for George Washington 168 years ago, why is it too radical for the present President? I submit, Mr. President, the college classroom provision ought to be law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, when the five reasons on the second page of the President's veto message are read, Senators will find the President has not the unlimited authority to dictate the interest rates the people of this country must pay, and he wishes unlimited authority to be given him by Congress on the amount of insured FHA loans that can be outstanding.

It is interesting to note that of the five reasons he gave for vetoing the bill, two, or 40 percent of them, are on the ground that Congress did not set interest rates high enough, and one of the other reasons is that he is not satisfied with $30 billion in mortgage insurance authority, but he wants unlimited mortgage insurance authority, at unlimited interest rates.

Mr. President, instead of the old adage of an apple a day keeps the doctor away, I am afraid what the President believes is that an interest hike each day will keep inflation away; and yet such action is encouraging inflation. In one paragraph he talks about the dangers of inflation to the elderly, and yet one of the reasons he gives for the veto of the bill is that we do not raise the interest rates high enough on housing for the elderly, on cooperative housing, and on rental housing.

What does the President think influences interest rates in this country? The biggest factor is the rate we have to pay for money on a 30- to 35-year basis. Although the committee came up from 4½ to 5¼ percent on rental housing and cooperative housing, we did not go to the 5½ percent the President wanted. Each new day brings higher and higher interest rates. Today the Federal National Mortgage Association announced that they are putting out a 5⅛-percent bond, and yet the New York Times today shows that these Federal National Mortgage bonds are now selling at a rate of from 4.95 to 5.93. This interest rate will destroy the prosperity of this country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, we have come nearly to the end of the road for housing in this session of Congress. The Congress of the United States has walked the extra mile to meet the President of the United States. When we got there we found he had turned his back on the cities of America.

The veto message complains, first, that Congress has put a time limit on the insurance authorization for FHA, and indeed we have, and that is one of the best things about this bill. I would be opposed to giving a green light to housing for the well-to-do and putting up a roadblock on housing for our middle income and lower income group.

Secondly, the President says the bill goes too far. He again overstates the monetary cost of the bill, but Mr. President, the bill does not go nearly far enough.

Third, the President complains about two new programs. First, he complains of the program for direct loans for college classrooms, and his arguments in that regard have been so abundantly rebutted by my colleagues I shall not reiterate the obvious.

Fourth, he complains of housing for the elderly, and he says the present program is working very well. However, every Member of the Senate knows the present program takes care only of the upper income half of elderly families and leaves without a decent roof over their heads the lower income half of elderly families.

Fifth, the President complains about the 37,000 units of public housing, and yet every Senator knows that this relocation housing is vital for the continued progress of urban renewal and for the continued progress of the highway program.

Sixth, the President says this is not the kind of housing legislation needed at this time.

This is exactly the kind of legislation needed at this time, except that it does not go far enough in meeting the needs of urban America.

Seventh, the President outlines a plan of five measures he would like included in a housing bill at this session. I would not personally be willing to advocate any of those five measures at this stage of the session unless they were coupled with other far more important housing programs.

Mr. President, the President's recommendations would fasten the tight-money, high-interest policy around our necks again. It would mean abject surrender of the interests of the urban families of this country.

I wonder how many of us know that today we are spending $3,000 per capita of Federal expenditures annually for farm families, and only $84 per capita per annum for slum families, and there are a million more slum families in this country than there are farm families. How can we justify the action of the President of the United States in signing without protest a bill appropriating $10 billion of additional Federal money in excess of present law for the benefit of veterans with non-service-connected disabilities and their dependents, and at the same time fail to override this housing veto?

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to stand up for the cities of America and override this veto.

Mr. CLARK subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the September 1950 issue of Architectural Forum, whose editor in chief is Henry Price and whose president is Roy E. Larsen, entitled "Cheating the Cities," may appear in the RECORD as a part of my speech in opposition to the housing veto.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHEATING THE CITIES

The cause of urban renewal is in deep trouble. It is not simply that the President vetoed one inadequate housing bill in favor of another still more inadequate, to balance a budget. Urban renewal can survive that. Far more serious is the import of the veto message, indicating that in the future the Federal Government should shift major responsibility in this area almost wholly to the States and municipalities, withdrawing wholly from public housing and other critical areas of human shelter. This would evade, as will be shown, the mounting Federal responsibility for the plight of cities through its own operations, notably such really massive Federal programs as highways and defense.

As if this were not trouble enough, urban renewal has erupted a messy situation of its own in the title I slum-clearance scandals of New York. These, thrown up on the national proscenium in big black headlines, are rarely distinguished as singular to one city and one man's rule, as shown elsewhere in this issue. And if a congressional investigation of all title I gets underway in New York this month, as scheduled, the messy pot may be kept boiling for weeks to come. Granted that programs so closely linked to the public weal need constant scrutiny, it is still unfortunate that such fuel is being added to the fire breathing of those who oppose all public, planned slum clearance and urban renewal anyway.

The truly serious difficulty is that so many men of substance and good will, even as the President, seemingly have failed to think things through. Ignored is the enormous urban revolution going on chaotically around them, transcending all governmental boundaries; unapplied is all the sound fiscal sense these leaders bring to other enterprises, as in combating the obsolescence of industrial plant. Not all men of substance have failed to grasp this great challenge. Rising numbers of solid citizens, including business and corporation leaders, are actively engaged in urban problems, and have come to see from the grassroots the need for substantial Federal leadership and assistance. The veto message itself has been attacked as misleading by no less a conservative member of the President's own party than Senator HOMER E. CAPEHART, of Indiana. On the national and administration level, however, three great blind spots remain:

1. Federal policies and programs are creating unprecedented new problems for cities:

Since World War II, the Federal Government from necessity has been putting huge sums into various programs, and taking other actions or nonactions that have had explosively damaging effects on cities.

One and nine-tenths billion dollars a year in Federal housing insurance and home loans, on the average since the programs started, have been going to homebuilders. Around 90 percent of the total has gone to expedite the postwar explosion of suburban developments, discriminating against new housing in cities. While some redress is underway to encourage rental housing in cities, subject to heavy Federal taxes that homebuilding escapes, it is too late to reverse the tide that has drained cities of the middle class and homeowners, leaving behind tidal flats in which blight, slums, and decaying downtowns are rankly growing.

One and six-tenths billion dollars a year in Federal defense highway funds, on the average, have been apportioned since 1956 to States. The impact of this program on cities, though difficult to measure, is not difficult to see from coast to coast. Altogether, the people and property being displaced and demolished by this Federal program is estimated to be running about 90,000 family units a year, with little local and almost no Federal responsibility displayed for relocation, replacement, or planning.

Forty billion dollars a year in defense contracts have been going, on the average since 1950, into what amounts to reshaping the economy. The direct and indirect leverage on cities, little noted, is tremendous. Concentration of new industries, as on the west coast, has built up huge new population agglomerations; dispersal of other industries, as in the South, has created bulging new backwoods towns. Some cognizance is taken of this in a tiny emergency defense housing fund, but all the larger aspects are ignored.

When, therefore, the Federal Government attempts to shift responsibility for the plight of cities, it is being less than honest. Add to this a long record of inaction in promoting the modernizing of railroads and public transportation, and the Federal position becomes untenable.

2. Cities are in the midst of an urban population revolution of unprecedented proportions.

Below all this, pushing with inexorable force, is an urban population revolution which, beginning about World War II, is just now approaching full tide. This is the phenomenon known as "scatteration" or "the exploding metropolis," described by Coleman Woodbury, director of urban research at the University of Wisconsin, as "a new pattern of settlement."

The main characteristic of the new pattern is the centrifugal growth of metropolitan areas. The total national growth from 1950 to 1956 breaks down into 15.6 percent for center cities, 27.2 for suburbs, and 41.5 for fringe areas, with the latter whipping up a 55.8 percent rate of increase against only 4.7 percent for center cities. Professor Woodbury sees nothing here to indicate any diminishing of the outward flow. This urban population explosion, simply at its present rate of growth, will add residents by 1975 equal to the 1950 metropolitan area populations of New York-northeast New Jersey, Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Detroit, Boston, San Francisco-Oakland, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Cleveland, Washington, Baltimore, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Buffalo, plus 15 million persons more. Even if the rate dips or levels, it will still be something phenomenal.

Above all, it is this fragmentation bomb that both the President and Congress, as well as the public generally, fail to take into account.

3. The new 85 percent urban population gets only a fraction of the Federal money going to farms.

Such changes as the new pattern portends require capital investment, public and private, on a huge, unprecedented scale. States and cities have neither the tax base nor the power for leadership to hold up the public end. Yet the Federal projection for urban renewal funds is so small as to be bizarre. The whole current rumpus is over funds—now at a yearly rate of about $300 million—slightly larger than the price support program on potatoes or about one eighteenth of the Department of Agriculture's budget. Comparison with agricultural supports is not irrelevant. As Thomas R. Reid, civic and governmental affairs manager of the Ford Motor Co., pointed out to the recent Conference of Mayors, there are now a million more slum dwellers than farm dwellers, yet Federal per-capita expenditure on farm families is $3,000 yearly against only $84 per slum family.

Washington has signally failed to wake up to the fact that this is no longer an agricultural nation, but one composed 85 percent of urban dwellers. When the huge wasteful farm surplus program is added to other urban burdens, the cities are being cheated on the vastest scale in history.

With or without Federal funds, the forces of change are so powerful that urban creation and renewal will go on willy-nilly. The only issue is whether, with some foresight and planned investment, some order, reason, and beauty—which is to say architectural quality—can be brought to America's fast-changing scene. The hard fact is that despite Federal reluctance to support public works, its own actions in housing, highways, and defense have destroyed or made obsolete a large part of our cities, and its own monopoly of tax base has made it impossible for States and cities to do for themselves.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, how does the time stand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has 5 minutes remaining. The Senator from Illinois has 10 minutes remaining.

The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. President, the Constitution makers very wisely provided two things in their great document:

First. In the state of the Union message to Congress the President shall inform Congress and the country and also make his recommendations.

Second. With respect to the veto power, it makes the President a part of the legislative process. It says that if he disapproves, he shall assign his reasons and send his veto message to Congress.

Mr. President, that makes the President of the United States the one person in this country holding elective office who has a national responsibility as distinguished from the responsibility to a State or to a constituency. It has been said that only one national viewpoint is expressed from time to time in the political arena, and that comes from the President of the United States.

So the President has the duty, if he disagrees with a piece of legislation, to return it to Congress and to assign the reasons why he believes he had to disapprove it and why his disapproval ought to be sustained.

The President talks not only for the whole country, but he must think about the future. I am afraid that too often we forget about that fact.

As an example, we passed the veterans' pension bill. Next year the President will have to ask Congress for $308 million for veterans' pensions. If we had followed his advice it would have been $100 million, but Congress said,

"This is going to be the law, and you are going to ask for $308 million for pensions instead." That is the impact on the future, and I wonder whether we are as cautious and careful as we might be with respect to the impact of the things we do upon the future fiscal policy of the country.

The President, therefore, when he considers a matter like the housing bill, has to be thinking about the fiscal affairs of the country. There are 37,000 housing units provided for, which would cost the taxpayers $875 million. Of course, the program would be scattered over a number of years, but it represents a commitment, notwithstanding.

The President asked for a 5-year program on urban renewal. What did we do? We gave him a 2-year program, cut the money a little, and indicated, in the tables on the back of the RECORD, that we had reduced his budget figures. What we did was to take a pair of snips and reduce the 5 years to 2 years, drop the amount of money just a little, and by strange legerdemain, and a kind of arithmetic with which I am unfamiliar, we made it appear that there was a decrease. The President has a fiscal responsibility, and when he evaluates these programs he takes that fact into account.

What are his principal objections? One is to classrooms. I was opposed to that provision. Anyone can see that that would be a snowballing program.

Before I finish listing the objections, let me say to my distinguished friend from Arkansas that the President of the United States is not the "top dog" when it comes to vetoes. Up to 1956 President Roosevelt vetoed 631 bills. Up to 1956 Truman had vetoed 250 bills. I use 1956 to make sure that I follow the record which has been prepared by the distinguished Secretary of the Senate.

Up to that time President Eisenhower had vetoed 86 bills, as compared with 250 by Truman and 631 by Roosevelt.

To make sure that the record is accurate, up to the middle of 1959 this figure had jumped from 86 to 143, but it is still at the halfway mark so far as Truman is concerned, and about 33⅓ percent or less of the number of veto messages sent to Congress by President Roosevelt.

Back to the bill The President objects to classrooms. I object to classrooms with a subsidized interest rate, in a program that would snowball into hundreds of millions of dollars.

The President wanted at least a 2-year program for FHA. We said, "You will take 1 year." I know of no better way to disrupt a program than to give it a life of 365 days, then haul it back to Capitol Hill and make the administration lay all the cards on the table. How can we preserve continuity, and have a program that is effective and workable, and is an assurance to builders and suppliers of the country on that basis?

The situation was made abundantly clear. Congress said, "You will take a year, or you will take nothing. You will take classrooms, or you will take nothing. You will take urban renewal on a 2-year basis instead of a 5-year basis, or you will take nothing. You will take elderly housing on a subsidized basis, or you will take nothing."

Yet the record shows that in connection with elderly housing there is a program. The FHA has a program of elderly housing. It is in operation. It is workable.

Finally, the President said, "It is about time to taper off in this public housing business." Yet we say, "You will take 37,000 units plus, or you will take nothing." Out of that there will be a charge of $875 million on this country, over the subsidy life, which could be as much as 40 years.

The President must speak for the country. He must speak for all the people—not for Illinois, not for New York, not for New York City, not for Cleveland, not for Los Angeles, not for a host of little cities. He speaks for all communities and all States. He believes that we have gone too far, in view of the fiscal situation; and I think he makes a good case.

In a spirit of warning—and I do not like to speak in such terms—our fiscal situation is not too good. The redemptions on E- and H-bonds have been going up and the sales have been going down. The Government is having difficulty in the market today because of the limitation on interest. This is not a happy picture, especially when we stop to consider that $9 billion worth of American paper is in the central banks of other countries and elsewhere.

It is said, "Go ahead." The money is spent over there, in countries which show no willingness to put their fiscal houses in order. The situation is pretty serious.

Mr. President, the President deserves to be sustained on every count.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield me 1 minute?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. In order to be factual and not emotional, I wish to call attention to two facts. One is that, with respect to the elderly housing and classrooms, it is discretionary with the President as to whether or not he shall ask for appropriations. He has not asked for appropriations this year. Therefore nothing could be built under either of those sections.

The able Senator from Illinois stated that we must have continuity; we must have programs effective for more than a year.

We have had FHA since 1935. Every year we have extended it only from year to year. This is the first time we have talked about extending it for more than a year. It has been on a yearly basis since 1935.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of the time at my disposal to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the Senate has been working on housing this year since early in January. In October of last year, when I was down in Alabama, Mr. Mason told me the difficulty the FHA was up against with reference to the FHA insurance authorization, but he told me that, through the method of issuing agreements or letters of intent, he thought the program could be financed until the first of January, but he hoped we would get action in the early part of the year.

The Subcommittee on Housing started to work almost immediately after the new Congress convened. Senators will remember that we reported a bill to the Senate on the 2d day of February. The Senate, by an overwhelming vote, passed that bill on the 5th of February. Then, of course, it went to the President some time later, and he vetoed it. It came back here and we held hearings for over a week. We listened to the best authorities we could get, and to the Government representatives themselves. We worked diligently at trying to meet them halfway, or even more.

There is talk about the 37,000 public housing units. The figure of 37,000 was adopted as their own figure.

We had testimony with reference to college classrooms. We are building college housing. The presidents of universities and colleges, representing all the various groups of colleges and universities throughout the country, have said to us, "We have about reached the point where it will not do any good for you to build dormitories for us. We do not have places to teach the young people who are coming to us. We need classrooms as much as the dormitories."

The answer of the administration was that a new program was being prepared. I repeat what I have said many times. We do not want any duplicate programs. Let the new program come from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare next year, 5 years from now, or whenever it may come. If it does the job, I will be the first one to propose that the present program be completely phased out. But I say that classrooms are needed, and needed now. If we do not act quickly, we will find ourselves in a terrible position within the next few years.

When the President's veto message on the first bill was received, we examined every item in the bill—120 or so. We went over the bill item by item. We did not miss a single one. We asked Mr. Mason and his aids, "How does the administration stand on this point?" I wish I had the time to enumerate the points we took up in order to satisfy the administration.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD that part of the House report which appears on pages 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and which enumerates the important changes we made in the proposed legislation in order to meet the wishes of the administration.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN S. 57 AND S. 2539

DELETIONS

Maximum maturity: S. 57 would have authorized the Federal Housing Commissioner and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to increase to 35 years the maximum maturity of mortgages insured or guaranteed.

The veto message expressed opposition to this discretionary authority and these provisions are not contained in S. 2539.

FNMA par purchase: S. 57 contained a provision which would have required the Federal National Mortgage Association to pay par for mortgages purchased under its special assistance functions. The veto message expressed opposition to this provision, and it does not appear in S. 2539.

FNMA short-term loans: S. 57 would have authorized the Federal National Mortgage Association, under its secondary market operations, to make short-term (12-month) loans to be secured by FHA-insured or VA-guaranteed mortgage loans. The veto message expressed opposition to this provision, and it is not contained in S. 2539.

Amendment of public housing contracts: S. 57 contained a provision directing the Public Housing Administration to amend existing contracts upon the request of a local public housing authority in order to bring such contracts into conformity with changes contained in S. 57. Since existing law permits the Public Housing Administration to extend the provisions of any new laws to outstanding contracts, this provision appeared to be unnecessary. It is not contained in S. 2539. The committee understands that existing law permits contracts to be amended to incorporate the provisions of this act, without requiring the incorporation in such amended contracts of any provisions other than those provisions designed to bring such contracts into conformity with changes contained in S. 2539.

Study of housing needs of migratory farmworkers: The provision in S. 57 directing the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency to study the housing needs of migratory farmworkers is not contained in S. 2539.

Planning scholarships and fellowships: S. 57 contained a provision authorizing appropriation of $300,000 for a 3-year period, which funds were to be used by the Housing and Home Finance Agency to provide scholarships and fellowships for the graduate training of professional city planners and housing technicians and specialists. The administration opposed this provision, and it is not contained in S. 2539.

Reacquisition by former owners of FHA-insured projects: S. 57 contained a provision authorizing the FHA Commissioner, when disposing of properties acquired by him in insurance operations under title IX of the National Housing Act and under section 608 of the National Housing Act, to give former mortgage owners a priority of opportunity to reacquire such properties. The administration objected to this provision, and it is not contained in S. 2539.

MODIFICATIONS

Extension of programs: S. 57 contained provisions extending the FHA property improvement program until September 30, 1960; extending the FHA military housing program until September 30, 1960; and extending the voluntary home mortgage credit program until July 31, 1961. S. 2539 extends the VHMCP and the military housing program until October 1, 1961; and extends the property improvement program until October 1, 1960. (Secs. 101, 701(a), and 806.)

FHA insurance authorization: S. 57 contained provisions which would have increased the general mortgage insurance authorization of the Federal Housing Administration by $5 billion upon enactment, and by $5 billion on July 1, 1959. Under these provisions, any portion of the first $5 billion increment which was unused on June 30, 1959, would have lapsed. S. 2539 increases the general insurance authorization by $8 billion on enactment with a further provision that on October 1, 1960, any unused authorization shall expire and the (revolving) authorization thereafter shall become the total of outstanding commitments to insure and insurance in force as of that date. (Sec. 107(a).)

S. 2539 also contains a provision which prohibits the Federal Housing Commissioner from exceeding the general mortgage insurance authorization by the use of any procedures which would extend the contingent liability of the Federal Government beyond the amount specified in law. Thus, the legal ceiling on FHA insurance activity will be strictly limited as provided in law, and insurance contracts and bona fide commitments to insure will be the only acceptable procedures for operating under this limitation. (Sec. 107(b).)

Maximum insurable loans for relocation housing: S. 57 contained provisions increasing the maximum insurable loans under section 221 of the National Housing Act from $9,000 to $10,000, and from $10,000 to $12,000 in high-cost areas. S. 2539 retains the basic limitation of $9,000 but increases the high-cost area ceiling from $10,000 to $12,000. (Sec. 110(b) and 110(c).)

Fees and charges under FNMA special assistance functions: S. 57 contained a provision limiting fees and charges under its special assistance programs to a maximum of 1 percent of the principal amount of the mortgage, and providing further that the amount collected at the time of commitment could not exceed one-quarter of 1 percent. The veto message objected to this provision and S. 2539 gives the Association discretion in fixing fees and charges under its special assistance functions. (Sec. 303(a).)

FNMA special assistance for cooperative housing mortgages: S. 57 contained a provision increasing by $37.5 million the Federal National Mortgage Association fund for purchasing, on a special assistance basis, mortgages insured under section 213 of the National Housing Act. This increased amount would have provided $25 million for consumer cooperatives and $12.5 million for builder-sponsor cooperatives. The veto message expressed opposition to this, and S. 2539 increases this special assistance fund by only $25 million, equally divided between consumer cooperatives and builder-sponsor cooperatives. (Sec. 304.)

Early acquisition of property in urban renewal area: S. 57 contained a provision which would have permitted a local public agency to acquire and clear property prior to the signing of a loan and grant contract with the Federal Government. This action would have been permitted only if sanctioned by local law and in the understanding that the land could not be disposed of until the urban renewal plan was finally approved. S. 2539 contains a modified version of this provision, which modifications were made to clarify local responsibility for repaying loans made to finance such early acquisition and to clarify language relating to disposition of the property so acquired. (Sec. 403.)

Urban renewal capital grant authorization: S. 57 contained a provision increasing the urban renewal capital grant authorization by $500 million on July 1, 1959, and by $400 million on July 1, 1960—a total of $900 million. In view of objections raised in the veto message and in recognition of the current backlog of applications, S. 2539 provides that the urban renewal authorization shall be increased by $550 million upon enactment with the further provision that the President may at his discretion authorize an additional $100 million if necessary to satisfy the needs of cities with a population of 100,000 or less. (Sec. 405(1).)

Priority for approval of urban renewal applications: S. 57 contained a provision directing the Urban Renewal Commissioner to process applications on a first-come, first-served basis. S. 2539 modifies this provision to give discretion to the Administrator to consider urgency of need and feasibility in approving such applications, although the general rule for approving applications will be on a first-come, first-served basis. (Sec. 405(3).)

Public housing projects in urban renewal areas: S. 57 contained a provision to facilitate the construction of federally assisted low-rent public housing in urban renewal areas. S. 2539 modifies this provision to include State or locally assisted low-rent housing projects. (Sec. 411.)

Crediting the cost of local public works: S. 57 contained a provision which would have permitted credit toward satisfying a locality's share of the cost of an urban removal project, as a noncash grant-in-aid, of eligible local public works started within 5 years prior to execution of the loan-and-grant contracts for the urban renewal project. Since, under existing law, such projects can be credited if started after approval of a preliminary plan for the project, which approval can occur as much as 3 years prior to the signing of the loan-and-grant contract, and because the veto message expressed opposition to the provision, S. 2539 contains a provision to credit such projects only if they are started within 3 years prior to execution of the contract. It is the committee's intention that local public works be credited under this provision only if the projects are clearly a part of, and contributory to, the urban renewal project. (Sec. 414(a).)

Public housing rent ceilings for displaced families: S. 57 would have exempted families displaced by Government action from a provision of existing law which requires a 20-percent gap between the upper rental limits for admission to low-rent housing and the lowest rents at which private enterprise is providing a substantial supply of decent, safe, and sanitary housing. S. 2539 provides for the reduction of the gap requirement from 20 percent to 5 percent. (Sec. 503(b).)

Public housing authorization: S. 57 contained a provision specifically granting contract authority for approximately 10,000 units to be available until July 1, 1961, and 35,000 units to be available until June 30, 1963. S. 57 also granted the President discretion to authorize additional units up to the limit contained in the Housing Act of 1949, which discretion could not be exercised until July 1, 1960, and which discretion could not be used to contract for more than 35,000 units in any one year.

The veto message objected to this provision of S. 57 and the number of additional low-rent housing units authorized by S. 2539 has been cut to only 37,000. This figure was established by administration estimates that there is now a backlog of applications for 37,000 units which could be expected to be built if the authorization is provided. The bill also requires that any units under contract from prior authorizations which are recaptured by the PHA may be reallocated but will be charged against the 37,000 unit total. (Sec. 505.)

College housing loan authorization: S. 57 contained a provision increasing the college housing loan fund by $300 million, which included $37.5 million for "other educational facilities" and $37.5 million for student-nurse and intern housing. In view of the objections in the veto message, S. 2539 reduces these amounts to $250 million, $25 million, and $25 million respectively. (Sec. 601.)

College classrooms and educational buildings: S. 57 provided for a new loan program to assist colleges and universities in constructing or rehabilitating classrooms, laboratories, and related facilities, including equipment and utilities. The amount provided for these loans has been reduced from $62.5 million in S. 57 to $50 million in S. 2539. Also in view of opposition in the veto message, S. 2539 provides that this program shall be financed by appropriations rather than by borrowing from the Treasury. (Sec. 602.)

Sale of housing project: S. 57 contained general language authorizing the Commissioner of the Public Housing Administration to modify the terms of any contract under which he had sold a housing project to a cooperative. S. 2539 modifies this provision to restrict its application to the contract by which the Southmore Mutual Housing Corp. purchased a housing project from the Public Housing Administration. (Sec. 808.)

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I ask also to have printed at this point in the RECORD a table printed on page 27 of the committee report, entitled "Comparisons of Obligational Authority and Budgetary Impact in Fiscal Year 1960," modified to reflect amendments made on the floor of the Senate.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPARISONS OF OBLIGATIONAL AUTHORITY AND BUDGETARY IMPACT IN FISCAL YEAR 1960

Proposed housing legislation—Comparative summary of (1) new obligational authority and (2) estimated expenditures for fiscal year 1960

Table prepared by staff of Senate Housing Subcommittee, Aug. 5, 1959.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, we have worked long and hard trying to get a bill. We have gone more than half way to meet the administration. I do not want any misunderstanding to arise. I do not want Senators to feel that we will have a housing bill, because it is my earnest and honest belief that there will be no housing legislation this year unless we succeed in overriding the veto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired. All time for debate has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Cooper	Hayden
Allott	Cotton	Hickenlooper
Anderson	Curtis	Hill
Bartlett	Dirksen	Holland
Beall	Dodd	Hruska
Bennett	Douglas	Humphrey
Bible	Eastland	Jackson
Bridges	Dworshak	Javits
Bush	Ellender	Johnson, Tex.
Butler	Engle	Johnston, S.C.
Byrd, Va.	Ervin	Jordan
Byrd, W. Va.	Fong	Keating
Cannon	Frear	Kefauver
Capehart	Fulbright	Kerr
Carlson	Gore	Kuchel
Carroll	Green	Langer
Case, N.J.	Gruening	Lausche
Chavez	Hart	Long, Hawaii
Clark	Hartke	Long, La.
McCarthy	Muskie	Sparkman
McClellan	Neuberger	Stennis
McGee	Pastore	Symington
McNamara	Prouty	Talmadge
Magnuson	Proxmire	Thurmond
Mansfield	Randolph	Wiley
Martin	Robertson	Williams, N.J.
Monroney	Russell	Williams, Del.
Morse	Saltonstall	Yarborough
Morton	Schoeppel	Young, N. Dak.
Moss	Scott	Young, Ohio
Mundt	Smathers
Murray	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? Under the Constitution, a yea-and-nay vote is mandatory. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Do I correctly understand that a vote "yea" is a vote to override the veto; and a vote "nay" is a vote to sustain the veto?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is correct. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union meetings at Warsaw, Poland.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is absent because of illness.

On this vote, the Senators from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] and Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] are paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]. If present and voting, the Senators from Idaho and Massachusetts would each vote "yea" and the Senator from South Dakota would vote "nay."

The Senators from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] and Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are paired with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER]. If present and voting, the Senators from Missouri and Wyoming would vote "yea" and the Senator from Arizona would vote "nay."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is absent on official business, attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland. On this vote, the Senator from South Dakota is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. If present and voting, the Senator from South Dakota would vote "nay," and the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Massachusetts would each vote "yea."

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] is necessarily absent, and, on this vote, is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Arizona would vote "nay," and the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Wyoming would each vote "yea."

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 58, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—58

NOT VOTING—6

Case, S. Dak.	Goldwater	Kennedy
Church	Hennings	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two-thirds of the Senators present not having voted in the affirmative, the bill is not passed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I move that the vote be reconsidered.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1555) to provide for the reporting and disclosure of certain financial transactions and administrative practices of labor organizations and employers, to prevent abuses in the administration of trusteeships by labor organizations, to provide standards with respect to the election of officers of labor organizations, and for other purposes.

MEETINGS OF PUBLIC WORKS COMMITTEE AND FINANCE COMMITTEE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to announce that the Public Works Committee plans to meet shortly in the office of the Secretary of the Senate; and the Finance Committee will meet in the Finance Committee hearing room.

Mr. President, at this time I move that the Senate take a recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, before that motion is put, I should like to have the conference report on the independent offices bill called up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Can it be disposed of in 2 or 3 minutes?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Then, Mr. President, I withhold my motion for a recess, and yield now to the Senator from Washington.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1960—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7040) making appropriations for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of August 14, 1959, p. 15894, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of the report?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to know to what the amendments relate. Do they relate to the civil defense part of the bill?

Mr. President, for the moment, I object to the request. I should like to find out more about the conference report.

RECESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now take a recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 9 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

At 3 o'clock and 12 minutes p.m., the Senate reassembled, when it was called to order by the President pro tempore.

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY PROGRAM

The bill (H.R. 8678) to amend the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958 to make certain adjustments in the Federal-aid highway program, and for other purposes, was read twice by title.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that H.R. 8678, the roads bill, be referred to the Committee on Public Works.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 13 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

At 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m., the Senate reassembled, when it was called to order by the President pro tempore.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS, 1960—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. When the Senate recessed, we were discussing the possibility of bringing before the Senate the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct. It had been submitted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Is that in order? Has that report been submitted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been submitted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Is it in order to proceed to the consideration of the report at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I ask the Senator from Washington whether it is agreeable to him to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes. I wish the RECORD to show, however, that the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] wished to make a statement on it.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. We have sent for the Senator from New York.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Senator from New York is en route to the Chamber. I understand that the Senator from Washington is prepared to make a statement.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7040) making appropriations for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of August 14, 1959, p. 15894, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I further move that the Senate recede from its amendment No. 1.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Is that the amendment——

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is the only amendment in dispute.

Mr. RUSSELL. May we have the amendment reported? May we know what the purpose or the scope of the amendment is?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 5, of the Senate engrossed amendment, strike out "$10,000,000" and insert "$25,000,000."

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, as the Senate will recall, the Senate had several conferences with Members of the House on the independent offices appropriation bill, and we came to an agreement, which the Senate adopted, on all items in that very long and complex independent offices appropriation bill, except one. That item, which is termed "amendment No. 1," involved the question of whether or not we should appropriate $12 million for grants to States and local communities for salaries paid in connection with local participation in civil defense and $3 million for equipment and other matters which the local people would need in order to carry out their portion of the work of civil defense.

The Governors of many States would appoint civil defense directors. The $12 million item would give a grant-in-aid of not more than 50 percent of the cost for the operation of that office. In some cases, another subdivision of the government would be involved, a city, county, or district, but mainly it would involve the States.

There was great dispute about this matter in the House. The House conferees and the members of the House Appropriations Committee, though I do not quote their attitude verbatim, felt that this provision would establish many local patronage jobs. As they put it, it would create more jobs in the city halls of the United States.

In truth it would not, and there is ample precedent for the provision. We have a similar provision in connection with the Department of Labor and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, which provide for participation in the payment of salaries for the operation of the local units. In these departments the employees come under civil-service requirements or a merit system, and the jobs are so established.

At the last session of Congress the Senate voted the same amount of money for participation as is contained in the bill, but we found at that time that the States had not sent in their plans and had not sent in the merit system requirements.

In the meantime, all 50 States have now sent in their plans of participation in civil defense and all of them have some merit system comparable or similar to those we demand in the Department of Labor, where we participate in the operation of the State organization, and in HEW, where we participate in other functions of that Department.

The House knocked out the item completely. The Senate put it in. Then we finally went to a vote in the Senate and in the House. The House voted approximately 2 to 1 against this item, and the Senate voted 76 to 8 to keep the item in.

That led us to an impasse on amendment No. 1. All the other civil defense features were resolved in conference, and we have been waiting with the independent offices appropriation bill for almost 3 weeks, in the hope that we might be able to resolve this item. In the meantime, civil defense officials have conferred with the Members of the House. The President formally sent a letter to all members of the House Subcommittee on Appropriations on this item, suggesting they keep it in.

I have only today conferred with the chairman of the subcommittee in the House, Representative THOMAS, of Texas, and he informs me, and will inform me by letter which is on its way over here now, that the House has no intention of having any further conference on this item. Therefore, I am suggesting to the Senate, in view of the time element involved, the fact that almost 3 weeks have gone by, and the fact that salaries in all the independent agencies downtown are involved—Veterans' Administration, General Services, Housing and Home Finance Agency—that in view of this situation about all we can do is accept the House version.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I promised to yield to the majority leader.

Mr. RUSSELL. I merely want to ask whether it is a fact that the House voted on the issue twice and refused to accept it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes. The House had a voice vote on it and then the House had a rollcall vote on it.

Mr. RUSSELL. It was fully explained?

Mr. MAGNUSON. It was fully explained and discussed. It is a matter we have had in the Senate for a long time. I am somewhat in agreement with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG]—and I have handled this appropriation for some time—that there has been a great deal of waste. I think we can look askance on what they have been doing in the Federal civil defense picture.

It is my firm opinion that civil defense can succeed—if we want civil defense at all—only if there is local participation. Without that, we might as well consider civil defense on a national scale to be futile. Everyone knows that the local people know better what should be done, but there should be an overall plan under which they can work. I should like to see local participation bolstered. We are not going to pay too much attention to local details. If something like a fire happens in a town, and the chief of the fire department feels that he can handle it with his own local people and in cooperation with the director of civil defense, that will be done. That is the situation in which we find ourselves. Therefore, I recommend that the House version be accepted.

Mr. YOUNG of Ohio. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG of Ohio. In connection with the suggestion which the distinguished Senator from Washington makes, I invite his attention to the fact that the Wall Street Journal, in an editorial in the issue of September 3, 1959, supports the view the Senator takes. In addition to the editorial from the Wall Street Journal to which I have referred, the Scripps-Howard newspapers have published editorials in various newspapers of their league of newspapers, in support of the distinguished Senator's position. I read briefly a typical editorial from one of the Scripps-Howard newspapers. This editorial appeared in the Cleveland Press recently. It is captioned "Setback for a Boondoggle." It reads as follows:

SETBACK FOR A BOONDOGGLE

Give the House of Representatives credit for a stout fight against a $12 million boondoggle which may yet be avoided.

This is the proposal to finance a new army of civil defense employees, working at the State level, paid half by the States, half by the Federal Government.

The Senate has approved the project. The House turned it down recently for the third time. Something has to give. The item is part of the independent offices appropriation bill, containing money for a variety of essential Government operations.

The House should hold the line because this $12 million is only a foot in the door, opening the way for still further expansion of this futile bureaucracy.

Insistent pressure for this needless addition to the public payroll is best explained in terms of the law expounded by C. Northcote Parkinson, professor of history at the University of Malaya, in Singapore, as follows:

"In any public administration or organization, the number of new subordinates increases at a predictable rate, irrespective of any variation in the amount of work (if any) to be done."

After all this time, and the overwhelming votes in the other body something must give. The Senator is in agreement with that statement, is he not?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I do not agree with the editorial, because I believe this item would pave the way to local participation in the proper degree. Governor Hoegh is doing an excellent job. It was my hope that the situation could be handled in this way, and that we could take away from some of the amounts of money at the Federal level.

This is an intangible matter. If nothing should happen, someone might say in the future that we wasted a great deal of money. If something should happen, and we did not have an adequate civil defense program, we would be sorry. I believe that in the past the Federal organization has been loose. Some of the criticism of the Senator from Ohio has been well founded. I was hoping that we could switch into local participation, which would result in building up local enthusiasm and local interests in matters of civil defense. That is the only reason the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] and I, and some of the rest of us insisted on this item, not because we wanted wasteful expenditures, but because we thought we would get more out of civil defense with this sort of program, rather than what has been happening.

Mr. YOUNG of Ohio. Does not the distinguished Senator from Washington know, from the fact that he is a student of history, and also from the fact that he served in the Armed Forces in World War II, that the defense of civilians in this country is a part of the total defense of our country, and that in the event of any sudden atomic attack on any part of the Nation, whether by accident or intent, the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of our Armed Forces, would immediately declare martial law, and the military would be in charge? No civilian agency would have anything to do with it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator from Ohio is correct in at least one thing he said, and that is that if there were an atomic attack all the military forces would be active—that is, those that were left—and military law would prevail.

However, I think he is just as wrong as it is possible for a person to be in assuming that the military forces would have trained men and women to take care of the situation, or that they would know what to do, or could in any way substitute for or serve as a duplicate of the availability of thousands of trained men and women in various civil defense units.

Having served during World War II as Governor of my own State, when the emergency could not possibly be as great as it would be now in the event of a catastrophe of the kind I have mentioned, I know that we had to rely on the presence, availability, and immediate services of thousands of trained citizens.

I have already said in earlier arguments on this question that we had 338,000 trained Florida citizens in civil defense.

I think it would be a tragic mistake to postpone doing the thing which would carry out in good faith what the Federal Government committed itself to the States to do by legislative action only a few months ago.

I cannot express too strongly my regret and disappointment. However, the Senator from Washington has done everything he possibly could, and his associates as conferees have done the same. I was privileged to serve as one of them.

I think there is nothing to do but to move ahead and accept the bill without that item. But I will not pretend that I am at all satisfied with the result, because I think it is a mistake from the standpoint of best serving the people of our country. I want the RECORD to show that that is my opinion.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I concur wholeheartedly in the motion to recede which the Senator from Washington has made. The Subcommittee on Independent Offices of the Committee on Appropriations considered the subject. The House originally left all this amount out. The Senate restored the full amount of $12 million as the Federal contribution to the State offices for assistance and $3 million for equipment, as the Senator from Washington has said. This was our effort to comply with the act which was passed last year, authorizing the Federal Government to assist in certain ways in building up civil defense.

The Senate conferees had two or three conferences with the House conferees on the subject. The House was unyielding. The House passed this item, as the Senator from Washington has said, on two votes, one a voice vote, and one a yea-and-nay vote, with quite a substantial number of negative votes.

The Senate, on July 30, insisted on its position by a vote of 76 yeas to 8 nays. Since that time we have held one more conference, with no results.

Last week, under date of August 25, 1959, President Eisenhower sent a message to the President of the Senate. I read two pertinent paragraphs:

> For fiscal year 1960, my budget for the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization included $12 million to be allocated among 9 departments and agencies needed to finance civil defense and defense mobilization programs. The $3 million provided does not enable the Federal Government to carry out the responsibilities contained in the National Security Act, the Defense Production Act, and the Federal Civil Defense Act.

That matter is now before the committee, Senate Committee on Appropriations again, in relation to the Federal Government.

The President continued:

> It would be unwise to neglect our civil defense mission because our total defense is incomplete and meaningless without reliable and responsible home defense. Survival cannot be guaranteed merely with a capacity for reprisal. Equally important is our ability to recover. This means staying power and endurance beyond that ever before required of this Nation or any nation.
> I recommend that the Congress appropriate the funds outlined above to carry out these programs which are so vital to the national security. The details of this proposed appropriation are set forth in the attached letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

That applies to the work of the Federal Government and the agencies of the Federal Government, but it alone is not enough. The provision which the House will not allow, and from which the Senate will recede today, would carry out the responsibility of the Federal Government to the States and municipalities.

I agree with the statement of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG] that we should stimulate greater civil defense activity. I agree with what the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] has said.

It is with great reluctance that I join in the motion of the Senator from Washington, but I feel that the conferees have done everything they can, and that if we are to have an independent offices appropriation bill—and we know we must have one—then we at this time will have to recede from this item, hoping that the President may submit it to Congress again.

I am certain that the President feels very strongly that civil defense, when we are spending so many millions of dollars on our national defense, is an integral part of the whole defense security program.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am not quite prepared to throw in the sponge on this proposition. I think we have reached a point where the toughest fellow has got to win. I cannot conceive of the House of Representatives, any more than I can conceive of the Senate, jeopardizing the independent offices appropriation bill because of this item. The matter has come down to the interesting stage which legislators reach when the fellow who holds out the hardest and the longest may win. Now we must decide whether we will do that in respect to this bill.

I have little doubt that if we want to sit here and wait out the House, the House will not let the independent offices appropriation bill go for a matter of $15 million any more than it is proposed we should. The question is, How serious is this issue, and how much longer are we ready to fight it out?

This kind of action has happened before in legislatures. If the Senate or the House really wants $15 million, it can get it. The Senate can get it by including the funds in a bill which the House wants urgently, if we assume we have to yield on this bill. If we really want to do it, we can find a way to do it.

What I should like to ascertain from the distinguished Senator from Washington, the chairman of this particular subcommittee, and also from the chairman of the primary Committee on Appropriations, is, Are we trying, in a supplemental appropriation bill, or in some other way, to get this money?

I should like to explain my position. First, I could not agree more than I do with the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] that the idea that the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force will take over the civil defense of the United States is completely impractical. I should like to see the faces of the people who make such a recommendation when the Army, the Navy, and Air Force come before the committee with their estimates of appropriations for what is needed, if they were given that responsibility. We would not have a budget of $40 billion for them; they would have a budget of $50 billion or $60 billion. We all know that in our hearts.

So, in my opinion, there is no real substance to this argument. If we are going to give the Defense Establishment the responsibility for civil defense, is it planned to give it to them the day after an atomic attack, or now? If it is intended that we give it to them now, we can count on not less than a $10 billion increase in the appropriations for the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. I want the Senator from New York to understand that some members of the conference—I believe every Senate conferee—felt about this matter exactly as the Senator from New York and I feel. There were, however, various items in dispute. Some of them were of very great importance to the ability of various important and functioning agencies to continue to operate. One of the items involved—although in another bill—was the $280 million necessary to start the operations of the Inter-American Bank.

Having served a good many times and for a long period of time on conference committees, I may say to the distinguished Senator from New York that I think the conferees of the Senate gave in only where they had to, and they gave in only on items which they regarded as, while important, not so overwhelmingly important as some upon which they prevailed.

I hope the reluctance of the Senator from New York to accept the result of the conference, a reluctance which can be no greater than that of the Senator from Florida, will not prevent him from realizing the great difficulties experienced in a situation which involves in one bill, as in this, hundreds of items, and in the group of bills which involve the same conferees, meeting from day to day on different bills, many more items than that. In the last analysis, there has to be some give and some take. But I assure the Senate that no one could have fought harder for this item than did the chairman of the Senate subcommittee, the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], and the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], who are both on the floor at the moment. The Senator from Massachusetts is a former Governor of his State, and had somewhat the same experience in this matter as did the senior Senator from Florida, during World War II. The same is true of other Senators to whom I could refer. I do not know how we could go further without jeopardizing the enactment of the independent offices appropriation bill, which embraces appropriations totaling several billion dollars.

Mr. MAGNUSON. It is close to $6 billion.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator from New York must realize, I am sure, that not only was that amendment applicable to many different agencies involved in the one bill, but that the same conferees, in large part, were sitting in conference on other bills, so we simply had to have some give and take. The items for veterans were contained in this particular bill, and every member of the conference happened to be a veteran. A considerable number of the conferees happened to be men who had had the responsibility of serving as governors during World War II.

So I am sure the Senator from New York will recognize, as I know he does recognize, because I know he has a generous nature, that this matter was not given up without a determined fight; on the contrary, we simply came finally to the end of the road. It is simply a question of making this concession, or making much greater ones in other fields, or of losing the bill as a whole.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I know of the deep interest which the Senator from New York has. His thoughts are the same as mine. But we should not overlook the fact that there is a big sum in the bill for civil defense. The only dispute was over this one particular item, which covers a new phase of the program, namely, grants in aid to establish units, which I agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. And all this is money on which we had passed legislation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes; and the States went ahead.

The House receded on amendments involving millions of dollars for civil defense; and we did not have much trouble getting what we think is a really adequate amount for the program, except for this particular grant to the States.

Mr. JAVITS. Let me ask the Senator from Washington a specific question; but first I wish to say that my reasons for speaking are, first, to make a personal protest; second, to urge the country to protest to those in the House of Representatives who, it seems to me, have not dealt wisely with the country's interests; and, third, to ascertain from the Appropriations Committee whether, if in January the administration requests a supplemental appropriation for this same item, in order to implement this legislation, it will be regarded sympathetically, and whether these members of the Appropriations Committee will feel prepared to make another fight for it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I have for many years looked at the civil defense expenditures, and they have bothered me because sometimes it seems as if there has been a great deal of waste, although not intentional waste, because I think Governor Hoegh has been one of the best I have seen.

But this item to transfer more interest to the local communities, such as New York has done, seemed to me to be a good way to get something worth while out of the civil defense and to build it up in the local communities; and the Director felt that way, too.

So, insofar as I am concerned, I would say it would be a must, because if civil defense is to be successful at all, even in its peacetime job, there must be this shift to the local communities. So to me it is a must.

I cannot speak for the administration; but in view of the President's letter and the testimony and the personal talks I have had on this matter, I am quite sure there would be an item for it; and then I think we can meet this matter squarely; we can say, "What kind of civil defense are we going to have for the country? Are we going to have a big, sprawling agency in Washington?"

Of course it is always difficult to do a good job with a large, sprawling agency. Are we to have such an agency in Washington, or are we to handle the work in the local communities?

Mr. JAVITS. Then does the Senator from Washington agree that we would sympathetically invite the administration to take that action in January, rather than to say, "Sorry, but we cannot do anything about it, anymore?"

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think that is what we should do, because this is not just a dollars and cents matter. This matter involves a policy. I believe we should meet the problem head on.

It is true that in connection with this bill, under the resolution the agencies can pay one-twelfth of what their last year's appropriations were. But the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] and I have seen many new agencies included—for instance, the Federal Aviation Agency, with appropriations of millions of dollars; and the Veterans' Administration, with appropriations of more than $5 billion; and other additions, because of new laws which have been passed, including the one for new pension systems.

It is very difficult for those in charge of the agencies to know how to administer them properly when they do not have the necessary funds for each branch of the work, and must use one-twelfth of what they had the year before, in order to provide properly for so many agencies, including the new ones, such as the Space Agency and the other agencies. But after watching the civil defense expenditures on the Federal level, I am convinced that what is proposed is the only answer to the problem, if we are to have civil defense.

I believe that Governor Hoegh is convinced of that, too.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONG of Louisiana in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. JAVITS. Of course, Mr. President.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I agree with everything the Senator from Washington has said. I can add that, from personal conversations and observations, I am confident that the President feels very, very strongly that civil defense is a very important part of our whole security program; and I am confident that he will send down a supplemental request, when he believes the proper time has come.

Mr. JAVITS. Yes; and I gather that these Senators who have spoken will give it their full support.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Of course we will.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Furthermore, many of the ex-Governors who served in this connection knew this problem.

Of course, I think New York has done an excellent job in creating public interest in this matter. But many other States have not done so. So I think what is suggested is the only way we can get the local people alerted to the problem. They are doing good work in many other respects at the local level. The new arrangement will enable those in the local groups to feel that they are doing something worthwhile, and they will proceed to do it.

Certainly it is most difficult to handle this matter from Washington. There must be overall supervision; but the local interests must act in the local communities.

I appreciate the attitude of the State of New York in connection with this matter, because I believe that in this particular field, New York has led the other States; and I compliment New York on doing so.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] and the rest of us have a deep interest in this matter. But in view of the problem and the circumstances, and in view of the passage of so much time, we felt that what has been agreed to was the best way we could handle the matter.

The Senator from New York realizes full well, I know, that we have held it up for almost 3½ weeks.

Mr. JAVITS. That is true. Indeed, I requested the Senator to hold it up, so we could try to make some progress with it.

I feel, Mr. President, that a real contribution is being made by the chairman of the committee and its ranking minority member, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], in giving assurances that they will do all they can to encourage the administration to seek relief by means of a supplemental bill.

Another matter of importance is that of aid to the communications media of the country, which will alert our people to what has occurred here, and will inform them why it has occurred. In my opinion they can be most helpful in correcting what I believe is now a matter of very grave disadvantage to the Nation.

In order to provide some documentary background for that position, in case any of those who shape public opinion should wish to have it, I shall call attention to some matters other than those alluded to by the Senator from Massachusetts.

For instance, I refer to the resolution on civil defense which was unanimously adopted at the 51st Governors' Conference at San Juan, P.R., on August 5, 1959. In the resolution the Governors backed up the importance of civil defense preparations, both on the national level and on the State and community levels; and they made the following significant statement, which I believe should be written on the wall of the municipal building of every town and city in the Nation:

Without protection against fallout, we are vulnerable to nuclear blackmail.

Mr. President, I repeat that statement:

Without protection against fallout, we are vulnerable to nuclear blackmail.

Therefore, Mr. President, this matter goes to the very elemental question of the survival of our country, because the Governors themselves have highlighted the need for civil defense protection; they have pointed out that it is organic to the whole posture on which we have built—namely, the posture of the power to retaliate—in other words, the mutuality of terror, as it is called—as being our most effective defense; and in this case they point out that without a civil defense establishment, we may be subject to nuclear blackmail.

Mr. President, another matter which has not been alluded to—or, at least, not since I have been on the floor—is the report of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy issued August 30, 1959—only a few days ago—in which they comment on a situation which they developed scientifically, and which they considered to be a reasonable facsimile of what we might very well face in the event of an atomic attack. They list as the likely targets of such an attack the following cities: New York City, Chicago, Boston, Detroit, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, San Francisco, St. Louis, Washington, Atlanta, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Dallas, Houston, Kansas City, Milwaukee, New Orleans, and Denver.

Mr. President, what do they anticipate would happen in the event of such an atomic attack? They refer to the possibility of sudden death for 50 million Americans, and serious injury to approximately 20 million Americans, and the destruction of approximately 50 percent of American dwellings; they believe they would either be destroyed or would be made unusable for months, because of the atomic fallout. All this was stated in the New York Times, in connection with the report of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

Mr. President, if we needed any other certification as to the validity of civil defense, the same report finds, and it is labeled as probably the most significant finding, that civil defense preparedness would reduce radiation casualties from approximately 25 percent to about 3 percent.

Mr. President, are we blind, are we insensitive? Are we so hardened that we cannot understand the realities of our own survival? Yet that is what one would think when he faces this kind of situation of obdurateness pictured to us by the conferees.

The money involved, some $6 million, to help the States to obtain technically skilled and professional personnel for civil defense, is not going to be spent to maintain a bureaucracy. We have been over that and over that and over that, time and time again. It is to maintain those inexpensive, relatively few personnel necessary to marshal civil defense programs in which hundreds of thousands in my State of New York are patriotically engaged without hope of compensation. This is how we shall recognize them for their patriotism.

In the State of New York the total number of civil defense personnel is 305,167. The total number of personnel paid from civil defense funds is only 800, leaving 304,367 dedicated individuals who are serving in this field. And this is how we recognize and thank them.

In the State of my friend from Ohio, who has rather different ideas from those of some of us, there are 137,652 civil defense personnel, of whom only 76 are professional and technical personnel paid from civil defense funds.

It seems to me that these facts and this evidence just cry out to high heaven.

Though we are frustrated and blocked now, my own opinion, even at this stage, is that if we felt deeply enough about it, we could get our way. But the realities of the situation, with the subcommittee pretty well united as such, are that we shall probably have to—in fact, we are compelled—to go along with them now.

But this is a matter which deserves the utmost protest and the deepest concern on the part of the people of the country who are really taken up with the issue of survival and national defense in their truest sense.

I hope very much the good conscience and the good sense of the United States will in the next few months assert themselves. Knowing the operations of the administration, I am very glad it has been made clear that a supplemental appropriation application by those concerned will be sympathetically considered. There is always the danger that unless that statement is made on the floor of the Senate, they may do nothing about it at all. I hope they will bring in such a supplemental request in January, and at that time I hope very much the members of the Appropriations Committee will put us in a posture of being very much better able to overcome what I consider the obdurate and very unwise blocking of this matter by the House of Representatives which we have seen up to now.

Mr. President, I have just one further observation. I had had in mind the idea of getting a rollcall, if I could get one, on this particular proposition, but I look very much with dismay upon the Senate, which voted 76 to 8 on this proposition, allowing itself to be bested on a matter of such critical importance to the security of the country and the safety of the people that I do not wish, as a Senator, to stultify the Senate by asking it to vote on a rollcall on this issue, unless the leadership desires it.

I wish to record my own protest. I shall vote "no" on this proposition. I assure any of those who are interested as much as I am on this question that I shall continue to fight for this item.

I deeply feel, I may say, with all due respect to the conferees, that if we really have our teeth in this thing we can find a way to prevail. I cannot conceive that the Senate of the United States cannot get the House to yield on a $15 million item if we really have our teeth in it.

In view of the frustration and dismay with which the people should regard this matter, I hope we shall really have our teeth in it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, the State of New York, as the distinguished Senator from Washington has said has taken the lead in an effort to come to grips with this civil defense problem. I commend my colleague for what he has said. It seems strange to me, as I am sure it must to the country, that after such an overwhelming vote we in this body should recede from our position.

I shall vote "no." I should like to see this matter put to a vote again.

The distinguished Senator from Florida has said here on the floor that every one of these conferees is a veteran. Mr. President, they are fighting men. I know my distinguished friend from Florida, and my distinguished friend from Massachusetts. They are fighters. My distinguished friend from Washington, the chairman, is a fighter. Every one of them is a fighting man. I feel sure they would be ready to go back to this conference and fight again. They will not give up. That is their reputation. I commend them for it. I would like to see this matter sent back so that it again may be taken up with the House conferees. However, I share my colleague's view that unless we have some support from the leadership on one side or the other, there is little chance that the Senate would reverse itself on a rollcall.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I have said before that it was with the greatest reluctance that I came to the conclusion I reached, but there are between $6 billion and $7 billion involved, items concerning many other departments, and we have had at least four meetings on this subject, with no change whatsoever. It is only because of those facts that I accepted the position we have taken.

Mr. KEATING. I appreciate that, and I appreciate that every member of the conference on our side has fought, and fought hard. I say go back and fight again.

I yield to my friend from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I had not asked my distinguished friend to yield. I was interested in his impassioned eloquence.

Mr. KEATING. Particularly about the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I may disclose to him that no less eloquence was used in the conference, and there were items involved which were of great importance. I recall one that was involved as to which a group of Senators refused to sign a conference report and got up and left. I see my two friends, the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from North Dakota, smiling, because they remember the incident.

We have to decide where to make our supreme fight when we are dealing, as we were in this case, with a bill that involves $6 billion, and I do not remember how many agencies, and hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of items, and when we were dealing with other bills, with largely the same group of conferees, on alternate days. We cannot run at full speed all the time.

All I can say is that we have every reason to believe that when the matter comes up after the first of the year we will be successful in our efforts to obtain this appropriation. Further than that I cannot say. I wish I could say we had won 100 percent of the controversies but in the very nature of things that rarely happens in conferences.

Mr. KEATING. I realize that. I know how hard the Senators have fought.

In other words the position of my friend from Florida is that sometimes one has to yield a tactical position in order to gain a strategic objective. I am sympathetic with the conferees.

I am not happy about the situation in which we find ourselves. I cannot observe any assurance that when the matter again comes back to us in a supplemental next year, we will not be faced with exactly the same situation, but perhaps the Senate conferees, having been refreshed in the meantime, will be able to make an even greater and more herculean effort in their controversy on this matter with the other body.

I understand some of the House conferees were with us, but that there simply were not enough of them. I am told that my distinguished colleague from my neighborhood, Representative OSTERTAG, was back of this move, and I commend him for it.

Mr. President, I shall vote "no," but I shall not ask for a yea and nay vote, under the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] that the Senate recede on amendment No. 1 to the independent offices appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG of Ohio. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION APPROPRIATION BILL, 1960—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8575) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of September 4, 1959, p. 18109, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, the conference report on H.R. 8575, the military construction appropriation bill for 1960, contains $1,363,961,200. This is an amount $78,958,500 over the House recommendation and $64,217,500 under the Senate recommendation. It is an amount $199,238,800 under the budget.

For the Department of the Army, the appropriation is $263,632,300.

For the Department of the Navy, the appropriation is $204,112,400.

For the Department of the Air Force, the appropriation is $776,832,500.

In addition, it includes smaller amounts for the Department of Defense and the Reserve components of the three services, which I shall discuss later.

As is true of most conference reports, the position of the Senate conferees was not upheld in all instances, and there have been items deleted from the bill which we would have preferred to have included. On the other hand, I believe that the bill which is now before the Senate is a good measure, and will provide the necessary military construction to strengthen our defenses in the coming year.

On pages 3 and 5 of the conference report, Senators will find a list of the items and amounts which the conference has included in addition to those provided in the House report on this bill. I shall describe certain highlights included among these changes. On such items as I do not cover, I shall be glad to answer any questions which are propounded.

The conference committee considered and approved, with one minor exception, the amounts as recommended by the Senate for all hospital construction in the three services. In this connection, the conference report specifically directs the Secretary of Defense to apply the funds provided on a utilitarian basis to meet essential needs and maximum utilization of existing private and governmental medical facilities in the area. The conference committee is also directed that available equipment be utilized to equip these hospital prior to initiation of new procurement, including fixed equipment and other equipment not normally financed from construction funds. Certification of compliance with these conditions is directed.

I believe one item, location 12, Japan, deserves specific reference. In providing $1,700,000 for this project, the conferees are in agreement that these funds are available only for the purchase of local currencies available through the U.S. Treasury and to be used only for the construction of facilities, other than housing and community facilities, at this location. It was the unanimous opinion of the conferees that the greatest use possible should be made of the Commodity Credit accounts in foreign countries.

For the Department of the Navy, the conference action added $24,064,400 to the amount provided in the House bill. The conference committee deleted $7 million for North Island, San Diego, Calif., and $1,271,000 for Ford Island, Hawaii, which were included in the Senate bill. These funds would have provided berthing wharves for the large Forrestal-type carriers. The Senate conferees strongly urged the inclusion of this construction. However, the House conferees were adamant in their belief that existing facilities were adequate to meet operating requirements in the immediate future.

For the Department of the Air Force, the conference action added $20,215,900 to the amounts provided in the House bill. For aircraft engines inspection and repair shops and aircraft maintenance field shops, the conference provided a lump sum of $2,650,000. The conferees agreed that these funds should be allocated to specific locations upon a priority to be determined by the Department of Defense, with the understanding that maximum utilization will be made of existing facilities and that funds will be allocated only for the construction of complete shops. For ground powered equipment shops, the conference committee agreed to a lump sum of $750,000 to be allocated on the same basis.

No funds have been provided for Mace facilities overseas. The conferees agreed that since the Secretary of Defense has not as yet made a determination as to the procurement and deployment of the Mace missile, no funds should be provided for the construction of facilities in support of this missile. However, if a determination is made, the Secretary of Defense, after notifying the Congress, is directed to use available funds within this appropriation including funds from prior years for the construction of the necessary facilities.

For the Department of Defense, $23,200,000 is included for the loran stations, and $23,545,000 is included for the Advance Research Projects Agency construction.

For the Reserve components, the conference committee approved $20 million for the Army Reserve, $8,980,000 for the Navy Reserve, $4 million for the Air Force Reserve, and $16,440,000 for the Air National Guard.

For the Army National Guard, $23,219,000 was approved, an increase of $12,219,000 over the House. The increase referred to provides for 86 authorized National Guard armories in 30 States for which local funds are immediately available. The action was based on the belief that State and local cooperation should not be discouraged and that the growing backlog of National Guard Armory construction projects should be reduced. A list of projects added by the Senate is found beginning on page 37 of Senate Report No. 752.

Before I close, I wish to thank sincerely all the members of the House and Senate conference committee for the part they played in providing what I believe to be an excellent report. For an entire week these members labored diligently in a spirit of cooperative understanding, considering each item on its individual merits. I trust that the conference report will be approved quickly.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a tabulation showing congressional action on the military construction appropriation bill be included at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I wish to add to what the Senator from Mississippi has said that the Senate conferees felt very strongly on these subjects, but had to yield because of items felt to be even more important. The berthing of the carrier of the Forrestal class at San Diego is important, and even more important is the facility at Pearl Harbor, where there is involved the loading of ammunition aboard the ship.

Mr. STENNIS. Yes.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senate conferees also felt that the powerplant at Guam was very important.

Mr. STENNIS. The Senator from Massachusetts is correct. That item was deferred.

All of these items are part of the Pacific complex or the Pacific pattern of our national defense. We think they are items which should be started as soon as reasonably possible. The House conferees agreed this action was not a rejection of these items, but that the items would be approved at the proper time.

I wish to invite particular attention to the item in the bill, Mr. President, providing an additional $12.2 million for the Federal part of the construction of the additional National Guard armories throughout the Nation, including 86 armories scattered through many States. Those are the ones for which the local funds are already available. The priority ratings are based upon the availability of the local funds. We did not set the priority ratings. That was done by the State authorities, and it was approved by the National Guard Bureau.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Massachusetts again.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. STENNIS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I recognize that we had no authorization for the Jacksonville National Guard Armory and nothing could be done in that regard, but I appreciate the interest of the Senator and of the other conferees.

Will the Senator advise me what happened to the item for the Marine Reserve building in Tampa, which the Senate added to the House-passed bill?

Mr. STENNIS. If the Senator will wait just a minute I will check. That was one of the last items. I know we insisted quite strongly on that item.

I wish to say to the Senator from Florida that I am glad to report that the Marine Reserve building for Tampa, Fla., is in the bill.

Mr. HOLLAND. I appreciate that action on the part of the conferees, and I particularly thank my friend, the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, if there are no other comments or questions, I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask the Presiding Officer to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on the military construction appropriation bill, H.R. 8575.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 8575, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U.S.,
September 4, 1959.

Resolved, That the House agree to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8575) entitled "An Act making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $263,632,300, including $1,700,000 to be used only for the purchase of foreign currencies to construct military facilities (except housing and community facilities) for the Army Security Agency, location 12.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of S. 1748.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1748) to extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, earlier today we began a discussion of S. 1748, Order No. 518. The proposed legislation is in charge of the able Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. I thought he wished to discuss it. If not, and if the Senator from New York is prepared to proceed on another matter, I am prepared to yield 15 minutes to him on the bill. Mr. President, I yield 15 minutes on the bill to the Senator from New York.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY AND JUVENILE CRIME

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, few American domestic problems have received greater attention, fuller study or been the subject of more written words than that of juvenile delinquency. This concern has been largely focused in the postwar years and is based on the really alarming increase in the incidence of youthful violence and crime.

There is ample reason for this worry about why our young people go wrong. J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, has estimated that at the present rate, some 1 million of our teenagers will be arrested for lawlessness in 1962. That is a shocking and sobering statistic, and in and of itself it is adequate justification for the tremendous amount of interest which has been generated in the problems of our troubled young people.

In many ways, it is a healthy thing that sociologists and churchmen, scientists and social workers, police, and government officials, as well as a bevy of private organizations, have taken such an interest in this subject. A tangible result has been greater public awareness of the great danger and challenge of juvenile crime. There have been vigorous and often successful attempts to find real solutions and provide media through which youngsters gone wrong can be turned along the paths of good citizenship.

Certainly, the problem of young people gone wrong cannot be too intensively investigated nor too thoroughly studied. But we must not lose our perspective. We must not become the victims of our academic and sociological concern to the extent that we lose sight of the needs of society and the right of citizens to be protected from violence and crime, no matter what its origin may be.

In other words, we must never forget that when teenagers organize for crime, when youngsters commit murders or repeat their lawless acts over and over again, they must be brought to book. They must be punished for what they are, criminals.

Now, this is not to say that we should not pursue with imagination and drive all efforts to get at the root causes of juvenile delinquency. We must study the many sources of teenage violence and trouble, which include broken homes, neglectful parents, substandard living conditions, economic deprivations, lack of religious training, inadequate schooling, shortsighted guidance counseling, and other factors which make for problem children.

We must recognize that the solutions to these situations and their products are not easily found and are not to be found in any one place. We must appreciate that we need to mobilize parents, churches and synagogues, youth groups, schools, social organizations, law enforcement agencies, the courts, all levels of government, and private individuals in the battle against deviates from the accepted youthful norms. We must impress upon everyone who will listen, and we must particularly pound away at those who will not listen, the need for understanding, for guidance, for sympathy and for concern about our young people.

Surely, we must pursue with vigor missionary efforts among youth groups, and indeed among youth gangs. There is much promise in some of these efforts. But enough is enough, Mr. President.

Without in the least impugning the work of sociologists, social workers and others who are working so faithfully and with dedicated zeal in this field, I say we have to get tough with these young people when they have stepped beyond a certain point. For when young people commit murder, when they repeat their offenses, then it is time to call a halt to special privileges and special consideration. Then it is time to stop being lenient and time to start getting tough, and I mean tough.

Now, of course, we all fervently hope and pray that we will not often reach this point with our young people. We all know that proper parental discipline, sound religious training, and proper guidance in the moral, spiritual, and educational spheres, will make fine, upright, constructive, and useful citizens of whom we can all be proud. Indeed, none will dispute that the church and the home are the keystones to making the citizens who will build the strong and free America we all want in the future. But when, for one reason or another, these influences have not done their job, or are not applied to the job of molding a young person, and as a result he goes off the deep end and takes out his resentments, his problems and his frustrations on society, then that society has the right—and indeed the duty—to curb him and curb him severely.

Thus, while education and sympathy are important, and are undoubtedly essential to finding long-range answers to the challenge of juvenile delinquency, they are not ends in themselves.

There is certainly such a thing as what J. Edgar Hoover has characterized as "misguided sentimentality." I agree with Mr. Hoover that if we do not draw the proper line between coddling of young people with problems and cracking down on them when it is called for, then we may "bring the law of the jungle to every American street."

In recent weeks, Mr. President, New York City has been shocked and stunned by an outbreak of juvenile violence and bloodshed. The entire world has read with horror of coldblooded murders and sadistic crimes of violence perpetrated by young people seemingly as lacking in conscience as in motive.

Such examples of teenage violence are not unusual for any large American city. Right here in Washington, although youth crimes do not appear to be as prevalent as in some other metropolises, there have been serious indications of a crime wave in recent weeks which has defied the spirited efforts of an understaffed police force.

One of the important things about these outbreaks is what is done in response to them. I have been gratified to note the speed with which Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York has acted to come to the aid of New York City officials in the present crisis.

It is true that New York's police commissioner, Stephen P. Kennedy, is doing the best he can. He has consistently advocated realistic treatment of teenage hoodlums. But often his hands have been tied by inefficient procedures, insufficient police forces, or contradictory efforts within the city administration.

Governor Rockefeller, while recognizing the need for studying sociological, economic, psychological, and related factors, has also underscored his belief that when teenagers commit crimes they must be dealt with as criminals. In an effort to draw together the best minds and mobilize the most effective forces, he has scheduled a series of meetings on the New York City juvenile crime crisis. A preliminary meeting was held yesterday by the Governor with his top State officials who deal with youth problems. These leaders will work out an agenda for a larger meeting to be held next Tuesday.

Among those who have been invited to the Tuesday meeting are Mayor Wagner, Commissioner Kennedy, J. Edgar Hoover, and His Eminence Francis Cardinal Spellman. Others include the following as contained in the New York Times report of September 2: Rev. Dan Potter, executive secretary of the Protestant Council of New York; the Reverend David Golovensky of the New York Board of Rabbis; Harry Van Arsdale, president of the Central Trades and Labor Council; Lester Granger, executive director of the Urban League; Thurgood Marshall, counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Joseph Monserrat, director of the Puerto Rican Labor Department office here.

Carl Loeb, president of the Community Council of Greater New York; Beatrice Quimby, executive director of the Federation of Protestant Welfare Agencies; Herschel Alt of the Jewish Board of Guardians; the Reverend Robert E. Gallagher of Catholic Charities; J. Richardson Dilworth, president of the Community Service Society.

Mr. Lefkowitz, Mrs. Caroline Simon, State Secretary of State; A. Van W. Hancock, chairman of the New York State Commission on the White House Conference on Children and Youth; Chief City Magistrate John M. Murtagh, and Presiding Justices Bernard Botein and Gerald Nolan of the appellate division here.

The response of affected officials has been of great interest and great importance. For example, the following excerpts from statements of the Governor, mayor, and police commissioner were carried on the front page of the New York Herald-Tribune of September 2:

Governor Rockefeller:

> The recent tragic occurrences of juvenile violence call for action by all of us. There is no single approach to a solution. The attack must come at all levels—by parents, churches, and synagogues, boys' clubs and other youth groups, settlement houses, the schools, social organizations, law enforcement agencies and the courts.

Mayor Wagner:

> The social welfare agencies and their workers have done fine and effective work in the field of juvenile delinquency. But when organized gangs invade playgrounds and blindly and wantonly commit murder, the handling of the matter has passed from the social agency into the hands of the police.

Police Commissioner Kennedy:

> There is no short answer, no cure-all, no panacea. It's going to take a lot of time, a lot of money and a great deal of effort. We all bear responsibility for slums, for the atrocious conditions under which some of these children live, and for discrimination. If you put a blue blanket on a festering slum, you are not curing the underlying ill.

In addition, strong editorial comment has been brought to bear on the need for additional police power in New York City and the need for meteing out sterner justice to teenage offenders. Proper recognition has been given, incidentally, to Commissioner Kennedy's adherence to the latter code, with which I heartily associate myself.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed, at this point in the RECORD, several of the many important editorials which have appeared recently in New York papers.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Aug. 31, 1959]

EAST SIDE, WEST SIDE

Hardly has the city begun to get over the numbing shock of last week's killing of two teenagers on the lower East Side than it is confronted by the equally savage and senseless slaying of two 16-year-old boys on the midtown West Side. Here, only a few blocks from the country's brightest and gayest entertainment section, one group of youngsters set upon another in a dark, deserted playground, wielding knives and bottles.

The youths in the playground, who were white, say that their attackers were Puerto Rican. This would indicate that neighborhood racial conflict underlay the attack. It could also be argued that since the area is one of tenements, poor housing is a contributory factor. You can find all sorts of reasons for these things, yet the fact remains that when such outbursts occur they are shocking and shameful.

How do we deal with a state of affairs that gives this city a bad reputation and—let's face it—keeps residents of certain areas prudently indoors at night? It's a perplexing and distressing question. The first necessity, we think, is to face the problem without despair and without panic. Street toughs are an ancient phenomenon, antedating even New York. True, the modern youth gang, whether based on ethnic or neighborhood lines, is a particularly dangerous institution, but that's all the more reason for the community to keep its senses in trying to deal with it.

A second essential point is that the immediate problem is one of better policing and sharper law enforcement. We know that there are other aspects of the situation that require attention and that basic social problems will have to be tackled. But first of all we face the task, simply, of putting a stop to killings in the streets. And the only way to do that is to have enough police in the right places to act as a curb on punks, toughs, and thugs—and, far from incidentally, to safeguard peaceable citizens. A good start would be to arrest and to punish the young criminals who killed the boys on the West Side. But even that would be only a start. We simply don't have enough policemen in New York City, and we shouldn't have to be reminded of it every week by a new street-gang killing.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Sept. 3, 1959]

"J.D."—THE WEED THAT GREW

As practically everybody has been saying, there is no short cut to solving the J. D. (juvenile delinquency) problem.

Fortunately, however, the Dracula-aroused community has progressed somewhat beyond the old refuge of the hand-wringers—that the youth crisis is to be blamed on the fearsome state of society.

This, of course, means nothing except a sort of limp rationalization for everybody's business generally turning out to be nobody's business.

In our opinion it is plain nonsense that any societal affliction like J.D. is so imponderable that it can't be resolved by intelligence and hard work.

But the trouble in New York is that we have never put enough skillfully directed energy into the job of licking or even controlling this thing.

It would seem obvious, for instance, that when murder becomes a commonplace and adolescent gangs consider crime a sport, the whole business is an outrageous affront to law and order.

Yet City Hall has never seen fit to provide Police Commissioner Kennedy with enough policemen. Instead of the 28,000 Mr. Kennedy has sought for years, the present authorized quota is only 24,508, and even this happens to be 1,074 short of fulfillment.

Now, suddenly, Mayor Wagner declaims about the need for law enforcement and says the Police Department will be brought up to quota strength right away. Our mayor has also decided that J.D. has become too hot for the social workers to handle.

But if Bob Wagner has really seen the light and felt the heat, he ought to go all out and give Police Commissioner Kennedy all, not just part, of the additional manpower needed. Or does the mayor perhaps require stimulation by Governor Rockefeller?

Our Governor has at least manifested an instant concern about J.D. out of hand. Maybe Mr. Rockefeller's town-meeting approach won't immediately accomplish much, but at least this is a call to corrective action on the entire youth front. And it is certainly long overdue.

[From the New York Times of Sept. 2, 1959]

THE ANSWER: ENOUGH POLICE

Mayor Wagner said yesterday that "when organized gangs invade playgrounds and blindly and wantonly commit murder, the handling of the matter has passed from the social agencies and into the hands of the police." Having settled that question, the mayor now faces the logical next question whether he will provide New York City with a police force of sufficient strength to do the job. He has not done this in nearly 6 years in office; he is not doing it now.

Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy had 23,428 men and women in the uniformed force yesterday. He should have had 24,508 to meet quota, the number the mayor and the Board of Estimate had agreed in the budget to supply. He was 1,080 men short of quota; he said he needs at least 3,000 more than quota, or a force of 27,500, to police the city effectively.

So we can have tomorrow's meeting in City Hall to discuss juvenile delinquency, at the mayor's call, and we can have the welcome help of the State, as proffered by Governor Rockefeller, but the primary question that remains and has existed all along is when will Mayor Wagner's administration supply a police force adequate to the city's needs.

A new policeman costs $4,700 the first year, $4,910 the second, $5,435 the third, $6,081 the fourth, as automatic increments in salary occur. To this must be added $125 a year for uniform allowance. The cost will go up $100 a year January 1 for every man, with a salary increase. So the annual cost, if 4,000 men could be added to the police force immediately, would be about $20 million in taxes. This is the starting cost, to rise later. But a much larger police force is the essential answer to New York's crime and gang problem, and it is the answer the mayor is not yet willing to accept.

[From the New York Times of Sept. 3, 1959]

THE MAYOR ACTS

Without waiting for other remedies for juvenile delinquency and violence that city and State conferences may produce, Mayor Wagner has announced his determination to bring the New York police force up to quota strength of 24,508 members. This is a delayed response to demonstrated need, but it is, in our opinion, putting first things first.

We do not discount the value of other, non-police, attacks on the youth crime problem. The family, the church, the school, the social agency, must be relied upon for basic, long-term work on shaping character and conduct. But they can't take the place of the policeman on the beat for restoring law, order and safety to human life promptly in this troubled city.

The authorized budgetary quota of police strength that the mayor now promises to provide—for the first time—is insufficient, even though it means an increase of more than a thousand men. The shortened work week for policemen, the lengthened vacations, the larger inhabited area of the city to be policed and the greatly increased traffic problem have reduced the manpower that the police commissioner can apply steadily, day after day, to crime prevention. A thousand men today do not mean, in police effectiveness, what they meant back in the 1930's. Conditions have changed, and it is today's conditions that must be dealt with.

The mayor's action, tardy and still inadequate though it is, is a big step forward to protection of the people of New York.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I am confident Governor Rockefeller, working in conjunction with New York City officials, will be able to come up with effective steps toward solution of the juvenile crime problem in our Nation's largest city. His forthright action in calling these meetings is, of course, characteristic of Nelson Rockefeller's way of getting right down to brass tacks on problems of the moment.

Equally typical of the Rockefeller administration is the fact that he enters this fray fully armed with careful and thorough studies at his disposal of the problem at hand. The Governor's staff has dug into the problem of juvenile delinquency in great detail and in great depth, and full reports are in the Governor's hands as he enters this battle.

It is this careful and characteristic preparation, combined with the Governor's known activist qualities and his determination to mete out stern but fair justice, which gives me confidence that sound solutions will be found to this problem. I feel sure the answers will lie somewhere between a get-tough policy and one of special consideration for youthful offenders. But I hope if there is any particular slant to it, that the forces of realistic treatment will come to the fore.

Mr. President, as I have previously indicated, I am most sympathetic to the views of J. Edgar Hoover when it comes to this problem of how to deal with teenage criminals. I agree first of all with his analysis that the abdication of parental responsibility underlies the nightmare growth of juvenile delinquency. I subscribe wholeheartedly to the fine seven-point program he has outlined to mount a great counterattack on delinquency.

I wish today to deal specifically with Mr. Hoover's view that we must show the hard-core delinquents who have no respect for law and order that we mean business. I subscribe wholeheartedly to that philosophy, which I believe has a particular relevance to the recent rash of juvenile violence in New York City.

I subscribe to Mr. Hoover's view that youths who commit vicious crimes, as well as those who are guilty of repeated offenses, are not mere delinquents. That is a very pertinent observation with regard to recent events in New York City.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed first, a brief summary of J. Edgar Hoover's views on juvenile crime and its curbing, as contained in the F.B.I. Law Enforcement Bulletin of February 1, 1957.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
Washington 25, D.C., February 1, 1957.

(Reprinted from the FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin)

TO ALL LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICIALS:

Are we to stand idly by while fierce young hoodlums—too often and too long harbored under the glossy misnomer of juvenile delinquents—roam our streets and desecrate our communities? If we do, America might well witness a resurgence of the brutal criminality and mobsterism of a past era.

Gang-style ferocity—once the evil domain of hardened adult criminals—now centers chiefly in cliques of teen-age brigands. Their individual and gang exploits rival the savagery of the veteran desperadoes of bygone days. Recent happenings in juvenile crime shatter the illusion that soft-hearted molly-coddling is the answer to this problem.

Consider the band of 15- to 17-year olds in Michigan whose members last year admitted over thirty crimes, including rape and murder. In Louisiana two teen-age gangsters were given life sentences in April of 1956 for murdering a man who caught them looting his home. A 13-year-old partner, the trigger man in the killing, was sentenced to confinement until age 21. The extensive criminal records of this trio, totaling more than two dozen previous charges, included aggravated burglary, theft, assault and holdup. Not isolated instances, outrages such as these are reported day to day in newspaper headlines across the country.

In the past four years, while population in the 10-to-17 age group has gone up approximately 10 percent, arrests of individuals in these same age brackets have increased at twice that rate. The present appalling youth situation—the crux of our crime problem—demands a vigorous new appraisal. No longer can we tolerate the "tender years" alibi for youthful lawbreaking. This is certainly no time for police to be shackled by illogical restraints based on unreasoned sympathy for these young thugs. Publicizing of names as well as crimes for public scrutiny, release of past records to appropriate law enforcement officials, and fingerprinting for future identification are all necessary procedures in the war on the flagrant violator, regardless of age. Local police and citizens have a right to know the identities of the potential threats to public order within their communities.

The murder of a Maryland school teacher by a 14-year-old student last summer illustrates the danger of unwarranted secrecy. Described as "terrible-tempered" and beyond school discipline, the boy was expelled from a North Carolina school following a threat to kill his teacher. To avoid corrective action, he was quietly sent off to live and attend school in Maryland. His violent tendencies, kept hidden from both his old and new neighbors, erupted in a classroom tragedy six weeks later when he put a fatal bullet through the heart of one teacher and wounded two others.

Certainly, a reasonable leniency for children committing first offenses and minor violations is a proper consideration. However, the present major problem is no longer one of bad children but of young criminals. Law enforcement cannot be administered solely according to the yardstick of age. Justice must be meted out to each individual criminal in such measure and manner as the welfare and protection of society demand.

Very truly yours,

J. EDGAR HOOVER,
Director.

Mr. KEATING. In addition, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, a hard-hitting and constructive series of three articles by Mr. Hoover which appeared in "This Week" Magazine on October 26, November 2 and November 9, 1958.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COUNTERATTACK ON JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

By J. Edgar Hoover
Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation

[Reprinted from "This Week" Magazine, October 26, November 2 and 9, 1958]

America is facing an emergency, a crisis which threatens the very future of our Nation.

It is the emergency of juvenile delinquency. The tide of youthful lawlessness is rising at a terrifying pace. By 1962 one million of our teenagers will be arrested each year—at the present rate.

My considered opinion is that we must act—and promptly. The time has come for a counterattack against juvenile delinquency. Unless this counterattack is successful no street or park in the Nation will be safe. Worst of all, every child in the Nation will be exposed to the vicious acts of the delinquent minority.

Thousands and thousands of words have been written recently about the juvenile delinquency problem. "Are the schools to blame?" "Are the parents to blame?" "Is our whole culture at fault?" are some of the questions which have been argued at length in newspapers and magazines. But now the time has come for action.

I am delighted that "This Week" magazine has asked me to propose such action in this series of articles.

MEDICINE OF TWO KINDS

In this series, I will outline what I believe to be an effective two-pronged counterattack against juvenile delinquency designed to (1) bring existing delinquency under control and (2) prevent future delinquency.

But first let's define the scope of the problem.

During 40 years in law enforcement I have seen thousands of youths skid downward along the path from minor delinquency to vandalism, petty theft and progressively more serious crimes. Those of us who recognize juvenile delinquency as the training school for adult crime are seriously alarmed at its increase.

Here are the statistics that worry me and all law-enforcement officers: During 1957 persons under 18 years of age comprised 53 percent of all arrests for the major offenses against property. Last year, more than two-thirds of the auto theft arrests, over one-half of the burglary and larceny arrests, and one-fourth of the arrests for robberies in cities involved juveniles.

NO ONE IS IMMUNE

Throughout the United States, an estimated 740,000 youngsters under 18 years of age were arrested last year. This is 3.3 percent of the population in the 10-to-17 age group, and it means that one out of every 30 youngsters was arrested for violating the law.

Since 1952, our juvenile population has increased approximately 22 percent. Juvenile arrests in the same period have risen 55 percent!

And the offenses committed by young people are characterized by more violence, more contempt for law and order. In every one of our cities terror runs down the street as youthful hoodlums grow increasingly bold and vicious.

This is the scope of the problem, a problem which cannot be dismissed as affecting only one area or one class. Juvenile delinquency and juvenile crime are not restricted. No child—rich, poor, city dweller or suburbanite—is inherently immune to delinquent behavior.

Delinquency is a world-wide disease. A recent study in Great Britain disclosed sharp increases in sex offenses, drunkenness and crimes of violence among British teen-agers, notably the "Teddy Boys." In Russia, an official Soviet Government booklet entitled "The Fight Against Hooliganism" reveals that knifings, beatings, thefts, and destruction of property by Soviet youth constitute a menace of great concern behind the Iron Curtain.

But we're concerned with the causes of juvenile delinquency in the United States. I believe that this menacing cloud, mushrooming across the Nation with its terrifying portents for the future, is indicative of a deep-seated national illness. I am certain that here is proof once again you cannot dance without paying the piper. Over the past quarter of a century, all too many Americans have been ignoring the basic traditions of work, discipline and vigilance on which our Nation was founded.

VALUES ARE TO BLAME

We seem to have misplaced the sense of values which made this a great Nation. Self-indulgence and the principle of pleasure before duty on a vast and growing scale have become a phenomenon of our adult world. These are warning symptoms of the "decadence disease"—which has contributed to the decay of so many civilizations throughout history.

When children, without discipline and without moral standards implanted by a stable home, are thrust into a culture in which pressures from every direction promote the principle of self-indulgence, what reaction can be expected? To such children, restraints are unbearable. When they want something, they take it.

These childern are victims in a very real sense. They are the victims of a society which has substituted indulgence for discipline. They are the victims of a breakdown of authority and moral standards in the home, in the neighborhood and—too frequently—in the entire community. And they are the victims of those practitioners of expediency who have blurred the lines between right and wrong, good and evil.

So in large part the juvenile delinquent is a by-product of our self-indulgent age. As such, he deserves understanding and sympathy, as well as an effort to rehabilitate him. Yet, while seeking to save those who can be salvaged, we must not make the mistake of adding to the problem by repeated, misplaced leniencies.

The treatment accorded youthful criminals must be fair, reasonable and realistic.

I have been called an advocate of the "get tough" policy. To an extent, perhaps I am. I have seen too many instances in which repeated leniency has encouraged misbehavior, and I have also seen occasions when the policies of a realistic judge proved to be very effective deterrents to crime.

The "I can get away with anything—I'm a juvenile!" attitude on the part of scores of young hoodlums is a clear-cut indication of how sentiment can supplant sense. Too frequently, misguided sentimentality, along with a policy of blanketing all youthful offenders under a protective covering of anonymity, actually encourages juvenile misbehavior. The knowledge that one can get by, not once but time after time, breeds bitter contempt for law and makes a mockery of our system of justice.

Let me repeat here what I have said many times. I heartily endorse reasonable consideration for childern involved in minor delinquencies and first offenses. I do not, however, believe that the umbrella of special privilege should be held impartially over all juveniles, including those who commit heinous crimes or those guilty of repeated offenses. Leniency is misdirected when it is applied repeatedly to those whose every act expresses disdain for law.

PRELUDE TO WORSE CRIMES

When "I can get away with anything—I'm a juvenile!" becomes the scornful slogan of increasing numbers of youthful cynics, we need to be wary. Such youngsters, through actual experience, are beginning to visualize themselves as immune from the law. If they get by repeatedly with the little things, the temptation grows. All too often the little things have become a prelude to really vicious crime.

I do not exaggerate when I use the word "vicious." The appalling rise in juvenile crime is equalled only by the increase in violence and brutality displayed in the commission of such crimes.

The three most prevalent juvenile offenses are—burglary: In 1957, 54.8 percent of all arrests for burglary involved youths under 18. Example: On the West Coast last fall, two boys, aged 15 and 13, were surprised by a merchant while they burglarized his store. One of the boys fired a .22 caliber pistol at the businessman, killing him instantly. The gun had been stolen in a previous burglary; larceny: In 1957, 51.3 percent of the persons arrested for larceny were youths under 18. Example: A series of burglaries and larcenies committed on the East Coast was finally traced to a small juvenile gang. Among their other crimes: making bombs out of stolen explosives in order to blast open the coin boxes in telephone booths; and auto theft: In 1957, 67.6 percent of all arrests for auto theft were youths under 18. Example: Last June, a young hoodlum arrested in a stolen car admitted a number of crimes in Texas, California and Arizona. His ambition: to "shoot it out" with the police some day. "I've taken shots at officers, and I've been shot at before," he boasted.

The three most vicious youth crimes are—rape: In 1957, 19.5 percent of all arrests for rape involved youths under 18. Example: On the East Coast a few months ago, a young couple in a parked car was held up by three teen-age hoodlums. The girl, aged 15, was separated from her companion and taken to a remote area where the youths attacked her; assault: In 1957, 7.8 percent of the persons arrested for assault were youths under 18. Example: In Washington last summer, ten youths in two cars stopped their vehicles, jumped out, beat three young sailors, leaving one unconscious, and fled. Two of the youths were apprehended a short time later. They could give no reason for the assault; criminal homicide: In 1957, 6.4 percent of all arrests for criminal homicide were youths under 18. Example: Last December the robbery spree of a juvenile gang ended with the shooting of a liquor-store proprietor. None of the gang members was over 17 years old. For the youth who pulled the trigger, this killing was the culmination of a series of vicious crimes.

In many ways the second list is more frightening than the first. And for a very good reason. In recent years, reports on youth crimes have indicated a mounting savagery, a senseless brutality which makes one's blood run cold.

I will list just two examples of this nightmarish criminality:

New York—Two young men, refugees from Communist tyranny, were quietly walking along the street. When they stopped to ask directions of a trio of youths, they were attacked and beaten violently. Reason? According to the news account, the three assailants were "toughs who had been drinking beer for hours on a tenement roof, then had descended to the street to find some action."

Two of the perpetrators of this vicious attack, each 18 years old, were out on bail pending trial for felonious assault and malicious mischief in another case. The third, 16, allegedly greeted his mother with an unprintable epithet when his parents arrived at the police station.

Philadelphia—A young foreign student was returning from mailing a letter near the campus of his university last spring when he was accosted by an 11-member juvenile gang. Two youths shackled the student's arms, others knocked off his glasses and began beating him. A blackjack, lead pipe, and hard-toed shoe were used. The young man's face was chopped to unrecognizable pulp, and his clothing was searched for the money he did not have. Within minutes after police arrived on the scene, the victim of this brutal attack was dead. And what had his 11 attackers—all teen-agers—been seeking? The admission price of 35 cents to attend a neighborhood dance!

Blind, senseless brutality! No sconscience! No sense of right and wrong! Violence for the sake of violence! This is the frightening face of juvenile crime in its most terrible form.

Yes, our juvenile-delinquency problem is real, and it is growing. It may even be more serious here than in other areas of the world. Following a trip to the United States to study juvenile criminals, an Austrian educator reported in a lecture that he had found a fundamental difference between juvenile delinquency in Europe and in the United States. He indicated that the American way of life requires more self-control and discipline than the European one and that when the juvenile aggressor casts off his inhibitions, his acts are more ruthless and elemental. In short, the American juvenile delinquent is more deadly than his European counterpart.

TRIGGER-HAPPY AMERICANS

The Austrian educator said: "If someone in Austria is threatened by a juvenile gangster holding a pistol, he might be able to talk him out of it. No chance of that in America. The young rowdy would pull the trigger."

Much of the trigger-pulling in America occurs in the new urban menace—the juvenile gang.

The swift growth of these gangs holds a deadly portent for the future. The drive and purpose of the "bopping" gang are, with rare exception, alien to juvenile groupings of the past. Emotional intensity without moral responsibility renders these packs of young hoodlums increasingly explosive and dangerous. Vicious and arrogant, cruel and cowardly, seeking to rule a specific area of the city by fear and violence, the modern juvenile gang assembles an arsenal of zip guns, switch-blade knives, steel chains and other deadly weapons.

The terror which exists in those areas infested by the juvenile gang reaches its ultimate in outbreaks of savage brutality and murder. Witness, for example, the gang killing of a crippled 15-year-old youth and the vicious assault on his companion in New York last year. They were kicked, beaten and stabbed.

Another aspect of delinquency is the ever-increasing juvenile vandalism. Schools have been wrecked, cemeteries and houses of worship have been desecrated. And vandalism has led to more than property damage.

Last year a 12-year-old boy admitted starting a fire which took three lives. Police files showed that despite his youth, this boy had an impressive record. He previously had been picked up for throwing rocks, shooting an air gun and placing "torpedoes" on streetcar tracks. He admitted starting four other fires in addition to the fatal blaze.

TERRIFYING PICTURE

Senseless brutality, gang killings, vandalism—these, together with the other major crimes I have mentioned, add up to a truly terrifying picture of juvenile delinquency today.

What can we do about juvenile delinquency? In this series, I propose the following two-part counterattack:

First, we must bring under control existing delinquency. To do this, we must launch an immediate program of decisive action by police, the courts and parents.

Second, we must prevent future delinquency. This means a long-range but positive plan to strengthen the moral fiber of America.

We must act now to halt this spreading disease, which if not stopped, will bring the law of the jungle to every American street.

PART II

SEVEN STEPS TO HALT TEEN-AGE TERROR

"I want to be a good burglar, and I figure I'll have to go to prison to learn the business * * * but you know, I'm a pretty good burglar right now." These words were voiced last January by a ten-year-old. He was, indeed, a "pretty good burglar." This boy had admitted breaking into a bar, a machine shop and a lunchroom. He had had other brushes with the law—including one in 1957 which had prompted his mother to complain that she could not control him.

Unable to control a ten-year-old child! What an absurd statement! Here is but one more example of a modern phenomenon which is sweeping across America—the abdication of parental responsibility that underlies the nightmare growth of juvenile delinquency.

Last Sunday, I outlined the scope of the problem.

In today's article, I wish to present a counterattack, a comprehensive plan to control delinquency, make our streets safe from gang warfare, protect our property and our very lives. It may be summed up in seven points.

We must:

1. Drive home to parents what their responsibilities toward their youngsters are.
2. Improve the effectiveness of juvenile courts and juvenile aid facilities.
3. Stop coddling known young criminals.
4. Take the protective wraps of secrecy and anonymity off juvenile hoodlums.
5. Crack down hard on the corrupters of youth—the dope peddlers, pornographers, etc.
6. Attack delinquency problems at the local level, mobilizing community resources for a unified front against immorality and crime.
7. And this is most important: begin today to reestablish a firm moral structure in America to prevent future delinquency.

The first six points in my program make up a plan to control existing delinquency. Let me elaborate on them—and on the urgent need for them—today. I will discuss the final point in next week's concluding article.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PARENTS

Any program to combat juvenile delinquency can begin in only one place—the home. Abdication of parental responsibility—a malignant form of self-indulgence before duty—has gained a strange hold on all too many American households today. One jurist said recently:

"The (delinquency) problem is not so much an improper youth as it is an improper home."

Unquestionably, the very heart of the delinquency problem rests with the family. When mothers and fathers fulfill responsibilities of parenthood, juvenile crime cannot exist.

Everyone is aware of the problems confronting the children of broken homes. But how about the problems of children in "bent" homes? Let me illustrate:

The pressures of business have estranged thousands of youngsters from their fathers. The distance between office and home has grown increasingly greater, and in many families the young children are in bed before their father gets home from work. Under circumstances such as these, mothers have been forced into a role of greater authority and responsibility. The man of the house tends to be looked upon as merely a weekend handy man—a tired, silent partner.

Many fathers are forced to hold two jobs in order to make ends meet. In some families both father and mother are employed.

The result of the above situations is obvious: the children suffer. Repeated rationalizations—"After all, it's in the interest of the whole family"—are small consolation to the youngster who thirsts for the love and attention of his "too busy" parents.

These are the practical problems of what I call "bent" homes. What about the psychological factors?

A terrible degree of moral decay has infected those parents who flaunt press clippings concerning their numerous marriages and divorces. And how much further into degradation can some mothers and fathers sink after exposing their children to wild parties and thinly veiled promiscuity? Yet, these are common occurrences within the growing ranks of those "sophisticates" who pride themselves on never permitting moral considerations to interfere with their personal desires.

In a normal child, the stamp of character is imprinted early. And it is imprinted deep. Youngsters learn quickly by the example of their parents.

And even more important, boys and girls who have known little or no real family life invariably long for the security of a genuine home. Subconsciously aware that they are being cheated, they do not understand exactly how life has failed them. So these youngsters react blindly and compulsively, striking out at society in general. This is the beginning of juvenile delinquency.

How can we relate parental neglect to delinquency? In some States there are laws under which penalties—including fines and jail sentences—have been levied against the parents of juvenile offenders. This is one way to make disinterested parents face up to their responsibilities to their children.

Where parental neglect is found to be a factor in delinquency, society has every right to demand that the parents of the young offender be called into court and be required to account for their actions. Neglectful mothers and fathers are no less a menace to the community than are their children. Let them be identified and publicly recognized as such.

IMPROVEMENT OF JUVENILE COURTS

Every State has special courts or special court procedures to deal with juvenile crime. Yet many of these facilities are sorely inadequate to handle the load.

One Maryland judge complained last June that in his county the Juvenile Court was expected to function with an inadequate staff, no juvenile detention facilities, no treatment institutions for disturbed children, and no police officers trained in handling juveniles.

In another community it was revealed that youngsters in immediate need of psychiatric care had to wait from six months to a year to get into one of the city's child clinics.

A metropolitan newspaper recently editorialized, "As long as young criminals can, figuratively or otherwise, thumb their noses at police and the courts because they know that usually there's no place to commit them—except in the so-called custody of their parents—just so long will our city be in a sorry and perilous fix. The inadequate facilities for neglected children are likewise a disgrace to the city."

It is a common practice to heap a greater burden upon the existing facilities than they possibly can bear. This has been true of probation and parole systems where supervision of released offenders becomes a sham when the existing staff of officers is required to supervise greater and greater numbers of cases. This also has been true of welfare departments such as the one in which a case worker complained that it was impossible for her to do an adequate job for any of the 90 children assigned to her.

We need improved and enlarged juvenile court and juvenile aid facilities to help stamp out delinquency.

CODDLING OF KNOWN YOUNG CRIMINALS

Frankly, I am alarmed at the extremes to which some authorities have been permitted to go in protecting young offenders. Under a pretext of rehabilitation, tragic blunders have been committed against the American people.

As I said in last week's article, I know that I have been called an advocate of the "get tough" policy. To some extent this is true. I think the time has come when we must be realistic. We must show the hard-core delinquents who have no respect for law and order that we mean business.

Sometimes the coddling of delinquents takes an ironic form. In a number of cases, misguided "humanitarians" have succeeded only in ruining the lives of the juveniles they were so earnestly trying to help.

Let me illustrate with an actual case. Last February a 17-year-old hoodlum was captured after a gun battle with police. He was well known to the authorities in his city, having built up an extensive juvenile record over a five-year period. A probation officer familiar with this youth's case said that the boy idolized his father. Who is his father? A veteran criminal, now serving a 15-year sentence for burglarizing a grocery market.

Several months before his gun battle with the police, this teen-ager and his father had been arrested for grand larceny. The youth was convicted, but the charges against his father were dismissed for lack of evidence. Here was an opportunity to remove this young man from the influence of his father. Instead, he was merely placed on probation—and in effect permitted to continue his apprenticeship in crime.

Coddling of delinquents must be stopped—for the protection of the youths themselves, as well as the general public.

PROTECTION OF DELINQUENTS BY SECRECY

Closely linked to the coddling of young criminals is the widespread practice of sheltering them under a cloak of secrecy. A number of investigative agencies have been dangerously hampered in protecting the public by the secrecy which many courts attach to official proceedings involving juveniles.

For example, last Christmas four teen-agers brutally beat an attendant and escaped from the detention hall in a Southern city. Three of the boys were being held pending their transfer to the State reformatory. They had been picked up for robbery. The fourth boy reportedly was being held as a material witness in a sex case.

Despite the extensive records of these young hoodlums and despite their brutally executed escape, juvenile authorities were said to be "powerless" to identify them to the public. One juvenile court judge was quoted as stating, "If they are not recaptured within 24 hours, we may name the boys and describe their records as a matter of public welfare. But at the moment we are bound to respect the fact they are juveniles and withhold their identity."

A more realistic approach to delinquency certainly is needed when dangerous teen-agers such as these are permitted to hide under an umbrella of secrecy. Youths who commit vicious crimes, as well as those who are guilty of repeated offenses, are not mere delinquents. And they should not be accorded all the special considerations which delinquents have come to expect.

We must stop shielding young hoodlums from publicity. We should use publicity positively to fight delinquency. It can be a powerful weapon. Let's bring all the names and facts about teen-ager crime out into the open.

CORRUPTION OF YOUTH

Our country is plagued today by an ugly brand of parasite who commercializes upon the immature judgment and curiosity of young people. In this category I include the filth merchants, dope peddlers and others who make their living by corrupting youth. These furtive characters frequently are found loitering near schools, playgrounds and juvenile hangouts. They also run the mail-order houses which blanket the nation with promotional material such as the following letter:

"Hello!

"My name is Mary . . .

"I'm an art model—pose in the nude you know, and I thought maybe you would like me or my girl friends to pose for you in a very special way . . ."

The post Office Department, which has jurisdiction when obscene material is sent through the mails, has received thousands of complaints from parents in all parts of the country whose children have received these letters. But our youngsters do not have to send away for indecent pictures and literature. There probably is a generous supply on the shelves of a neighboring newsstand.

Dealing in pornography and other forms of filth has become a multimillion-dollar business. In one city, the police recently arrested the operator of a bookstore who had been selling indecent photographs, color slides, pamphlets and books at prices ranging up to $75. Two squad cars were needed to haul away the filth which was found in his apartment.

As a law-enforcement officer, I am required to exercise strict control over my emotions. But frankly there are times when I cannot help feeling my blood boil. This is particularly so in cases where an adult has deliberately set out to corrupt the morals of a child.

The examples, unfortunately, are legion. In one city, the head of the Juvenile Bureau complained that the delinquency problem had been compounded by the fact that homosexuals were plying local teen-agers with liquor and making advances toward them. In another city, two boys, aged 16 and 18, were taught the criminal art of stealing and forging checks by an ex-convict.

And in a third city, a middle-aged mother of five children was found to be the supplier of weapons for a gang of young robbers.

But of all the corrupters of youth, perhaps none is more terrible than the dope peddler. The dope pusher entices children to try narcotics, and in many cases the youngsters become addicted to drugs. It is well known that drug addiction leads directly to crime. The addict craves larger and larger doses, and the price is high. To get expensive narcotics, youths often follow the trail which leads from larceny to burglary and to more serious crimes.

All calculated assaults upon the standards of youth should be met with stern law enforcement and punishment. In communities where existing laws are inadequate to thwart the filth merchants, the dope peddlers, and the rest—let's have new laws, laws with teeth in them.

MOBILIZE COMMUNITY RESOURCES

An effective attack against the delinquency problem can be launched in only one place. That is at the community level. Crime and delinquency are essentially local problems.

In the final analysis, immoral conditions persist within a community only because the last person to recognize his responsibility and acknowledge his blame is the individual citizen. He finds fault with the police department, ignores the pleas for assistance of youth-serving agencies, berates the schools and complains, "Why hasn't the Federal Government done something about this?"

How absurd! Despite the pleas for creation of a special Federal agency to spearhead the fight against delinqency and crime, I want to assure you that the Federal Government has no vaccine or cure-all to overcome moral sicknesses which exist in local communities. If the frightening growth of youth offenses is to be stopped, the forces for good within each community must unite.

As a first step, local efforts must be coordinated. Agencies must pool their resources. Petty jealousies and differences must not stand in the way when there is vital work to be done. Church groups, Parent-Teacher Associations, public and private youth-serving agencies, civic organizations and local law-enforcement agencies must all work together—for the benefit of all.

The second step requires a realistic appraisal of local weaknesses which are a detriment to the cause of decency. Inadequate police budgets, lack of playgrounds in crowded residential areas, obsolete juvenile detention facilities, weakness in existing laws, overcrowded schools, and lack of supervised recreational programs are among the many dangerous conditions which prevail in all too many cities across the Nation. These conditions can best be recognized—and corrected—by the local citizens themselves.

The third step is action. Not only must corrective measures be initiated but each one of them must be carried through.

There you have my plan for the basis of a counterattack on existing delinquency.

Now, what about my seventh point: That we must begin today to re-establish a firm moral structure in America to prevent future delinquency.

I feel this step is tremendously important. Any plan to control delinquency must look to the future as well as to the present. Point Seven calls for a reaffirmation of the moral values that can stop delinquency in the future.

We cannot allow this situation to continue. We must make our towns and cities safe, now and forever, from juvenile terror. Once Americans understand this, I am sure they can do it.

PART III

WHERE DOES DISCIPLINE BEGIN?

Last summer a very interesting newspaper article came to my attention. It concerned an outdoor camp for boys—one established under the sponsorship of a religious organization. This is no ordinary boys' camp. It caters to youths whom many other camps would reject as undesirable.

After school had closed for the summer, a group of about 100 boys departed for this camp from the crowded streets of a large eastern city. Their ages ranged between 14 and 21. No less than 40 of them had court records, and a number of others belonged to juvenile gangs. Heading the group as it boarded buses for a month's stay at the camp was a youth worker who was only a few years removed from childhood himself. Did this young man have any misgivings about the backgrounds and court records of these boys? Not in the least. In the following words he expressed his attitude toward the challenge presented by these boys:

"We have some of the toughest guys in the city. We know what they've done and what they're capable of doing. But we show them what toughness really is—being able to face up to problems and assume a responsible place in the community."

The man who spoke these words, and the camp in which he works, are doing an effective job in combating juvenile delinquency. I would like to contend in this article that his philosophy is our true final answer to this terrifying problem.

We must show youth "what toughness really is." These are profound words. Character, pride, resourcefulness, excellence—these qualities require real toughness. It takes strength and courage to be good, to stand for the principles which we all know are right. If we can help our youths develop this moral toughness, they will become the kind of citizens America needs to survive as a free nation.

I cannot overemphasize the urgency of the delinquency situation. The current wave of youthful crime and vandalism is mounting in both size and intensity.

In community after community across the land, youthful hoodlums are going on the rampage. Juvenile arrests are rising at such a rate that 791,000 arrests of persons under 18 years of age are predicted for 1958—and one million will be recorded each year beginning 1962.

As I said two weeks ago in my first article in this series, juvenile lawlessness must be stopped. The time has come for a counter-attack against juvenile delinquency.

Last week I outlined half of a counter-attack against juvenile delinquency. I presented a six-point plan to control existing delinquency by:

1. Accenting the responsibilities of parents.
2. Improving our juvenile courts and juvenile-aid facilities.
3. Stopping the coddling of young criminals.
4. Stopping the protection of juvenile hoodlums by secrecy.
5. Cracking down on the corrupters of youth.
6. Attacking delinquency at the local level.

Fighting existing delinquency, however, is only half the problem. At the same time, we must also begin today to re-establish a firm moral structure to prevent future delinquency. We must stop sowing the seeds for more frightening delinquency in the years to come.

Today, I will suggest an approach to this most difficult problem. I will try to indicate a cure for the underlying sickness of our age which I call "decadence disease." If a cure can be found, if we can restore to America the firm moral precepts of our forefathers, we can ward off future delinquency.

How can we head off future delinquency? How can we convert the arrogant toughness of our teenagers into a moral, constructive toughness? The best way is by example—adult example. Yet, as examples thousands of American mothers and fathers are proving themselves dismal failures.

THE "DECADENCE DISEASE"

From the examples of these parents, more and more youngsters are learning dangerously harmful lessons: "Rules are made to be broken." "If you are smart enough, you can get away with anything." "After all, you only live once."

Corrupt slogans! Parents by their own words and deeds are beckoning youngsters to abandon the principles which have made this a great country!

"Decadence disease" is infecting our children. And self-indulgence, the insistence upon pleasure before duty, the constant search for "the easy way"—are its symptoms.

When a child is exposed to dubious morality at home, he invariably becomes confused. When glaring inconsistencies exist between what he is told is right and what he sees going on, neither praise nor criticism from his parents can have any real meaning. Mothers and fathers who bask in self-indulgence are grossly ineffective at disciplining their children or inspiring them toward worthwhile goals.

Confronted with the charge, "You kids are making this a lousy world," one member of a tough juvenile gang replied, "Yeah? That's the way we found it!" And if the adult atmosphere surrounding this young man and other members of "bopping" gangs is taken into consideration, it probably will be impossible to disagree with his flippant remark.

Discipline is the opposite of self-indulgence. Show me a home in which the parents practice self-discipline and I'll show you a home where a mother and father hold the love and respect of their children. A youngster asks only to be taught the boundaries of acceptable behavior. Discipline, fairly and consistently invoked, breeds pride and respect. And children want—desperately—to be disciplined.

THEY NEED GUIDEPOSTS

Superficially, they may rebel. But on a deeper level, where character is formed, a child wants to be told what he can and cannot do. He needs guideposts to help him orient himself to the world. He looks to his parents for these guideposts. If parents are lazy or indifferent or over-indulgent, is it any wonder that a child loses love and respect for them? How can a child continue to look up to a parent who continually compromises and yields to him?

No American, regardless of his age, outgrows the need for discipline and self-discipline. In a democracy, restraint and self-control are essential in all phases of life. This fact should be evident to all normal adults, and it should serve as a guide to them in rearing their children.

Frankly, I become irritated when I hear doting mothers and fathers say, "I love Junior so much that I just can't bring myself to punish him." In reality, these parents do not love their children. It is a strange kind of love indeed which turns a normal infant into a maladjusted child!

And let there be no mistake, an undisciplined child cannot help being maladjusted. Frustration, tension and resentment confront him on all sides.

On the west coast last February, three young boys were caught in the act of letting air out of automobile tires. The father of one of the boys, an 11-year-old, was summoned to police headquarters. Told that the youths had deflated scores of tires, the father unhesitatingly said, "Son, pump them up again." After supervising as the boys inflated 16 tires with hand pumps, he yielded a bit and rented a power air pump for them to use. But he saw to it that the job was completed.

What a refreshing and praiseworthy attitude! Contrast this with the attitude of other parents whom law-enforcement agencies encounter day after day:

"Oh, no! Not my Harry! You officers are always picking on him. Why don't you let him alone?"

A FIRM HAND

Pampering, overprotection, making excuses and cooing soft words when a firm hand across the seat of the trousers would be more appropriate are practices which create contempt for authority and obstruct decency among youth. These practices are harmful enough when they exist merely in the home. But today we even find them spreading to some of our courts.

In California last year a 17-year-old hoodlum was arrested following an attempted burglary. This young criminal cursed at the arresting officers and boasted that regardless of the kind of report they made, the courts would release him in a couple of days. What made him so certain of this? "I've been arrested and released before!" he sneered in defiance.

Near the Nation's Capitol, a 15-year-old was attacked from behind and viciously beaten by an older boy who was wielding a milk jug. The victim's skull was fractured, his nose broken, and he required a number of stitches. The attack was unprovoked. Yet, when the assailant appeared in court, the judge dismissed the assault charge.

In another case local policemen were assaulted by two 17-year-olds who called them obscene names and shouted at a crowd of people to "help kill" the officers. During the fracas, a gun was taken from one of the teenagers. Both of these youths had police records. Yet, for openly defying the law, each of them was sentenced to serve only 60 days in jail and a term of probation.

Let there be no mistake. I do not advocate handling all violators under the same rules which are applied to hardened criminals. I do feel, however, that the seriousness of violating the law must be impressed upon juvenile delinquents and other young offenders. They must learn that, in spite of the leniencies they may receive in the interest of rehabilitation, and in spite of their youth, society still holds them responsible for their acts. And that repeated violations will not be tolerated—no matter how young the offender may be.

APPROPRIATE PUNISHMENTS

In dealing with juveniles, it is essential that the punishment fit both the offense and the offender.

Earlier this year, six boys in Virginia were convicted of savagely beating and mistreating a mule. They used planks and pummeled the poor animal so cruelly that it was feared it would lose an eye. The judge who heard the case ordered that the boys be given what many may regard as an appropriate punishment, "a good sound old-fashioned whipping" by their parents. In addition, each of the six was released to the custody of his parents on strict injunction of good behavior until he attains the age of 18.

In another case, a 17-year-old boy who had committed extensive acts of vandalism in a high school was placed on probation under the provision that he find a part-time job after school and make restitution at the rate of $20 per month for the damage he had done.

If, as a result of their sentences, the six Virginia youths learn to respect the feelings of animals and the teen-age vandal learns to value the property of others, the courts will have helped them to become better citizens. What more can we ask of our juvenile courts than a record of positive accomplishments such as this?

But we must understand that a child will never reach a juvenile court if his parents believe and practice discipline. No child will hate his parents if firm but fair discipline is consistently applied. On the contrary, the youngster will feel his father and mother care enough about him to want to teach him the differences between right and wrong. Indifference and over-indulgence breed contempt. Discipline breeds love.

THE DEADLY SLOGANS

Our teen-agers must be taught discipline outside the home, too. Many visitors to our shores simply cannot understand, for example, how an American youth could ever strike a teacher or, for that matter, refuse to obey a teacher's command. The homelands of these people have a deep-bred respect for teachers and other public officials.

The teens are difficult years. They are a stage of life when virtually every child begins to feel new pressures. "Conform." "Give in." "Join the crowd." "Don't be a square." These are more than expressions. They are real and awesome forces in the teen-age world.

The stereotype of our modern-day troubled teen-ager is an unruly, outspoken, rock-and-roll addict who cruises the streets in a "souped-up" jalopy, shouting insults out the window. In appearance he aspires to looking "shaggy" and to leaving behind the impression that he has not been near a barber shop in weeks.

The teen-agers who fit into this general pattern are fickle, aimless and confused. Whether drag-racing down a major highway or thumping a pencil in dejected boredom over their schoolwork, these boys and girls feel a basic insecurity. A void exists in their lives, and they are constantly experimenting—shifting from one fad and one "craze" to another—trying often pathetically to fill the gap.

The bravado and self-confident air of these youngsters veil only thinly a basic fear and uncertainty, an emptiness which gnaws deep in their souls. These children long for something which cannot be found without the help of adult society: discipline and direction.

We are plagued by a growing juvenile problem only because adult America has failed its youth. Rather than standing aloof and asking "What is the younger generation coming to?" we adults must establish a closer relationship with our youngsters. They need standards, goals, wholesome examples. They need vision and imagination such as burned so intensely in the hearts of our forefathers. They need adults who will help give direction to their lives.

In my book, "Masters of Deceit," I wrote: ". . . youth gravitates toward companionship with competent, generous, and experienced adults. . . If the adults can show, in action, that it is possible to combine high idealism with solid practicality and patience, the results will enhance character and citizenship development manyfold."

OUR ADULT DELINQUENCY

Herein lies the solution to the problem. We adults must set the example for young America. Let us invade the juvenile world with ideals. Let us bring meaning and purpose into the lives of our children. Let us leave no room in their minds for ugly thoughts or vicious deeds. And they will have no need to turn to either criminality or to communism to fill a void.

If we adults succeed, if we can change destructive toughness to firm moral toughness, we will have succeeded in preventing delinquency in the future. And we will have bequeathed to our children—and to our Nation—the greatest gift of all. We will have given them the toughness, moral fiber, strength and courage to keep our Nation strong and free.

Mr. KEATING. There is a great deal of thoughtful comment in these articles, and in my view they should be must reading for every citizen who is concerned about or with young people today. These articles strike me as the most effective presentation of the need for a "hard" as opposed to a "soft" attitude in dealing with hard-core juvenile criminals.

I hope every member of the Senate will take the time to read—or re-read—Mr. Hoover's articles. They have a particular importance to us because we can do our part in helping the battle against juvenile crime by enacting sound legislation to curb the dissemination of pornography in this country, and by providing proper and sound assistance of the Federal Government to state and local efforts to wipe out juvenile delinquency.

Mr. President, from time to time in my remarks I have mentioned the so-called "soft approach" to the problem of juvenile offenders. I am particularly concerned about this attitude because of a reprint of a paper which I have on the desk beside me. It is a paper presented by William C. Kvaraceus, a professor of education at Boston University. who is now working on a three-year project on prediction of juvenile delinquency for the U.S. Office of Education. Dr. Kvaraceus has also been active in various National Education Association projects on this subject.

This particular paper was presented on July 29 of this year as part of the Martin G. Brumbaugh lecture series at the University of Pennsylvania. It is a scholarly and careful exposition of the author's views with regard to the subject of "The Delinquent in School and Court."

What troubles me is the overall "soft" attitude this paper presents. And particularly in the light of the fact that the author is presently on the payroll of the Federal Government. I especially resent his somewhat snide references to the views of J. Edgar Hoover and other dedicated men who happen to adhere, as I do, to the "hard" school in dealing with teenage problems.

I do not condemn Dr. Kvaraceus' keen interest in the potential of common schools and juvenile courts to mete out special justice for youthful offenders. I think we should explore thoroughly all possibilities for progress through those institutions. What I do disagree with is the general softness which appears to pervade his philosophy—a softness which can have no place when we are dealing with hardened criminals, no matter what their age.

I agree, of course, with his admonition that "Courts and schools must continue to regard the young violator as a special individual needing help and understanding." All of us, including J. Edgar Hoover, who represents so eloquently the so-called "get tough" school, would go along with that philosophy.

But Dr. Kvaraceus does not stop there. He goes on to berate "a number of prominent jurists and other officials"—and here, he means men of the stature of J. Edgar Hoover and Judge Samuel S. Liebowitz—who are "calling loudly for stronger and harsher methods for dealing with young law violators." Mr. President, I suppose he is right. Mr. Hoover and others are working to make sure that hardcore juvenile offenders who repeat their crimes again and again are shown that our police and our courts mean business. I agree 100 percent with that view, as Mr. Hoover has so ably outlined it in his This Week magazine articles I referred to earlier in my remarks. I hope that view will prevail when New York City officials are dealing with the perpetrators of the recent teenage outrages in Manhattan.

Dr. Kvaraceus goes on to attack those in the hard school who would open up juvenile court proceedings and records to the press. Again I am in disagreement with him.

I believe sincerely in the public's right to know about crime and criminals, be they young or old. Of course, some discretion must be used in protecting youthful minor offenders. But when we are dealing with repeated offenders who have over and over again thumbed their noses at law enforcement, then their deeds and their record should be a matter for public attention and public scrutiny.

As Mr. Hoover has pointed out, the lack of publicity about the criminal records of some teenage hoodlums has resulted in horrible deeds when the delinquents have moved to a new community where they are allowed to run free. I say that if the youth is a hard-core criminal, who has shown clearly his lawless tendencies and his lack of respect for society, then our newspapers and other media of communication should be given access to his record and should be allowed to convey that record to the public at large.

I do not regard this philosophy as in any way demonstrating an attitude of hostility or of undue harshness. It is simply an attitude which faces up to reality.

If properly handled, publicity for hard-core offenders need not in any way interfere with the excellent work done by many groups, individuals, and organizations to rehabilitate young people gone wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, may I have 5 additional minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 5 additional minutes to the Senator from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, in this connection, I might point out that none of us who belong to the "hard" school in dealing with teenage criminals believes that punishment is necessarily the basic means for dealing with each and every delinquent. All we are saying—and Mr. Hoover has said this until he is blue in the face—is that when the young person has committed really serious crimes, or has repeatedly broken the law, then he forfeits his right to sympathetic consideration and must be dealt with severely.

Mr. Hoover puts it this way:

> I heartily endorse reasonable consideration for children involved in minor delinquencies and first offenses. I do not, however, believe that the umbrella of special privilege should be held impartially over all juveniles, including those who commit heinous crimes or those guilty of repeated offenses. Leniency is misdirected when it is applied repeatedly to those whose every act expresses disdain for law.

That is sound doctrine, Mr. President, and it is my hope it will find even more adherents in the days ahead as we come to grips with the problems of juvenile delinquency. We should, at the same time, explore with diligence and understanding the motivations of young people gone wrong, delve into the sociological and psychological reasons for their actions, and approach their behavior with sympathy and understanding. From this we will be building foundations for long-range answers to the problems of our troubled young people. Certainly, we must pound home hard the message that in the church and in the home are the ingredients for preventing juvenile delinquency and building useful citizens.

But in the meantime we cannot sit back and let these hardened teenage criminals run loose. We cannot, while we grope for long-range solutions, ignore the peril to society posed by hardcore criminals without conscience or respect for law and order.

It is my hope that a realistic blending of the hard and soft schools of thought on this subject will characterize any actions of Congress in such fields as combating smut in the mails, and providing help for localities and States to fight juvenile delinquency. I would also hope that for the present, the authorities in New York City will crack down hard on the leaders of the current reign of terror, and will show others who would go into crime that it does not pay.

In the end, of course, crime and delinquency are essentially local problems to be solved at the local level. They will be solved by tough-minded realists who recognize the importance of sympathy and understanding while practicing harsh methods on young people when they are called for.

What must be done is to unite the forces for good within each community in the land. Church and synagogue, school and club, court and law enforcement agencies, Government, and private organizations—all must join hands in mounting this great counterattack which is so vital to the future of our country.

I am confident the people of New York City are on the right track in this regard. I am confident that there, as in other cities of our land, their dedicated and realistic efforts will be successful so that in the end we will substitute juvenile decency for juvenile delinquency as the important characterization of our young people.

EXTENSION OF AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1748) to extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, and for other purposes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, how much time remains on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first committee amendment has been stated. There is a limitation of 30 minutes to an amendment, 15 minutes on each side.

Mr. ELLENDER. How much time remains on the bill itself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proponents have 18 minutes remaining, and the opponents have 60 minutes on the bill itself.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time allotted to the Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING], who just spoke, not be deducted from the time on the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. How was the 2 hours used?

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not know who yielded the time away.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the proponents used 22 minutes on the bill last night.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Would not that leave 38 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from New York has just consumed an additional 20 minutes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon will state it.

Mr. MORSE. I thought it was understood last night that the discussion of the bill last night was not to be applied to the time under the unanimous-consent agreement, but that the time under the agreement was to start running today. I think, if it is correctly recorded, that agreement will be found in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator from Oregon that under the unanimous-consent agreement time was not used last night but was used previous to the debate on the veto message today.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, as I recall, the only time which has been used on the bill is the time used by the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and the time used by the senior Senator from Minnesota. I recall using 15 minutes myself. I believe a comparable amount of time was used by the chairman.

Mr. ELLENDER. I used about 11 minutes, as I recall.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct; and the junior Senator from New York has just used 20 minutes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time used by the junior Senator from New York be restored to the proponents of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, at the desk is a namendment known as a committee amendment, designated "8–25–59—B." In order to simplify matters, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there are two typographical errors in the committee amendments as they have been printed and lie on the desk.

On page 2, between lines 7 and 8, the following should be inserted:

> At the end of the bill, add the following:

On page 5, line 10, the paragraph designation "(1)" should be "(11)."

I ask unanimous consent that these modifications be made, since they are of a technical nature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota please repeat his statement about the amendments, by page and line?

Mr. HUMPHREY. On page 2, between lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to insert:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

On page 5, line 10, change the paragraph designation from "(1)" to "(11)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Minnesota please send his modifications to the desk?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes. I understand the amendments are agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments to the committee are agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Minnesota modified his amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments to S. 1748 be agreed to en bloc and that the bill as amended be considered as original text for the purpose of amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ELLENDER. I object.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I call up the amendment designated "8–25–59—B."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment is pending.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I first asked that the committee amendments be considered en bloc. There was no objection. I now call up the committee amendment designated "8–25–59—B," not the first amendment. It is all one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are two amendments. If there is objection, they cannot be so considered as one.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That may be true. I have not heard objection.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will state it.

Mr. ELLENDER. I objected to the consideration of the amendments en bloc. I presume the procedure to be followed now is to have each amendment considered separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The senior Senator from Minnesota considers the amendment designated "8–25–59—B" to be the amendment he offers, since he wrote it and presented it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. I attended the committee meeting, and my recollection was that we voted separately on certain amendments which the committee approved. I have no objection whatever to their being reported as committee amendments, but the first of them is included on line 1 of the amendment which the distinguished Senator is now mentioning; that is, to change the time covered from 1 year to 3 years. That amendment was voted on separately, as a separate amendment to be presented. We have the right to ask for a division now, but I should think the distinguished Senator from Minnesota would want to present it as a separate amendment, because it was so presented to the committee, so acted upon by the committee, and so approved by a majority of the committee, although over the disapproval of a minority of the committee.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I respectfully disagree. The senior Senator from Minnesota asked if these amendments might be presented individually, not only as committee amendments. There was agreement to that. That is why they are presented this way. I can count. I can read. I know how to present amendments, after having been in the Senate for all these years. If I had wanted to present them as separate amendments, that would have been done. If someone else wants to do it, that is his privilege. But I am proceeding according to my own desire as to how the amendments ought to be presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made to considering the amendments en bloc. The amendments presented by the Senator from Minnesota relate to two different sections of the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I did not ask that the amendments be considered en bloc; I asked that the amendments be considered en bloc so the bill might be considered as original text. That is an entirely different request from asking that the committee amendments be considered en bloc. Let us presume that these are not committee amendments, but are presented by a Senator as one amendment and in one document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as presented affects two different portions of the bill, and if objection is made, the amendments must be separated and considered separately.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I will respect the decision of the Chair. I might add that there was a bit of advice that came even before I had gotten around to asking for the amendments to be considered en bloc. Therefore, I now offer the language as an amendment and yield back, first, the time on the committee amendments en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CANNON in the chair). At this time a committee amendment is pending.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, no committee amendment is pending. The pending amendment is a Humphrey amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments are printed as committee amendments.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have had a little difficulty getting that kind of an identification of these amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How does the Senator from Minnesota wish to submit his amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I submit the following amendment: On page 1, line 7, strike out "1960" and insert "1962."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator of Minnesota will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, in line 7, it is proposed to strike out "1960" and to insert "1962."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, all this amendment does is accommodate the bill to the recommendations which have been made by all the persons, with the exception of the Secretary of Agriculture, who have studied Public Law 480. All the experts he has hired and all public and private groups who have studied Public Law 480 recommend that it be extended for more than 1 year.

This amendment provides for a 3-year extension for title I and title II of Public Law 480. It seems to me this amendment will result in good, sound programing. I doubt that any one would predict that the surpluses would be abolished between now and 1962; I have not heard any evidence to that effect. If there is any evidence of that sort, I am sure the country would welcome having it presented and made public.

My proposal was concurred in by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and an extension for 5 years was concurred in by the Foreign Relations Committee.

Therefore, Mr. President, I urge that my amendment be adopted. It provides for a 3-year extension, instead of a 1-year extension.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, as has been correctly stated by the senior Senator from Minnesota, a bare majority of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry agreed to this amendment. I opposed it, as did quite a few other members of the committee.

As the Senator from Minnesota has stated, the Department of Agriculture is opposed to a 3-year extension of this program.

From its inception, this program has always been considered a temporary one.

A 3-year extension, as proposed by the Senator from Minnesota—thus making this a 3-year program—would be in line with what the State Department desires. In effect, then, this agricultural program would evolve into a very definite arm of our foreign aid, giveaway program.

If the pending amendment, along with other amendments which I presume will be submitted later tonight by the distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota, is adopted, it would simply mean that this program would become a permanent institution.

Mr. President, the Department of Agriculture takes the position that since this program from its inception has been a temporary one, it should be continued as such. In addition, the Department has said that it has the capacity to spend only $1,500 million over a period of 12 months for the title I loans.

In this connection, many persons think these agricultural surpluses can be sent to any corner of the world without any difficulty. But this is not so. Many problems would plague efforts to ship vast amounts of the surpluses to foreign countries. For instance, storage is in short supply abroad, and accordingly, only a certain number of bushels of wheat and a certain number of bales of cotton can be sent abroad.

As I said before, the Department of Agriculture takes the position that the 1-year extension, with an authorization of $1.5 billion for title I loans will be sufficient; and that to extend the program for 3 years would simply transform it to part and parcel of our foreign aid giveaway program.

Mr. President, because of the limitation of debate I ask unanimous consent to have included at this point in my remarks a statement which I prepared dealing with the pending amendment of the senior Senator from Minnesota.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This provision would extend title I of Public Law 480 for 3 years, in lieu of the 1-year extension provided by S. 1748 as originally reported.

The Department of Agriculture opposes a 3-year extension of title I. They say that a 1-year extension is adequate to continue the programing of surplus agricultural commodities to friendly countries, that no greater rate of disposition would result from a 3-year extension, and that such an extension is not required for efficient operation of the program.

In 1954 we were faced with a surplus of agricultural commodities. Commodity Credit Corporation then had about $6 billion worth of agricultural commodities in inventory or under loan. Many bills were introduced in the Senate and the House dealing with means of disposing of this surplus. At the same time we had a large foreign-aid program. Many people thought that we might use our oversupply of agricultural commodities, instead of dollars, to pay part of our foreign-aid program costs, to pay for strategic and critical materials we needed, and for other useful ends.

Today, 5 years later, we have spent about $6 billion on the title I program, not counting costs of administration. Commodity Credit Corporation stocks in inventory or under loan have risen to about $9 billion. Perhaps we would have over $15 billion worth of commodities in inventory if we had not spent this $6 billion. I do not know.

Title I was begun as a temporary program and has always been so considered. It was hoped that after a few years our surplus stocks would be reduced. That has not occurred and there may be many good reasons why it has not. No better proposal for disposing of our surplus stocks has been developed and title I should be extended. That does not mean, however, that we should give up hope of developing a program that will actually reduce our surplus stocks to a reasonable level. We should not accept title I as a permanent program, nor even accept it as the best that can be devised within the next 3 years. A 1-year extension is adequate to carry on the program efficiently. A 3-year extension would only serve to remove some of the pressure to devise a really effective answer to this very real problem.

Title I is a very popular program even if it has not succeeded in reducing the surplus. It was intended to use surplus commodities, instead of dollars, for foreign aid or other purposes, and some of us hoped that dollars appropriated for those purposes might be used to reimburse Commodity Credit Corporation for the foreign currencies received for the agricultural commodities. The latter has not occurred to any great extent. In most cases the foreign currencies have been used in addition to appropriated dollars. In the negotiation of agreements, the administration tells us that about 50 percent of the foreign currencies are expected to be earmarked for loan or grant to the purchasing country. This is necessary to make the sale, and if the sale were merely to result in the substitution of title I currencies for appropriated aid dollars, the purchasing country would have little incentive to make the purchase.

About 25 percent of the sale proceeds are expected to be earmarked for loans to private firms for use in the purchasing country, and the remaining 25 percent is available for payment of U.S. obligations and a variety of other uses such as schools, libraries, educational exchange and just about every worthy cause that anyone can think of. Title I foreign currencies have been used for increasing beef production in Argentina, loans to agricultural producers in Ecuador, farm-to-market roads in Colombia, irrigation, well-drilling, and agricultural development in Israel, and irrigation and reclamation in Spain. They have been used for electric power, railways, highways, water supplies, processing plants, warehouses, and dams. They have been used for exchange of persons, book translation, schools, libraries, and community centers in foreign lands, binational cultural centers, and innumerable other activities in foreign lands. These may be all very worthy purposes. But they may not be purposes for which we would be willing to appropriate dollars. This is recognized by many of the claimants for these foreign currencies. They would not expect Congress to appropriate dollars for these purposes. But the foreign currencies generated under title I are there waiting to be put to some useful purpose and Congress might just as well add another authorized use for them so that they do not go to waste. There are now so many claimants competing for these funds that the Department of State advises that any further increase in use categories would slow down the working out of agreements and negotiating instructions by the Interagency Staff Committee.

Some may contend that if we have not succeeded in reducing the surplus by means of title I, it is because we have not had a big enough program, and that if every claimant does not get a big enough slice of pie, we ought to increase the size of the pie. There is, of course, a danger in this theory that Congress recognized when it enacted title I. Section 101(a) of the act directs the President to take reasonable precautions to safeguard usual marketings of the United States. This means that foreign currency sales under title I should not displace dollar sales. If they should displace dollar sales, we should be merely converting dollars into foreign currencies to pay for projects for which we might well be unwilling to appropriate dollars. The danger of displacing dollar sales is very considerable, and the larger the program under title I, the greater is that danger.

Title I is the best instrument we have at this time for disposing of our agricultural surplus usefully, but it is not perfect. Let us not accept it as the best we can do, but let us extend it for 1 year and strive for something better.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, at this time I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished senior Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I strongly support the position of the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. ELLENDER].

When the amendment now submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] was offered in the committee, there was considerable discussion of it. It was adopted by a majority of the committee. This took place some weeks after the bill for a simple 1-year extension had been reported to the Senate and placed on the calendar.

As I recall, the vote in the committee was approximately 9 to 6.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I believe it was 10 to 7.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota informs me that the vote was 10 to 7. If that is his distinct recollection, I am sure that was the vote.

Mr. President, it was my very strong feeling that in this instance the Secretary of Agriculture was correct, and that it would not be sound legislation to project this program 3 years into the future, on the assumption that we shall have these heavy surpluses for that length of time.

Only yesterday, or perhaps it was this morning, I saw in the newspapers an article based on an announcement from the Secretary of Agriculture that, for the first time in several years, there is no surplus of butter to be disposed of; and butter was taken off the list.

Mr. President, until we become able to prognosticate what the weather will be in the future and what all other factors in regard to agricultural production will be, it seems to me that to project this program 3 years into the future, without having any knowledge of what our situation then will be or what the world situation then will be, would be extremely unwise.

I call attention to the fact that under the existing law, under which we have made extensions from year to year, it has not been required or expected that any agreement made with another nation, under Public Law 480, would be carried out or executed solely in that year. On the contrary, it would simply be a commitment against the total authorization, which, as presently provided in the committee bill, is for $1,500 million, to be used in this year, which already is partly behind us. The $1,500 million would be committed, but with full knowledge of the fact that the commitments can be met over whatever period of time may be required in order to meet them.

In other words, some of the agreements heretofore made have continued for 2 years; and my recollection is that some of them have continued even into the third year.

However, by means of the pending amendment we are asked to declare, in advance, that we shall have huge surpluses for 3 years, that they will hang over our markets for 3 years, and that not only will we authorize the appropriation of $1,500 million to the Department for the disposal of the surpluses in the fiscal year 1960, but that we will provide the same amount of authorization for each of the fiscal years 1961 and 1962—or a total additional authorization in the amount of $4,500 million, to be available during a period of perhaps 5 years, or perhaps even for as long as 6 years.

Mr. President, when we are operating in a field as uncertain as that of agriculture, and when we know that we cannot determine what sort of weather we shall have or what type of production we shall have, and when we know that an effort such as the one now proposed amounts to a kind of declaration of defeatism—namely, a declaration that we will continue to produce vastly more than we ourselves can use or we ourselves can export to advantage, for 3 years in the future—in my opinion, that is a kind of admission before the fact that we do not propose to deal in any sort of satisfactory way with this surplus disposal problem.

Mr. President, we may have to make that admission from year to year; but I believe that highly improbable, because, in the first place, it seems to me that the farm organizations are alert to the difficulties; and, in the second place, the public is alert to the fact that this program is costing us tremendous amounts of money; and, in the third place, it seems to me that the agricultural producers will, in their own interest, force the bringing about of some reduction of production. If they do not do so, then they do not possess the intelligence which I believe they do possess. If they do not do it, I think that public sentiment will require it. I think the Congress will require it. I am impressed by the declaration of the American Farm Bureau Federation——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield 2 more minutes to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I am impressed by the declaration of the American Farm Bureau Federation as contained in a letter of September 4, addressed to me, which I hold in my hand, stating that—

> The Farm Bureau is greatly disturbed over the possibilities that Public Law 480 will be so amended as to make it ineffective as an agricultural export and trade development program. In line with the current situation we suggest a simple extension of Public Law 480—

That is a 1-year extension, as originally reported from the committee—> without any amendment whatsoever would best preserve the original concepts of this program.

Mr. President, unless we want to launch ourselves in advance of the need and make an admission that we do not propose to bring the farm program into any kind of reasonable production, and, second, that we, in advance, announce to the world that we expect to put them on our largesse for 3 additional years of commitments, which means some 5 or 6 additional years of grants, we should defeat this amendment, because, to my mind, it is a declaration of defeatism, indicating that we do not propose to deal with this critical situation, which the Farm Bureau is concerned about, which the Grange is concerned about, and which the National Council of Farm Cooperatives is deeply concerned about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield 1 more minute to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

I am not challenging at all the intent or the motives of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, but I do think it would be about as fatal a mistake in our protection of agriculture as we could make to commit ourselves in advance to the proposition that we are going to overproduce our commodities for the domestic and world markets and to commit ourselves for 3 additional years of commitments, as well as 5 or 6 years of grants.

If we are to make such a pronouncement as that at this time, I think it is a confession of futility on the part of the Congress, which I do not propose to have any part in making. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining on this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. President, it is with great reluctance that I rise to oppose the proposal of the distinguished chairman of the committee and the able Senator from Florida.

We are going to have farm surpluses with us for many years to come. In fact, we are moving in the direction of greater surpluses. This year we reremoved production controls from corn, and this year, for the first time, corn production will exceed 4 billion bushels.

Price supports or no price supports, we are going to have great surpluses. I know of no better way to make friends in the world than to give hungry people a part of our agricultural surpluses. Mr. President, you can look around the world today, and you will find that the nations that are most friendly to us are those to whom we have given food, not dollars.

For years we have been looking for a way to get our surpluses to these hungry foreign people. Public Law 480 is the best program we have found to date to accomplish this. The program is working very well.

I found on my trips abroad that in countries like India, for example, they are not interested in a 1-year program. They think it does little good to feed their people 1 year, and have nothing the next year. They want a plan for more than 1 year. One year with Public Law 480 does not permit the kind of program we need to get best results in countries in the world.

I know the program is costing a considerable amount of money. To a considerable extent it is taking the place of foreign aid. Unfortunately, it is being charged to the farmers as a part of the price-support program. Most people feel that the farmers are getting checks representing the cost of that program.

Regardless of the name which may be applied to the program, it is the best program we have had to help people throughout the world and to make friends. It is for that reason that I support an extension of 3 years, rather than 1 year.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], for whatever purpose he wishes to use it for.

AMENDMENT OF MINERAL LEASING ACT OF FEBRUARY 25, 1920

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 2181.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2181) to amend the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920, which were, on page 2, line 2, after "title," insert "including the original lessee of the United States"; on page 2, line 4, strike out "Effective on the date of enactment of this Act, any" and insert "Any"; on page 2, line 6, strike out all after "Act," down through and including "after," in line 8; on page 2, line 13, strike out all after "Act," down through and including "provisions," in line 14; on page 2, line 20, strike out "provisions or not guilty of such fraud," and insert "provisions," and on page 3, after line 3, insert:

> SEC. 2. The right granted by the second sentence of the amendment contained within section 1 of this Act shall apply with respect to any proceeding initiated either prior to or after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendments to S. 2181, request a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. MOSS, and Mr. ALLOTT conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1748) to extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN].

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I think we should extend Public Law 480 for 3 years, because I for one do not want to have to go through this again next year. But, more than that, when the program is extended for only 1 year, or when the Department of Agriculture has to negotiate agreements with foreign countries before a deadline, it gets over a barrel and does not get as favorable terms from those countries as it would otherwise.

So if this law is extended for 3 years, the Department has more flexible bargaining authority than it has if the program is cut off at the end of 1 year, because as the deadline draws near the Department is anxious to move the surpluses, and there is a tendency to make a deal on much less advantageous terms for the United States.

So I hope the extension for 3 years will be adopted.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I do not know whether the chairman wishes to speak.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I would like to have 1 additional minute.

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I desire to read from the letter of the Department of Agriculture, signed by Clarence L. Miller, Assistant Secretary, to the chairman of the committee, the Honorable ALLEN J. ELLENDER, dated August 28, which reads as follows:

The Department has recommended an extension of 1 year for title I foreign currency sales and an increase in authorization of $1.5 billion. We do not recommend a 3-year extension and increase of $4.5 billion. We believe a 1-year extension and $1.5 billion authorization is adequate to continue the programing of surplus agricultural commodities to friendly countries. While there is obvious need to maximize the disposal of several major commodities, we believe there is little to be gained in a longer extension of title I and it is not required for efficient operation of the program. No greater rate of disposition would result from a 3-year extension. A 1-year extension would have a terminal date of December 31, 1960. If additional authorization is needed as a result of increased disposals within the concepts of the food-for-peace program we will request an additional authorization prior to the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. President, it seems rather clear that not only the Department of Agriculture and the Farm Bureau Federation, but also logic itself argues against a 3-year extension, when we do not even know we will have a surplus to dispose of during all that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to add one or two extra bits of evidence to support the case for the 3-year extension.

First, the report of the former Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. John H. Davis, one of the most eminent of our public servants, who was on special assignment for our Government, recommended not an extension of 3 years, but an extension of 5 years.

Secondly, a special report was made by a group of businessmen for the International Cooperation Administration, and that report recommended a continuation beyond 1 year.

Mr. Clarence Francis, of the Inter-Agency Committee for Surplus Disposal, and his committee made a recommendation for an extension beyond 1 year.

Finally, Mr. President, the distinguished minority leader [Mr. DIRKSEN] in debate in the Senate has made comments in this regard, and I wish to quote from page 74 of the transcript of the hearings of July 7, 8, and 10, Senate Committee on Foreign Relations:

May I ask the Senator if this is the administration program?

That is the question asked by the Senator from Montana [Mr. HUMPHREY] relating to the agricultural proposal of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], at the time the wheat bill was under consideration.

I continue the quotation:

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. When did the administration change its mind? Because the last notice we had was a 1-year extension. I asked the question only as a matter of interest because I am pleased with the proposed 3-year extension.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know when or if the administration changed its mind. All I know is what I have before me.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator is reading from a paper. The committee had recommendations from the Secretary for a 1-year extension. I wondered if the Secretary had changed his mind. If so, I wanted to stand up and congratulate him and wish him well. We hope to be able to extend the authority for 3 years.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Secretary has never indicated to me anything other than a 3-year extension.

Mr. HUMPHREY. In his testimony his recommendation was a 1-year extension.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I was not there.

Mr. President, regardless of the testimony, the fact is that the Senator from Vermont has put his finger on the real evidence and the really persuasive argument. This provision will make possible sound planning. It provides for what every agricultural economist in the country has urged, some longer term type of operation, so that the planning can be satisfactory not only for our country, but also for the recipient country.

I add, Mr. President, that only two witnesses favored the 1-year extension. Those were the Department of Agriculture and the American Farm Bureau. There were some 60 witnesses, and a total of 2 were in favor of 1 year.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, he well knows there are a number of amendments he either is presenting or will present with which the Senator from Kansas disagrees, but with regard to this amendment I share with the Senator from Minnesota, as well as with other distinguished members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry who have spoken, a desire to extend the provisions of the law.

When I was in South America I found the experienced men handling these programs indicated that a 1-year program was not long enough.

I share with the Senator from Minnesota the feeling that since we have these topheavy surpluses—and certainly that is true in the small grains—if the program could be extended for a period of 3 years, as the senior Senator from Vermont so aptly said a moment ago, we could make better progress. I think it would make for a more stable approach to the program we are fostering and assisting in some of these countries. Therefore, as I indicated when the matter came up, I shall support the 3-year extension.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, a few moments ago the distinguished Senator from Florida read from a letter from Assistant Agriculture Secretary Miller which was received by the Agriculture Committee some time ago. However, only today I received a letter from Secretary of Agriculture Benson, dated September 3, addressed to me, in which Mr. Benson states:

In order to make the position of the Department of Agriculture crystal clear regarding the extension of Public Law 480, we reaffirm our position as follows:

We support the extension of title I of Public Law 480 for 1 year through December 31, 1960, and an increase in authorization of $1.5 billion. We also support a 1-year extension of title II and an increased authorization for this program of $300 million.

Mr. President, what is happening now in my humble judgment, is that the State Department is trying to enter into this picture. An effort is being made by the State Department to use Public Law 480 as another arm of its foreign policy.

The amendments which are going to be offered by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, will clearly demonstrate that.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I shall be glad to yield, on the Senator's time.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That will be fine.

I wish to say to the Senator that he is absolutely correct. I do not disguise that at all.

The purpose involved in the proposal is not merely to dispose of surpluses but also to utilize the God-given abundance of food and fiber we have for the objectives of American foreign policy; to relieve human suffering; to provide for economic development; and to aid in regard to education, health, nutrition, sanitation, and a host of other things which are all very good.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator knows that we have already spent almost $50 billion for such foreign aid programs in hard cash. Mr. President, I think we have had enough of that manner of spending the American taxpayers' dollars.

What is being sought is permission for the State Department to sign long-term agreements with foreign countries, promising them payment, in effect, in surplus agricultural commodities. Why, as the Secretary of Agriculture stated, this law has been administered for the past 5 years as 1-year programs. As a matter of fact, although I do not recall exactly what year it was, one year the Department was unable to contract the full amount of the authorization.

The present authorization expires on December 31 of this year. I am informed that the amount which will be contracted for in title I loans will be slightly under the existing $1½ billion limit.

Mr. President, irrespective of what has been said tonight, I know of my own knowledge that much of the agricultural surpluses which could be used abroad in large quantities, cannot be stored, simply because there are not sufficient storage facilities. I am certain that the Department of Agriculture speaks the truth when it says that it cannot dispose of more than $1½ billion worth of commodities, under title I loans in 1 year's time.

As has been stated, if, perchance, contracts can be made for more than the $1½ billion limitation, all that is necessary is that the Department come to Congress and demonstrate it is able to do so.

In my judgment, the mere extension of the program for 3 years, making it a 3-year program, will not be of help in the disposition of surplus agricultural commodities.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I have before me the letter to which the Senator referred, which is a letter from Secretary Benson to the Senator as the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, dated yesterday, September 3, 1959. I note, in addition to the matters which the Senator from Louisiana has read into the RECORD, after the recital of other rather minor amendments the Secretary ends with these words, which I think are very meaningful:

> We are opposed to any other changes in Public Law 480.

That means the Secretary is opposed to the 3-year extension, as he is opposed to the $4½ billion authorization. He is opposed to the assumption in advance that this great Nation and this Congress are not going to be able to come to grips with this problem for 3 years and are willing to admit it in advance.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, it has been my privilege to serve on the Appropriations Committee for many years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One minute remains to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I was going to divide my time with the Senator. I offer the Senator from Louisiana 30 seconds.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota.

What I was going to say was that over the years, the Department of State has started the practice of entering into long-range agreements which we in the Senate are more or less under obligation to carry out. We have all seen many instances when the State Department has offered to perform certain duties or supply certain materials. Although Congress had not provided funds for such programs, yet in time we were under obligation to fulfill those commitments, and we had to do it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I will take my 30 seconds and merely say this:

We are talking about supplies of agricultural commodities which come into the possession of the Government because of the terms of existing agricultural programs. There is not one scintilla of evidence which indicates that those supplies are going to be diminished. I can point to years of evidence which shows that surpluses grow, not diminish.

One argument offered today is that the supply of butter is less than in previous years. That is true. But there are also fewer dairy farmers and lower dairy income. I do not think that makes very much sense either.

Now that we have used up the time, I suggest we vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment, on page 1, line 7. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS] are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARTKE] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are absent because of illness.

I further announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARTKE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] would each vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference, at Warsaw, Poland.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 38, as follows:

So the first committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, it is proposed to strike out lines 8 through 11 and insert in lieu thereof the language down to and including line 7, page 2, of the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota on behalf of the committee.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes. I now yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understand, the pending amendment is to provide for an annual authorization of $1,500 million, or a total of $4,500 million for the 3 years, for title I loans under the act.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The amendment would provide $1,500 million annually for 3 years, as it is written; yes.

Mr. ELLENDER. As it is written. Since the Senate has voted in favor of a 3-year extension of the act, then it is necessary to provide the funds to carry out the program. I have read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota. As I pointed out in private conversation with the Senator from Minnesota, the amendment is now so worded that the total of $4.5 billion for title I loans could be spent in 1 year, if the Secretary of Agriculture so desired. Following our conversation, the Senator from Minnesota agreed to modify his amendment so it will provide that the annual authorization for title I loans will be limited to $1,500 million, with a carryover of whatever is left from one year to the next. With that modification, I would be inclined to accept the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I offer the modifications which have been suggested by the Senator from Louisiana and ask that my amendment be modified accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments in the nature of modifications will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 8, after "title," it is proposed to insert "in any calendar year."

On page 2, line 3, strike out "$4,500,000,000" and insert "$1,500,000,000".

On page 2, line 4, strike out "prior periods" and insert "the preceding calendar year".

On page 2, line 6, strike out "prior periods" and insert "preceding year".

On page 2, line 7, strike out "periods" and insert "preceding year".

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. There is so much modification, I cannot understand what the Senator is getting at.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Have faith and trust.

Mr. President, I will yield back the remainder of my time, if the chairman will yield back the remainder of his time.

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I call up the amendment relating to the administration of the bill, on page 5, starting with line 8. It is in the amendment designated "8–25–59—B."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, how much of the committee amendment was accepted by the last vote? I know the Senator from Louisiana accepted No. 3, but what about the rest of them?

Mr. ELLENDER. I accepted only the amendment dealing with the amounts of money to be contracted for each year.

Mr. AIKEN. May I inquire further if the committee amendments are coming up in order, or not?

Mr. HUMPHREY. It was my understanding that we had covered everything in the committee amendment down to the title of "administration." If not, we will revert to section 110 and take that up.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I stated a moment ago, since the Senate has agreed to extend the act for 3 years instead of 1, it is obvious that a larger authorization will be required. As the amendment submitted by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota was originally drafted, it would have meant that the total amount of $4,500 million could have been spent in 1 year for title I loans. I accepted this amendment, provided that the Senator from Minnesota modify his amendment so that not more than $1,500 million could be spent in any one year, for title I loans, and that any balances might be continued from one year to the next.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, it is as the Senator from Louisiana has stated, so the action of the Senate related to the amounts of moneys which were appropriated for title I activities. Therefore, in order to proceed in proper order, I offer an amendment starting on page 2, line 8 of the committee amendment and continuing through the rest of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the language appearing on and beginning at page 2, line 8, down to and including line 20 on page 5 of the amendment identified as 5–29–59—B, offered by Mr. HUMPHREY on behalf of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I advance the same objection which I previously offered—namely, that we should not vote on these amendments en bloc, but they be voted on separately.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT in the chair). The Senator from Minnesota will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I offered the amendment as only one amendment; and I believe that is within the rule.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, let me ask what the number of the amendment is.

Mr. HUMPHREY. It is identified as "8–25–59—B."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has offered a single amendment; but the elements of the amendment are divisible, to be voted on separately.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Then will the Chair advise me where the division can be stopped?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair should have added the words "if demanded."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Chair please advise me where we might perform the appropriate amount of legislative surgery, in applying the legislative scalpel, so the division would be appropriate and in order?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, may I be heard on this matter?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, who will yield time to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I merely suggest that each amendment which applies to a separate section may well be considered a separate amendment. So I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that the language on page 2 from line 8 through line 11 applies to a single section; and that from line 12 through line 16 applies to an additional section; and so forth, through the amendment. It occurs to me that such an arrangement would comply with the request for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair agrees with the Senator from Florida, and so rules.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Senator from Florida for his constructive suggestion. He is always helpful in connection with these matters.

Therefore, Mr. President, I offer as an amendment the language which appears in the committee amendment identified as "8–25–59—B," on page 2, beginning in line 8, through line 11, ending with the figures "1959."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert, at the end of the bill, the following which appears on page 2, beginning in line 8, of the committee amendment identified as "8–25–59—B":

(4) The first section (which provides the short title) is amended to read as follows:

"That this Act may be cited as the 'Food for Peace Act of 1959'."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, this amendment is a very simple one; yet it is very meaningful.

The Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act, which is the official title of Public Law 480, will thus be amended—without striking out those words—so that it will be known as the "Food for Peace Act of 1959."

It has been recommended a number of times that, instead of referring to the act, Public Law 480, as merely a surplus disposal bill, we identify this excellent program with the objectives of the U.S. Government for peace, justice, and freedom throughout the world.

Why should we shun words such as "food for peace," when that is exactly the wish and the will of the American people.

It is true that we have an abundance of food and fiber. It is true that we have surpluses beyond our domestic needs for food and fiber. But it is also true that those surpluses can be put to very constructive uses, and thereby cause the people in our country who are the producers of food and fiber—namely, our farmers—to realize that what they produce is being dedicated to and devoted to a better world, a world of peace and a world of freedom.

Therefore, Mr. President, this amendment seeks to do what was suggested in the President's message to Congress and what has been suggested in a number of proposals—namely, identify Public Law 480, which deals with the great good which we have—that is to say, our abundance of food and fiber—as the Food for Peace Act.

Mr. President, I suggest that most Americans would readily and heartily approve such a modification of the title of the act.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, this amendment would change the short title of Public Law 480, 83d Congress, from the "Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954" to "Food for Peace Act of 1959."

If this amendment is agreed to, there will be little actual change in the act which was originally passed by Congress in 1954. Therefore, to now name the act the "Food for Peace Act of 1959" would really be to use a misnomer.

The original act was designated the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, and it was to be used as a means by which to dispose of our surplus agricultural commodities.

The purpose of a short title is to provide a clear, convenient method of referring to the act it identifies. The Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 has been widely known and cited for 5 years by that title. To change the title at this time would only result in confusion.

The proposed new short title would not only cause confusion, but would actually be misleading. The act was approved in 1954, not in 1959. To change the title from that by which it has long been cited to a title which would indicate that the act was enacted in 1959 could only contribute to the difficulty of understanding this complex piece of legislation.

The proposed new title would further be misleading in that it would suggest that some new concept had been added, which is not the case, and that the purpose of the act is primarily that of aid rather than trade. The purpose of the law was made very clear at the time of its enactment; and I ask unanimous consent that excerpts from the debate at the time of the passage of the act be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM DEBATE ON S. 2475, 83D CONGRESS

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator will notice that this is not an aid bill at all.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. It is a trade bill.

Mr. YOUNG. This is not a giveaway program. We are selling the commodities, not giving them away.

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; because it is not a giveaway program. It is a sales program and an exchange program. It is altogether different from ECA and MSA, and certainly different from what we did yesterday by the passage of Senate bill 2249, making available to the President, agricultural commodities to assist in meeting famine or other urgent relief needs of friendly countries.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. This bill does not involve a giveaway program. The program under the bill is a dollar-and-cents program, involving exchange with the currencies of other countries. This bill will be a good will measure, and will enable the people of such foreign countries to obtain, probably for the first time under good business practices, U.S. products, such as wheat, corn, and other agricultural commodities which we have in surplus supply. We shall not be giving away those commodities.

Mr. THYE. After all, this bill relates to exchanges. The bill not only authorizes sales for foreign currencies, but it authorizes trade. I think the bill is an excellent one. I believe we are writing good American commonsense into a legislative proposal, so as to make it possible for barter to occur in much the same way that individuals have learned to trade or barter among themselves. That is a good, old American custom, and certainly it is well for us to provide for it in connection with foreign trade and commercial operations.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is it not true that the pending bill is not an aid bill, but is a trade bill designed to recognize realistically the fact that the world is divided into various camps so far as currency is concerned, and that our Nation, to a limited extent—the amount prescribed here representing values of $500 million—should attempt to break across or cut across the lines that divide the dollar countries from the pound sterling countries and other countries that employ still other currencies, in an effort to find a way by which we can trade, notwithstanding the differences in currencies?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. The Senator from Florida is correct.

I may say it is obviously the intention that it shall be a trade bill not an aid bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I would not think for a minute that President Eisenhower would do anything wrong, but the point is whether this is a trade bill or an aid bill. It has nothing to do with the President of the United States. It is simply a question of policy. If there are those in the executive branch who want to make it an aid bill they can do it; if they want to make it a trade bill they can do it. If it turns out to be an aid bill, we can cut it off.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is very difficult to judge these things in a few months. I believe the bill should be a trade bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I have every confidence in the President of the United States, and I am perfectly willing to let him handle this program, but I think we should advise him we want this to be a trade bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, as one who has been very much interested in the proposed legislation, I wish to associate myself with the philosophy which has been expressed on the floor of the Senate several times, namely, that this is a trade bill.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bill upon which the Committee on Agriculture has devoted a considerable amount of time, work and study and I know it is a measure in which many Members of the House are directly interested because we have had referred to our committee some 60 bills dealing with the subject of the disposal of surplus agricultural commodities. Some of these bills dealt with disposal in foreign trade, others dealt with the question of a wider and more effective distribution of these commodities here in our own country.

Mr. Chairman, it might be well to refer briefly to the situation which now exists with reference to surplus agricultural commodities. I do not feel that the fact we possess in this country rather large supplies of some agricultural commodities is anything which should necessarily disturb us. I believe that in every other country in the world today there would be rejoicing if those nations possessed anything like the supply of agricultural commodities which we are so fortunate to have in this country; yet it is true that when agricultural surpluses reach a certain point there is involved the difficulty of management. The time has come when we should make some additional effort to dispose to the best possible advantage of these surplus agricultural commodities. Some of them are perishable in nature; others are susceptible of storage for long periods of time; all of them, of course, are included in the provisions of this bill which sets up the method and manner in which these commodities may be disposed.

Mr. HILL. On May 7, 1954, Senator A. F. SCHOEPPEL, of Kansas, appeared before the House Committee on Agriculture, considering S. 2475, and made the following statement:

"This is a bill to develop export markets for U.S. farm products. I sponsored this bill originally. This was a unanimous recognition 10 months ago of agriculture's vital need to expand export markets for U.S. farm products. It was the soundest alternative to more severe acreage controls.

"I need not describe to you gentlemen that in the last year our agricultural situation has worsened and the need to expand exports has increased. Investments of the Commodity Credit Corporation have about doubled; exports of wheat are further down. The prospects are not good. The time has come to close ranks and take concerted action to expand our export markets for farm products.

"For 10 months S. 2475 has been subject to scrutiny, debate, and comparison with alternatives. There have been feverish attempts to devise alternatives to expand our export markets for farm products. But the principles of S. 2475 are the only program proposals that come to grips with the problem of expanding export markets for farm products. There has been some tidying up of the language and some refinements in procedures and administration, but no alternative program has been developed to expand export markets for farm products on a scale commensurate with the need and the job to be done.

"The reasons for this are clear: The program provided in S. 2475 is tailored to fit the needs of expanding export markets for farm products. Expanding any market is difficult, but expanding an export market for farm products is more difficult and more complex. All of these problems were considered in drafting S. 2475, and the solutions, so far as possible, are included.

"The program embodies an imaginative yet dignified and businesslike approach to our problem. It treats our agricultural abundance as the asset it is, not as an unmanageable surplus of which we are ashamed and, therefore, feel obliged to give it away.

"Let me inject here that the program in S. 2475 is sound, businesslike, and dignified. It is far more humanitarian than gratuities. Nothing builds human dignity like buying what people produce to sell. This program is based on a concept of producing, selling, and buying—a concept that has made our country great. This program preserves the fundamental attribute of human dignity. It then goes far beyond that and uses the otherwise frozen assets of CCC as capital to increase production and gainful employment, to expand trade, and to promote economic development so that people can continue to buy more with their earnings. It is a program based on mutual aid through trade. It is a new, imaginative, and creative program. Wherever it has been explained and thoroughly understood, across this Nation and around the world, it has been hailed as a sensible approach. All who help enact this program will take increasing pride in having contributed to this constructive legislation."

Mr. HARRISON of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, S. 2475, Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, may turn out to be the most important legislation ever passed in this House to expand agricultural industry. I, too, have introduced a bill that takes care of the trade part of this particular legislation, and I have been most interested in that particular portion of this legislation that deals with trading with foreign countries and accepting their currencies. I think that it has a great deal of possibility.

* * * * *

S. 2475 measures up to these conditions of expanded markets for U.S. farm products. It authorizes assistance in creating orderly marketing of farm products. It provides means for increasing the capacity of customers to pay for increasing amounts of farm products through loans to increase production of noncompetitive imports into the United States, such as coffee and tin, and for loans to increase production for exports to other countries.

Finally, the bill opens up new opportunities for customer nations to pay for their import needs for farm products. These new opportunities to pay are included in the bill. They may pay the United States by—

First. Establishing orderly marketing facilities to expand the sale of farm products.

Second. Supplying strategic materials for U.S. stockpiles.

Third. Providing military equipment, materials, and services for common defense.

Fourth. Providing relief or needs to meet security objectives in lieu of appropriated dollars.

Fifth. For those countries not able to pay in one of the above, the program enables them to sell something to a third country that can pay the United States in one of the above.

The United States is spending nearly $50 billion per year for defense. It is depleting its mineral resources at the rate of 2 billion tons per year. Opening up an opportunity for customer nations to earn more by contributions to the cooperative military efforts and replenish some small part of the exhaustible minerals in exchange for farm products is mutually good business.

These are the requisites to expanded markets. S. 2475 accommodates them.

The third point I would like to make is this: S. 2475 provides the means to convert CCC's frozen assets into a revolving fund of working assets which can be used as capital to create a strong community of free nations bound together by mutual interest to preserve freedom. The funds can be used to create, to build, to expand, to stimulate production, trade, and employment.

S. 2475 is a solution in part at least to our agricultural ills. I hope this legislation will receive the unanimous support of the Members of the House.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, let us examine the proposed short title, word by word.

The first word is "Food." There has been $527,844,000 worth of cotton shipped under Public Law 480. Cotton is not generally considered to be food. Also, $256,000 worth of cotton linters, $150,045,000 worth of tobacco, and $394,000 worth of hay and pasture seeds have been shipped. None of these would normally be regarded as food. Large quantities of feed grains have been shipped; and it might be suspected that they were used for feed, rather than food. Of course, large quantities of food have been shipped, too; but I do not think we ought to mislead people by suggesting that this program concerns only food. I certainly do not think we should ignore cotton. Cotton is a very useful commodity. In most areas of the world, clothing is fully as necessary as food. I do not suggest that the act be labeled the "Cotton for Peace Act"; but I do not believe cotton should receive less than its due, either.

Actually, the common denominator is dollars. "Dollars for Peace" would be a more accurate title. When commodities are shipped out under title I, the Government pays the exporter the value of his sale in dollars, and the importer deposits foreign currencies to the credit of the United States. I do not suggest that the title "Dollars for Peace" be used; but I do not believe we ought to lead the taxpayer to believe that we are just using some surplus food that is lying around, when actually his dollars run the program.

The next important word is "peace." All of us hope that the act has contributed and will contribute to the cause of peace, just as we hope that other acts we pass will contribute to that cause. There are $307.8 million worth of foreign currencies generated under title I which have been provided by agreements under the act for the common defense. Providing for the common defense should help to insure the peace, although probably not to the same extent that the amounts we appropriate for our own national defense might be expected to insure it. It might therefore be more fitting to label each of our appropriation acts for national defense as appropriations for peace acts. That is really what they are. But all our acts have peaceful purposes. If we labeled each one as a peace act, we could not tell one from another. The State Department, which should be greatly concerned with peace, said of S. 1711, from which this provision is taken:

> It would create among some countries exaggerated expectations of economic aid and among other friendly exporting countries would create apprehension about our policies with respect to surplus disposal (hearings on S. 1711, p. 8).

The creation of exaggerated expectations among some of our friends and apprehensions among others does not contribute to peace and I hope the creation of such expectations and apprehensions will be avoided. I devoutly hope and trust that this act and every act we pass may contribute to peace. But I see no reason for so labeling every act.

The next words are "act of 1959." These words would be used to describe an act of 1954 and they are manifestly inaccurate.

The saddest results of changing the label on this act as proposed would be:

First, to mislead our own people into believing that some brave new program has been developed, when actually nothing new of any significance has been added; and

Second, to make the true evaluation of the act and full consideration of its provisions more difficult.

The short title which the act now bears is accurate and honest. Let us keep it that way.

Mr. President, we can all visualize the headlines which may appear if we adopt this short title: "Congress Passes Food for Peace Act." How much nobler that sounds than "Congress Extends Public Law 480." Of course, the latter headline would make it pretty clear what Congress had done, while the former headline allows anyone to conjure up any attractive idea that may appeal to him.

Mr. President, I would like to appeal to our friends in the fourth estate at this time. Their worth and their objective rests in their ability to report facts accurately. They carry out that duty well, and perform a great service in bringing truth to man. I appeal to them not to be gulled by what is proposed here. I appeal to them to pierce the darkness and determine the true facts. I make this special appeal in this case because while our fourth estate is usually so accurate, I have already seen some reports indicating that the Senate may consider a Food for Peace Act. Of course, no such act has been proposed to the Senate. What has been proposed is that we change the label of a 1954 act to "Food for Peace Act of 1959." I am sure that we all know the difference between label and contents, and I trust that no paper will carry the suggestion that we have passed a Food for Peace Act if this title should be adopted. A true headline accurately describing the fact would be "Congress Changes Label of 1954 Act." That would be truthful, and would advise our people of what Congress is doing.

Now, there may be some who would say that the act of 1954 is so proposed to be changed that it requires a different title. Some may say that we have taken Teddy and washed his face and combed his hair and put a new suit on him, and now we should no longer call him Teddy. We should call him George. Then we can introduce him to everyone as George, who used to be Teddy. Now, what are these wonderful changes that are proposed to Public Law 480? It would be extended. More money would be authorized either at the same rate as in the past, or possibly at a higher rate. Some additional uses for foreign currencies might be authorized, although the present authorization is already so broad that it is impossible to tell whether new uses proposed could not already be carried out under the existing law. Operations would be carried on under Public Law 480 in a fashion approximately identical to the manner in which they have been carried on for 5 years.

I believe that the principal changes proposed in the law are the addition of surplusage. The report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I might point out, does not call it surplusage. It says that it recognizes that the authority bestowed already exists, but that it bestows the authority again because the authority has not been used to a sufficient degree heretofore. Oh, it is proposed to do other things too. It is proposed to take some language out of one subsection and create a whole new subsection of its own to carry this language. It is proposed to add new agencies, new advisory committees, both within Government and without. It is impossible to turn around these days, as each of us knows, without receiving some advice as to how Public Law 480 should be administered. There are other provisions that are proposed to give advice to the President as to how the act should be carried out. One piece of advice tells him to use the authority he already has to enter into long-term contracts to a greater degree so long as the supplies are available to do so. Another tells him to administer the law as it is written.

The change which I believe has been heralded as the most significant change proposed is called national food reserves. I think it could possibly be carried out under existing authority, but I would agree that nevertheless it does present a new concept. At present the act provides for giving practically everybody in any foreign country anything that he may need, whether it is a bridge, a railroad, an education, the translation of a document. As I say, practically anything. So what new concept is still possible? This is the new concept. We shall now give people what they do not need. The national food reserves in essence will be the giving of grain which it does not need to a country so that it will be available to the country if, at some future time, it should need it. So much we see from the provisions of the legislative proposal itself. But the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the letter from the Department of Agriculture proposing this provision take us a step further. In addition to provide the grain, we shall also provide the storage facilities.

Now, let us see what other proposals are possible along this line. Well, S. 1711 contains a proposal which might go a step further. It provides that we shall pay the expenses of technicians advising on the manner in which the grain shall be stored. Well, I do not believe that anyone has come right out and proposed the next logical step, but it is so obvious that maybe it is taken for granted. After we have given them the grain, provided the money to build the storage facilities, provided the money to advise them on how to operate the storage facilities, it is perfectly obvious that we ought to pay them for storing the grain. There is, however, one proposal that I think constitutes an obvious further logical step, and that is that we send them some hungry people to eat the grain. Let us perform the complete service. Of course, maybe it would be cheaper just to have the hungry people eat it here, but I don't see how we could call that food for peace. I don't see how we could call that food for peace any more than we could call our old friend enacted in 1954 the "Food for Peace Act of 1959."

Mr. President, this bill provides not only for the conversion of American dollars into foreign currencies to build warehouses in any quantity, in any country, it also provides for the construction of unknown bridges, highways, water supply systems, dams, and public works of any sort, in any country. S. 1711, from which this title is taken, would provide $6 billion for these unbudgeted projects in foreign lands. The committee amendments to S. 1748 would provide $4.5 billion for these unbudgeted projects. Under either proposal the entire amount could be legally committed in fiscal 1960. On Friday, August 28, at 3:15 p.m., the President returned to the House of Representatives without his approval the public works appropriation bill. The President objected to it because it provided for "67 unbudgeted projects estimated eventually to cost over $800 million." He further said that "the American people are opposed to overspending no matter where it is attempted." The President further pointed out that the bill without these unbudgeted projects provided for 1960 expenditures for the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation amounting to $1.1 billion.

If the President believes that the American people are opposed to overspending no matter where it is attempted and if he further believes that any increase in 1960 expenditures in this country for public works over $1.1 billion is excessive, how should he feel and how should the American people feel about an authorization of $6 billion, or even $4.5 billion, for projects which may not now even be in anyone's mind, in some country which today might not be in existence? If he is opposed to unbudgeted projects, what should be his attitude toward such unknown projects? Of course, the entire $6 billion, or $4.5 billion, proposed, while it could all be committed this year to public works projects, might instead be used for other purposes such as binational cultural foundations, trips all over the world for beauty queens, postgraduate courses for students of the arts and sciences, payment of the expenses of advisers to advisers to advisers. Might not the American people object to such a proposal if it is made clear to them? But if such a proposal is marched up and down under the banner "Food for Peace," if the headlines should—inaccurately—state that Congress has passed a "Food for Peace Act," if the President should sign this measure as a step forward to peace, who would have the temerity to raise his voice in opposition to such a foreign public works appropriation measure? Let us concern ourselves not with changing labels but with improving contents. And, if we cannot at this time improve the contents, let us not pretend that we have done so.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the argument that has been used is really quite amazing to me. I never thought I would hear the day when the Congress was going to vote against the title "Food for Peace." If it makes somebody happy, we can change it to "Food and Fiber for Peace." I am not opposed to it. It would be a very good idea. That would include cotton. Cotton is a commodity, not a theology.

I am perfectly willing to amend my proposed title, which I may do—I will just speak about it for the moment—to make perfectly sure that anybody who thinks he is left out will be included.

The purpose of the title is to give this Government the identification it justly deserves in this food and agricultural program. It is not just a surplus disposal program. It should make us a lot of enemies in foreign countries if we speak of it as simply a surplus disposal program. If it were simply a surplus disposal program, we would not worry about how we dump commodities and how they are used. This is a program for economic development, and ought to be made so.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Has the Senator suggested an amendment to change the title to "Food and Fiber for Peace Act of 1959"?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I have not as yet. I think I may.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I think it would be a good suggestion. I want to endorse the Senator's proposal, because in many uncommitted nations of the world, they are wondering which side they should aline themselves with, the democratic side represented by the nations of the North Atlantic and others, or the Communist bloc. I think a title of this kind would be useful in showing them the direction in which we are going. I hope the Senator will amend his title. I want to support him very heartily.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Senator.

The report to which I alluded earlier this afternoon, the Davis report, and the report of the ICA, recommend that this particular program take on more positive aspects in terms of our international relations than just surplus disposal.

The argument over this title is very fundamental and basic, but regardless of the outcome of the vote, I want my colleagues to know that Public Law 480 is not just a trade development act. Public Law 480 as amended has great good in it for the purposes of peaceful construction and peaceful development and peace in the world itself.

There are other amendments which have been approved and recommended by two committees of Congress, the Foreign Relations Committee and the Agriculture and Forestry Committee, which would permit us to use our food and fiber for purposes of peace.

I say to my colleagues who are friends of the farmer that the farmer in America is getting sick and tired of being told that all he produces is surpluses for disposal. Disposals are usually mechanical equipment found in kitchen sinks for garbage. I suggest we talk about food and fiber in a much more decent and a much more responsible manner.

The title "Food for Peace Act of 1959" is a good title. Any Senator who wants to vote against food for peace can answer the rollcall, because I think it will separate it from a title that relates only to food or fiber.

The Senator from Minnesota happens to believe food and fiber are good things. He believes they can be good things in terms of foreign policy and in terms of humanitarianism, and surely ought to be identified, in terms of public understanding, as a constructive force for peace throughout the world.

Why do some of my colleagues feel satisfied to let the Communists monopolize the word "peace"? Are we afraid of it? I suggest the Senator from Louisiana had a good idea when he talked about appropriations for national defense. What is the purpose of national defense? Peace. It might not be a bad idea to have appropriations for peace. I gather they are not appropriations for war or aggression. They are appropriations for peace. The world hungers for peace, and it is about time the Congress of the United States quit rattling the saber or trying to dump its surpluses, and start to think in terms of peace, peaceful construction, peaceful uses of the resources of this country. I will stand on the title "Food For Peace Act of 1959," and I am perfectly willing to have the roll called on it.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER].

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, we have heard repeatedly, this year, last year, and the year before, the accusation that the United States is a coldblooded country, not interested in peace, not interested in the welfare of the other people of the world. That word has emanated even from within our own country, and it has, in my opinion, done us more damage abroad than has any other particular philosophy or discussion we have had.

Again we hear raised on the floor of the Senate the old cliche "Food for Peace." All it is is a banner. It has no place in this bill. It has no place in the historic background of Public Law 480. It is a fooler, if I ever saw one, and I hope the amendment is defeated.

From the standpoint of the argument that we ought to do more to prove that America is peace loving, let me say, great heavens, how much more does this country have to do to establish for the record that we want peace, that we want to be benefactors to less fortunate people in this world? How much more do we have to provide than the billions of dollars we have unselfishly spent? How much more do we have to do than to send the numbers of people we have sent all over the world to help less fortunate people get themselves on their feet?

Despite all we have done we hear the cry day after day, "We have to do this to prove we are peace-loving people."

We used to say, in the old days years ago when I was a practicing lawyer, that many such arguments were "hogwash." That is what we used to call them in our area.

Mr. President, I wish to put some facts and figures into the RECORD. Let us examine them carefully. Fact No. 1 is that the volume of surplus foods distributed by this country in 1959 set an alltime record. Nearly 3 billion pounds of surplus foods were donated by the Department of Agriculture in 1959. These foods went to school lunch programs here at home and to needy people both at home and overseas.

Fact No. 2: The number of people benefiting from surplus foods from this country, donated by the American people, by the American Government, set an alltime record. More than 21 million people in this country alone received Federal surplus foods in 1959. This is more than double the number who were benefited in 1952, and illustrates the greater emphasis which is given to moving our surplus inventories into consumption, helping the needy and our schoolchildren to improve their diets.

Fact No. 3: In the past 7 years almost 12½ billion pounds of surplus foods have been moved under the Department of Agriculture's donation operations. This is another alltime record. No previous 7-year period, even in the 1930's, could come close to this record.

This shows what aggressive planning there has been and what an effective system has been provided to constructively dispose of Government-owned surplus foods. More needy families in ths country received surplus foods in 1959 than the number in any year since World War II. In 1959 nearly 5¾ million needy people in family units received surplus foods. Contrast this with the situation in 1952, when less than 100,000 people in families were benefiting.

We have rushed food to areas of natural disaster.

Most of the instances to which I have referred are instances within this country, but we must also consider the billions of dollars we have spent abroad under Public Law 480. Public Law 480 was not designed, in my judgment, and should not be designed, to be a worldwide WPA operation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 1 more minute?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield 1 more minute, Mr. President.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, Public Law 480 was designed partly to help us in the emergency of food surpluses which we find in this country; and, secondly, to devote those surpluses when, as, and if they exist, to the assistance of needy people.

The minute we set up a program which is designed to be a food-for-peace program in the world, with the many provisions which go into it, word will go out to the world that we are establishing a permanent program.

In fact, some of the amendments provide that we will contract long in the future to give food to people all over the world, whether we have a surplus or whether we do not. I say again, it is a dangerous program. It is a program we should not enter into.

We should continue Public Law 480 from time to time. I voted against the 3-year extension. I want to extend the law for a shorter period of time. We should continuc the Public Law 480 program so long as it serves our purposes and in turn can serve the purposes of needy people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL].

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with what has been said by the distinguished chairman of the committee and by the distinguished senior Senator from Iowa.

It was only in 1954 that we passed this act. Now in 1959 it is said, "Let us change the name of the act."

At the time we considered the passage of Public Law 480—and I think I know a little something about that, as do many other Senators on the floor tonight—it was named the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954. That is exactly what the act has been.

In furtherance of that statement, all I ask any Senator who is interested in having the name changed, for a slogan or a banner, to do is to read page 2 of the report of the committee, the summary of operations of the act, and to refer to tables 1 and 2, to keep the act strictly in character. We have had too many slogans and banners in a good many years.

I think—and I say this most respectfully—the nations which have dealt with us and which have dealt with our departments of Government around the world know what Public Law 480 means. Those nations have seen how the act has operated. If we change the name, as has been requested, as indicated by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is proposed to put the act in an entirely different category and give it an entirely different character, a character I would not agree it should have.

I hope the Senate will reject the amendment.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield me 1 minute?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I appreciate the motives and the humanity of the Senator from Minnesota in offering the amendment. I agree with the Senator that the act has had its effects upon the relationships of our country with other countries throughout the world, and that it has been an instrument for peace.

However, it is the results of the operations under the act rather than the title of the act which have made it an instrument of peace. I do not believe that naming the act a "Food for Peace Act," or a "Food and Fiber for Peace Act" will either diminish or enlarge the effect of the program upon good and peaceful relations throughout the world, and upon peace.

I should like to vote for the amendment. I hesitate to vote for it because I would prefer to have our acts speak for themselves in the world, rather than simply have titles.

Unless the act really is designed in all respects for one purpose—that is, our foreign relations and their effect upon other nations—I think perhaps we would not be speaking absolutely truthfully in denominating the act a "Food for Peace Act." For that reason, I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. HUMPHREY. How much time is there on the other side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is exhausted on the opposite side.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, do I correctly understand the Presiding Officer to say that my time has expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the time of the Senator from Louisiana on the amendment has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of my colleagues on this matter of the title. I never thought we would have quite such an argument over a title. Two committees of the Congress have approved this title; the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

I recognize that when a title is so meaningful and dramatic and attractive as this, some may feel that they do not want to approve it. But I see no reason why, if one has an automobile which has all the characteristics of a Lincoln Continental, one should not put a label on it.

I can hardly imagine my Republican colleagues not wanting a better title on the law. My colleagues are very good at slogans and very good at titles.

I add again, it happens to be a Democrat who is speaking up for the President's title for this bill.

He talked about food for peace in his state of the Union address. He talked about health for peace. Is it not interesting the same Senate which tonight is arguing about food for peace only a few months ago approved the International Health for Peace Act with an overwhelming majority, and Senator after Senator applauded the fact that we were going to call the health facilities of America health for peace programs. But when it comes to food which we have in abundance, food the taxpayers have paid for, food which lies in our storage bins and some of which spoils because of storage, food on which we pay $1,500,000 every day in storage charges, food that could be used to feed people and is being used to feed people, food that one governmental official after another says is the greatest force we have for peace in the world, why can we not call it food for peace?

It has been suggested that we should not change the name. We are not changing the name. We are giving a short title to it. "Public Law 480" has about as much sex appeal as an old dirty sock. What does "Public Law 480" explain? Many people, when they wish to become really "moxey" in referring to this measure, say "P.L. 480." That is a very descriptive phrase. The whole world knows what "P.L. 480" means. [Laughter.]

There is not a person in the world, no matter what language he speaks, who does not know what the word "peace" means, and we in the Senate tonight will have an opportunity to vote whether we are for Public Law 480 or whether we are for peace.

I know my good friend the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] says we have done great things for the cause of peace. We have. In the Scripture there is a passage about not hiding one's light under a bushel. We are hiding our light of peace under millions of bushels of wheat. We talk about surplus disposal.

Surplus disposal antagonizes commercial interests. Surplus disposal is a rather unkind remark to make to people whose stomachs are bloated with hunger. In effect the term suggests, "Do you mind being a garbage can, a disposal unit?" I would rather say, "Would you care to share in the abundance that God Almighty has made available to mankind?"

I for one am proud to be associated with this title. I am proud to be associated with the President who is attempting to put some drama and inspiration into our foreign policy, and I hope my colleagues on the other side of the aisle will not repudiate the President's wish.

I hope they will not fail to do on the issue of food the very thing they did for health. The sooner the United States of America begins to be proud it is the peacemaker, proud that it is a Nation of justice and proclaims it, and proud that it uses its resources for the cause of peace, the better off we shall be.

The President of the United States on February 9, 1959, in a letter to the Secretary of Agriculture, stated:

> My message to Congress on January 29 recommending several measures improving major farm programs stressed the need for effective use of our agricultural abundance in meeting food needs at home and abroad.

I ask my colleagues, listen:

> In that message I reported steps being taken with other exporting nations to explore all practical means of using food for peace.

"Food for peace," says Mr. Eisenhower.

Every Senator has said repeatedly that foreign policy should be bipartisan. Very well. Let us make it bipartisan. The President of the United States has asked that we start talking about using food and fiber, the resources of this country, for the cause of peace.

Any of my colleagues who have traveled abroad and have gone to the Soviet Union have observed on every public building the word "Mir," meaning peace. One may say they are a bunch of phonies. Certainly they are. But we are not.

Apparently what we are afraid of is the word "peace" where the dollar sign is, peace where the word "disposal" is, peace where the word "surplus" is in a world that is hungry, in a world of sick and the weary, in a world of people who have been literally torn apart by war. They want America to stand for peace; and I know of no better way to do so than to proclaim peace. I proclaim it by this amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Florida 4 minutes on the bill.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, no one can argue with the distinguished Senator from Minnesota on the subject of the motives which animate him. However, I have been trying to look at the question with a little practicality.

What are the principal commodities purchased from my own State? I have jotted them down. They are the only ones which would be usable under this law as surplus commodities or are in the hands of the Commodity Credit Corporation. They are, first, cotton; second, cigarette tobaccos; third, wrapper leaf tobaccos; fourth, naval stores, turpentine and rosin; fifth, tung oil, which is a poison; and, lastly, peanuts.

Mr. President, I believe even the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, with all of his passion for symbols and for slogans, would find it quite difficult to consider cotton, cigarette tobacco, wrapper leaf tobacco, naval stores, turpentine and rosin, or tung oil as food. Of course, it would be a phony term to apply the term "food" to those surplus commodities.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] wishes to make his gesture, why not say agricultural products for peace, or some other term which at least would not be a phony. Already we are charged all over the world with being phony.

Mr. President, we know that the principal motive behind this act is to get rid of our own surplus commodities. We are trying to do it in such a way as to help others, and we have every right to add to the title of the act, which has had an honorable title since 1954, the word "assistance" because we have been assisting others. But I do not believe it is correct to say this is a food for peace program. Below the St. Marys River the term would bring a loud guffaw from people who know that the commodities grown in Florida which are traded under this act, with one single exception, are not food and one or two of them are positive poisons.

So far as I am concerned I do not think we ought to put ourselves in that kind of situation. I hope that the proposed title, advanced in all good faith and with all good motives, should be repudiated by the Senate because certainly it is inapplicable to this program, which has existed since 1954, as our distinguished chairman has said, primarily to dispose of surpluses, to develop trade which we lost during World War II, and to assist those who need the various commodities—some of them food commodities, many of them not food commodities—which we propose to help them get for a small consideration, or, under title II, for no consideration at all, under the benevolent provisions of this act.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to my distinguished colleague from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I cannot vote for the amendment, because I believe it could bring about more misunderstanding than support for the program. We have surplus disposal programs in this country, and I believe we must apply our thinking to our experience with our own surplus food programs to understand what we can expect from such programs overseas.

Suppose we were to call our surplus disposal program in this country a food for peace program. The poor man who gets these surplus commodities complains that he cannot get the things he really wants. He must take what we have to give away, that which happens to be in surplus supply. That is already the big complaint about it, and he wants the program modified to give him commodities which are more useful. He is told that he must take it or leave it because the commodities must be in surplus.

In these foreign lands, in most instances this food will not be given to the people. The people have to pay for it. The politicians often wind up with the money. That is one of the complaints about that program. The poor people have to pay for it out of their hard-earned money.

It is proposed to put the slogan of peace on the food which the poor people must pay for out of their hard-earned money. It seems to me that this will lead to a great deal of misunderstanding, because even though we call it food for peace, people cannot get what they want in the first place, and in the second place they must pay for what they get.

It seems to me it is better to leave it as it is. It is a surplus disposal program to foreign governments. That being the case, I believe there would be less misunderstanding about the program if we did not try to leave people with the impression that we are giving them a great many things, motivated by the highest ideals, without any selfish motive of any sort.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, to meet the suggestion of the able Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], I modify the amendment so as to read:

Food and Fiber for Peace Act of 1959.

I say respectfully to my good friend from Florida that we have not tried to dispose of any poisons overseas. Exports of tung oil, rosin, and naval stores have been nil under Public Law 480. That is a theoretical argument, with no practical application.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified accordingly.

Mr. HUMPHREY. "Food and fiber" is the terminology used by the Department of Agriculture to explain everything that is produced from trees. It includes tung nuts and rosin, as well as wheat, vegetables, and fruits, cotton and cottonseed. If anything is left out we are very sorry, but I think we have covered most of the areas when we say "Food and Fiber for Peace Act of 1959," and I ask my colleagues to be as considerate of this particular title as they were in the instance of the International Health for Peace Act.

I conclude by saying that this particular amendment is a committee amendment, approved by a majority of two committees, the Comittee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It is blessed, if it needs to be, by the President of the United States. It is recognized as being the objective of Public Law 480; and so far as our domestic consumers are concerned, a little surplus for them might bring them peace of mind, possibly peace of body, and peace of soul.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, on page 2, lines 8 to 11, both inclusive, of the amendments reported by the committee, as modified.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE], the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARTKE] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are absent because of illness.

I further announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARTKE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] would each vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH] is detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 48, as follows:

So the committee amendment, as modified, was rejected.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as modified, was rejected.

Mr. HOLLAND. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SYMINGTON].

EQUITABLE TREATMENT FOR PRODUCERS PARTICIPATING IN SOIL BANK PROGRAM

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 2457.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CANNON in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2457) to provide equitable treatment for producers participating in the soil bank program on the basis of incorrect information furnished by the Government, which was, on page 2, line 14, strike out "Secretary." " and insert "Secretary. No contract heretofore or hereafter entered into shall be modified, invalidated, or changed because of the marriage of any two contracting parties." "

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, the Senate passed Senate bill 2457, to provide equitable treatment for producers participating in the soil bank program, on the basis of incorrect information furnished by the Government.

The House has also passed Senate bill 2457, with a minor amendment which is simply the addition of the following language:

No contract heretofore or hereafter entered into shall be modified, invalidated, or changed because of the marriage of any two contracting parties.

This amendment is acceptable to the chairman of the committee, as well as to me.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The motion is agreed to.

EXTENSION OF AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1748) to extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Alabama such time as he may require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CANNON in the chair). The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to the distinguished senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, and to his committee colleagues, for what I regard as a signal service to American agriculture and a great segment of American business, by means of the fresh emphasis which the committee, in its report accompanying Senate bill 1748, has given to the stimulation and development of new foreign markets for American agricultural products under Public Law 480, known as the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954.

I am vitally interested in the development and expansion of markets abroad for every type of product of the farms of America and in the welfare of the business establishments which process these farm products.

I am sure that each of us is encouraged by the contribution that has been made by the operation of Public Law 480 to the development and expansion of foreign markets for American farm products. What has been accomplished is indicative of what can ultimately be achieved if the agencies administering the program will steadfastly observe the high priority for trade development which the Agriculture Committee has called for in its report on the bill before us today.

So that there may be no misunderstanding about what the committee intends concerning the future operation of the Public Law 480 program, let me record here certain language from the committee report. The report states:

> The Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, as amended, declared trade expansion as the policy of Congress. A stated objective of this policy was to stimulate and facilitate the expansion of foreign trade in agricultural commodities produced in the United States.
>
> Section 104(a) was listed as the first currency use to help develop new markets for U.S. agricultural commodities on a mutually benefiting basis.
>
> This was no accident. It was and is the intention of Congress that foreign currencies be used to the maximum extent possible for agricultural market development and that first priority be given this use.
>
> This committee is concerned by reports that funds are inadequate for continuation and expansion of section 104(a) market promotional work abroad. * * * To insure that sufficient funds are available for section 104(a) market promotional activities, this committee recommends:
>
> 1. The use of foreign currencies for section 104(a) should be given priority over other nonreimbursable U.S. uses. The committee in approving the enactment of new currency uses, did not contemplate that this would result in a reduction of currencies available for section 104(a).
>
> 2. The Secretary of Agriculture should determine the level of funds needed for section 104(a) before foreign currencies are made available for other nonreimbursable U.S. uses authorized in the law.
> 3. The committee commends the Department for negotiating convertibility to nondollar currencies in title I sales agreements. However, the amount of conversion included in such agreements should be increased to permit greater market promotion looking toward the creation of permanent dollar markets in commercial market areas. Further, the inclusion of convertibility for section 104(a) should be a condition for the approval of future title I sales agreements.

The committee report recites much of our experience under Public Law 480 in developing new outlets for a number of agricultural commodities, including poultry.

Every Senator knows that the poultry industry is today in a singular crisis. The industry itself, through the instrumentality of the International Trade Development Committee representing the entire poultry industry, is redoubling its efforts to develop and expand foreign markets which are so desperately needed.

The poultry industry looks upon the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act as an effective means for helping to realize the foreign market potential of American poultry and poultry products.

The importance of the poultry industry to our national economy cannot be over-emphasized. We are aware that poultry constitutes the third largest producer of farm income in America. It is the principal use of feedstuffs, using 65 to 75 percent of all commercial feedstuffs. Poultry are produced in almost every State in the Union. In my own State of Alabama, poultry constitutes the second largest producer of cash income to farmers.

The poultry industry is not strictly agricultural. It is both agricultural and industrial. In a very real sense, those engaged in it are farmer-businessmen. As such, they are entitled to the full support of the committees of Congress and the agencies of Government which are primarily concerned with the welfare of businessmen. That is why the Senate Small Business Committee, of which I serve as chairman, has made the serious and complex problems of the poultry industry a major concern of the committee. That is why our committee has joined hands with our Agriculture Committee in attempting to alleviate the problems of the farmer-businessmen in the poultry industry.

Senators will recall that the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 has two basic primary objectives. The first is to facilitate the disposal of surplus agricultural commodities. The second is to attempt to return some permanent benefit to U.S. agriculture, in the form of new and expanded markets. As the committees of Congress have heretofore consistently pointed out, the development of foreign markets is considered to be among the most important permanent benefits to be realized from Public Law 480. Notwithstanding the provisions of the act and the clear intent of Congress, as expressed in prior committee reports, the Agriculture Committee and the Small Business Committee still do not believe that sufficient emphasis is given to, or sufficient foreign currencies are being made available for, this primary objective of the act. If American agriculture is to achieve the benefits contemplated, it is essential that a greater percentage of the local currencies generated be made available for carrying out market development programs; and every effort should be made to broaden the opportunities for carrying out these activities.

The Agriculture Committee in its report reviewed some of the types of market development and promotion activities which are being carried out under Public Law 480 and some of the results which have been accomplished to date.

The fact that wholly new markets can be developed for U.S. agricultural commodities, through the use of the authority provided under Public Law 480, is perhaps best illustrated by referring to what has been accomplished, in respect to poultry, in a relatively short time in Western Germany. Western Germany is today the world's largest importer of poultry and poultry products. Prior to Public Law 480, no poultry had been imported by Germany from the United States. No taste or demand for our superior type of products had been created; and there were also barriers, in the form of license and exchange controls, which stood in the way of trade.

As a result of programs initiated under Public Law 480, these barriers, although not completely removed, have been modified; and a substantial quantity of U.S. poultry is currently being sold, through private trade, to German importers, for dollars. With the promotion activities being carried out under Public Law 480, U.S. poultry is gaining wide acceptance by German consumers. This represents an entirely new market for U.S. poultry.

Let me again remind the Senate that today poultry is in heavy surplus supply, and the prices are greatly depressed. Every housewife knows this. The price of broilers this year hit the lowest level on record. Egg prices fell to the lowest level in 18 years. Yet the quality of these products has never been higher. Public Law 480 has not been used to the extent it should have, for poultry. Since the beginning of Public Law 480, only very small quantities have been programed or made available for sale under this act, notwithstanding the fact that the act and the reports of the committees make it clear that these items are just as eligible as any other.

We know how hard Members of Congress had to work to get the Department to program fruits. I want to make it clear that I, both individually and as chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee, feel that Congress cannot tolerate any further unfair treatment of poultry. I am well aware that the Members from other poultry-producing areas are also deeply concerned.

The Agriculture Committee has wisely recommended that larger amounts of foreign currencies thus generated be made available over longer periods of time, in order that effective market-development work of this type may be expanded by the various recognized trade groups carrying out these market-development programs in cooperation with the Foreign Agricultural Service.

We have the opportunity, under the Public Law 480 program, to help relieve the present critical situation confronting the poultry industry, and at the same time to introduce these high-quality products into entirely new market areas, which eventually can become new and permanent markets. Congress must exercise the necessary legislative oversight to see that poultry is given equal treatment with other commodities under this extended authority.

Again let me commend the members of the Agriculture Committee and its distinguished chairman on a farsighted and constructive step.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota for yielding to me.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I call up amendments on page 2 of the committee amendment—and I pronounce the words "committee amendment" with some emphasis, because it is rather unusual to find the committee amendments being opposed by the committee. But I call up these committee amendments, which have been approved by two committees—namely, paragraph (5), on page 2; and paragraph (10), on page 4. Both of them concern the national food reserves, and both of them should be considered together.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that those two paragraphs may be considered together, because they are relevant and germane to the substance of the national food reserves provisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, now that that request has been granted, I call up the amendment, which relates to the national food reserves.

Mr. President, this is the committee amendment. I voted for it, but it is the committee amendment. May I add, this time—if it will make any impression on anyone—that this is the administration's proposal. I suppose it is rather unusual to have a member of the so-called opposition party offer amendments sponsored by the administration. Certainly no Member should have any reluctance in supporting this administration proposal if he supports the administration.

So I shall address my remarks to the Members on this side of the aisle who occasionally support the administration; and in that connection I emphasize the word "occasionally."

This amendment provides that a policy which our Government adopted some years ago in the United Nations, in the form of a resolution, be now implemented. Section 110 of the committee amendment states its purpose as clearly as could be stated in any language. It reads as follows:

SEC. 110. In order to implement the resolution adopted by the United Nations on February 20, 1957 (United Nations Resolution 1025 [XI]), which was sponsored by the United States, calling for international cooperation in the establishment of national food reserves, surplus agricultural commodities may be made available by the President on a grant basis for such reserve purposes pursuant to an agreement with the recipient country requiring that payment shall be made when such commodities are withdrawn from the reserve: Provided, That no payment shall be required for any quantities of such commodities which are used by agreement of the President and the government of the recipient country for purposes provided for in section 201 of this Act.

Section 201 is the section of the act to relieve famine.

Mr. President, I submit the amendment on behalf of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, and, I trust, a substantial majority of the Members of this body.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield several minutes to me?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, this amendment, which includes items (5) and (10) of the committee amendment, was proposed by the administration. It authorizes the storing of surplus foods—primarily grain—in foreign countries, to be paid for if they are withdrawn and used by those countries for other than famine or emergency relief.

I do not know that there is much more to be said about the amendment.

I believe that perhaps one of the purposes of the amendment is not only to have the food available for the control of hunger and near famine, but also to hold down inflation, in that if the food were stored in and were available in some of these countries, it would have the effect of holding down inflation in these countries, and also would result in decreasing storage costs. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] just now reminded me that the latter is one purpose.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, as the distinguished Senator from Minnesota has stated, this amendment has the endorsement of the administration. But, I might point out, some of us who are on the committee are opposed to the amendment.

If this amendment were adopted, it would permit the storage abroad of a large quantity of surplus agricultural commodities. In addition, the amendment would provide opportunity for a portion of the proceeds of sales of these surplus agricultural commodities for foreign currencies to be used to construct storage facilities in foreign countries.

Mr. President, it has been my privilege to travel through many foreign countries. It is my judgment that in most of the countries where famine now exists and where there is much need for food, such food-storage facilities are not available. Furthermore, in countries such as Pakistan and India, even if additional facilities would be constructed, the weather conditions are such that our surplus agricultural commodities could not readily be stored there.

In my judgment, it would be much better for us to retain these surplus agricultural commodities here in this country and distribute them as they are contracted for.

Mr. President, if this amendment is adopted, it will mean that the Federal Government will be compelled to pay all costs to ship this food abroad, and if the food is used for any other purpose than that provided under title I, it is entirely possible that our country will have to pay for the storage of that food, as well.

It strikes me that the program as it is now operated has worked well. I can see no reason why we should obligate ourselves to any further extent than we have already in the distribution of surplus agricultural commodities abroad.

Mr. President, I ask that there may be inserted at this point in my remarks a further explanation of the pending amendment.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL FOOD RESERVES

This provision authorizes grants of surplus agricultural commodities for the purpose of creating national food reserves in other countries. Food withdrawn from the reserves would be paid for by the recipient country if it were withdrawn for purposes other than those provided for by section 201 of the act, namely, emergency famine or extraordinary relief assistance.

The report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations states:

"This section states specifically that the reserves to be created will help implement the resoluton of the Unted Nations, adopted at the 11th session of the General Assembly. That resolution calls for the establishment of national food reserves "to be used in accordance with international agreed principles." The United Nations resolution specifies that the purposes of national food reserves should be:

"(a) To meet emergency situations;

"(b) To prevent excessive price increases arsing as a result of a failure in local food supplies;

"(c) To prevent excessive price increases resulting from increased demand due to economic development programs, thus facilitating the economic development of less developed countries.

"Section 110 specifies that the reserves will be kept at agreed levels unless the President specifically approves a reduction below the agreed level. The agreements shall also contain safeguards to assure that the commodities in the reserve are not used for speculative purposes.

"The committee also emphasizes the importance of utilizing the services of and consulting with the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization with respect to technical problems of storage, management, and operation of national food reserves.

"The committee calls attention to the fact that the building of national food reserves in food deficit countries requires the building of adequate storage facilities, that assistance in building such storage facilities is authorized under several provisions of this bill, and urges the President to use his authority, whenever necessary and advisable, to aid other countries in the building of adequate storage facilities for national food reserves."

The section, therefore, contemplates that food will be given in order to establish these reserves, and storage facilities will be built with U.S. assistance. The food will be given at a time when it is not needed, to be kept in reserve in case it should be needed at some future time. If it spoils in the meantime, that will be small loss to the recipient country. If it is withdrawn for famine or extraordinary relief assistance, the United States would receive no payment for it even though the recipient country does receive payment. Apparently this provision would remove a substantial measure of control over these commodities before the recipient country has any need for them. Then, if there is an opportunity to use them, the United States will be in a weak bargaining position in fixing a price for them.

The price-depressing effect of having large stores of commodities overhanging the market is well known. This provision would provide for stores of commodities in countries all over the world. Prices and other incentives to produce in those countries would tend to be reduced, so that this measure might well have a crippling effect on its beneficiaries and tend to keep them dependent on the United States.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have included in the RECORD at this point a copy of a letter from the Department of Agriculture describing a similar provision.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D.C., August 7, 1959.

HON. HAROLD D. COOLEY,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN COOLEY: In accordance with your request there is set out below an explanation of the provision for national reserves contained in the Department's proposed new section 110 of title I, Public Law 480. It is our intention through this requested new section to make it possible for underdeveloped countries to carry reserve stocks of commodities, such as wheat, to meet (a) temporary shortages resulting from crop failures or delays in the implementation of import plans, and (b) emergency needs resulting from natural disasters or other causes for which assistance may be made available under section 201 of title II of the act.

It has been a recurring experience in times of crop shortage in such countries that consumption has been substantially cut back over a period of 1 to 3 months while import programs were being negotiated and purchases made and shipments received in the country. Under these circumstances, a 2 or 3 months reserve supply would bridge the gap until regular imports begin to arrive. Also, in the case of disaster such as floods, where the need for food is immediate, even the promptest action in making shipments from the United States will not meet such need in time. The availability of such reserve stocks would do so.

The existing method of effecting exports of surplus commodities under title I through regular trade channels is, we believe, the most practicable means of providing reserve stocks to be available for either of the two purposes described above. Taking into account that this method moves the bulk of the commodities out of private stocks, thus avoiding the expense of acquisition, storage, and handling under the price support program, we believe it is also the most economical.

The title I agreement providing for the establishment of reserve stocks under section 110 would include provisions governing: (1) The quantity of the reserve to be established; (2) the length of time the reserve would be maintained; (3) the methods of protecting the reserve stocks, including the basis of settlement in case of damage requiring salvage operations; (4) the use of such reserve stocks for agreed purposes authorized in section 201 of Public Law 480 without any payment being made by the recipient country; (5) use of such reserve stocks for other than section 201 purposes with payment being made for the commodity by the recipient country; and (6) compliance with other requirements of title I, including safeguards against use of the commodities for speculative purposes.

The purchase authorizations providing for procurement of the commodity under such an agreement would be substantially the same as purchase authorizations providing for procurement for immediate consumption. The exporters sales price would be financed in the same way and would be subject to price analysis and reclaim, if excessive. The foreign currency equivalents of such sales price would be determined in the same manner but the recipient country would not be required to deposit such foreign currency to U.S. account at that time, as is required in the case of procurement for immediate consumption. If the commodity were later used for regular consumption purposes, the deposit would then be made. If the commodity were used to meet emergency needs agreed by the United States, the deposit would not be required and the transaction would then constitute a grant rather than a sale.

In most underdeveloped countries there is not now sufficient storage over and above that required for working stocks to carry adequate reserves against disaster and crop failures. For this reason, emphasis will be placed on measures that will result in recipient countries utilizing available grant and loan funds from title I, Public Law 480 programs and other sources to increase their storage facilities. The furnishing of assistance in expanding storage facilities through loans or grants out of title I, Public Law 480 sales proceeds would be an inherent part of the regular programs for sales of commodities for foreign currencies. It does not mean that the United States would have responsibility for storage of the reserve stocks or for costs of carrying out the storage operations. The commodities would be owned by the recipient country from the time of shipment from the United States and further storage and handling would be the responsibility of that country.

Under the proposed amendatory language, considerable flexibility would be permitted in program operations to adapt to operating problems which might arise. We will be pleased to keep the committee informed regarding actual operating procedures developed and progress made under this authority, if enacted.

Sincerely yours,

CLARENCE L. MILLER,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND].

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, it makes little difference who is requesting or supporting this amendment. I think it must stand or fall on its essential merits.

I call attention to some of the details of the amendment which cause me great concern.

First is the fact that storage abroad means we must build storehouses abroad.

Second, storage abroad means that we must transport and pay for the transportation of our surplus products abroad.

Third, storage abroad means that we must subject those surplus products to climatic conditions and other conditions which exist there.

Fourth, in this amendment it is provided—and this is rather an amazing thing to be suggested by those who think that they are recognizing the sovereignty of some 40 countries with which we deal, and which, it is hoped, will set up reserves among themselves to help themselves—such agreements shall require the government of the recipient country to maintain the reserve at agreed levels unless the President specifically approves a reduction below the agreed level, and shall contain reasonable safeguards to assure that the commodities in the reserve are not used for speculative purposes.

Mr. President, I do not know what countries might be willing to accept our largesse on condition that we determine what reserves or how large reserves should be kept by them, but I think that they might be few in number, and that the result of such legislation as this, far from making friends, would be exactly the opposite.

The existence of surpluses here causes trouble for every man who produces them and for every industry which handles the products. It is proposed now to extend the surplus threat to every country friendly to us, and which may deal with us under this proposal, so that each of them will have as a cloud over its own production a part of the surplus which we have here, creating for the particular country a continuing surplus unless there is disaster and unless there is need for the surplus.

Many years ago a Secretary of Agriculture promulgated a program which he called the ever-normal granary program, which at least applied only to us. This proposal is to make of us a kind of Joseph for all the free nations of the earth, under regulations which we prescribe, requiring the recipient countries to live up to those regulations. We become a Joseph for all the other free nations by preserving in their areas reserves or surpluses of products which are nonperishable.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, it seems to me that Mr. Wallace will probably blush with shame when he finds that his rather modest proposals of a few years ago have been far overcalled and far outdone by this proposal, which seeks to preserve a kind of ever-normal granary in all the free nations of the world, by continuing to mine our soil and continung to insist upon the production of huge surpluses.

Shall we ever reach the time when we can cut down the production of surpluses, or are we instead to write into the law provisions to the effect that for 3 years of commitments, and for about 6 years of deliveries, we are now committing ourselves to continue production of surpluses big enough to overhang production in all the friendly nations which may seek to avail themselves of this program?

The program is so astounding that I cannot support it, and I am surprised that any Senator should rise to support it.

I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, it is true that some such proposal as this has come from administration sources or from other sources. It is also true that we have been following this policy in the main over the past year. I go gack to the days of UNRRA and the terrible and disgraceful fiasco that was created by the manipulation of UNRRA abroad following World War II, when the food that we sent so generously from American ports was used for the advancement of communism by the agents of communism who got hold of the food and distributed it.

The danger in this proposal to me is, first, that it is proposed that we build warehouses all over the world. I do not care whether my administration proposes it or someone else proposes it. That makes no difference to me. We propose to build warehouses. What is to happen to such warehouses? Somebody must use them. So we propose to put food into the warehouses, and it must be kept at a certain level.

It is not to be drawn down except in famine, but there are rats and other rodents, and there are two-legged rats which, with certain political manipulations in certain countries, will, in one way or another, draw down those reserves, we can rest assured. When the storehouses are nearly empty, they will say to us, "Look at these storehouses. They are empty. We do not know where the food has gone. Please send us some more grain to keep up the level." In that way we shall be faced with more famines and emergencies all over the world in order to pull down the reserves of grain in those countries than we have ever heard of before in history, outside of wartime.

That is what I am afraid of. If we build storage facilities and begin to put grain in them, are we not under a moral obligation, in the minds of some people, at least, to keep them filled, whether we have the surpluses or not? They will not care whether we have the surpluses or not. They will say, "You built the storehouses. You ought to keep them filled. Go out in the market and buy the stocks and put them into the storehouses."

I am afraid those questions will be raised.

So far as the food reaching the people is concerned, as has been pointed out by other Members, most of it will not be given to the people as the result of the bounty of the American people, so far as they know. It will be sold to the people in these countries, and the politicians and governments in those countries will in many cases use the food to perpetuate themselves, whether they be good, bad, or indifferent, as has occurred countless times in the past. The general effect upon the hearts and minds of the people who need the food will be lost. I fear that such things will happen under this program if it is carried out.

It is a high-minded program. So long as we have the surpluses, so long as we have the things we can give, so long as the bounty of the American people continues to be as large as it has in the past, we shall keep making these commodities available to the people. But let us not tie ourselves to any actual contractual obligation with respect to which we can be accused of having assumed a moral liability to continue the programs indefinitely, and to stimulate certain countries into keeping in effect a perpetual condition of emergency and starvation in order to get free food from the United States.

I think it is a dangerous program to start in the form provided in the amendment, and I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Let us continue to make surplus foods available where they are needed and when we have them, but let us not tie our hands and get into a commitment ad infinitum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I have no time.

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield 1 minute to the Senator.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Is the proposed program a new one?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The program has been presented, in one way or another, by many people.

Mr. LAUSCHE. But this is an effort to put it into effect?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. This is an effort to put this program into effect on a contractual basis.

Mr. LAUSCHE. But is it a new program? I understand that under existing law, if a foreign nation wants to buy products with counterpart currencies it can do so.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. It is not a new idea; it is a new program.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Under existing law, we can send food to nations suffering from famine. Is that correct?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Yes.

Mr. LAUSCHE. This proposal contemplates transferring our food from our own bins in this country to countries having famine conditions. Is that correct?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. And letting them encourage their own famines.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. President, it is unusual for me to support an odd combination of a Eisenhower-Benson-Humphrey program. Much has been said about embarking on a new program for building storage facilities in other countries. We are not building storage facilities. It is the foreign countries that are building them with foreign currencies.

We lend this money to them to build factories, industries, roads, all manner of works; but now it is said it is wrong that we are going to permit them to build some storage facilities, for example, in India, which country does not have but little storage facilities now. That is one of the reasons why we cannot give them more food. I see nothing wrong with the program at all.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota did not use the time allotted to him. He came right to the point.

I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. We may have an agreement that we will supply a certain country with 10 million bushels of wheat. This proposal will permit us, provided the country has the storage facilities, to send food to that country before the time it is needed. When it is needed for an emergency, it will be available immediately. If it is used for other purposes, the country will then pay for it. In either event we will save the storage charges which we would otherwise have to pay in this country.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, it is always the perogative of any Member of Congress to change his mind, and I ask that Senators who oppose this amendment tonight recall their vote in committee only a few days ago. This amendment was approved in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It was approved, I say most respectfully, with the vote of the senior Senator from Iowa. This amendment was approved in the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and I do not recall that there was any objection. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG]——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I do not think the Senator from Minnesota would want the statement to stand that it was unanimously approved in the committee, because it was not.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I did not say that. I said that I did not recall any objection in the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I voted for the measure, reserving to myself the right to cast my vote as I saw fit, after I heard no arguments of the character that were presented here tonight before the Foreign Relations Committee. Not a single question was raised of the type that has been raised by the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER].

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am a generous man, and I am more than willing to have these comments made on my time. My good friend from Ohio is absolutely right when he states that he reserved his right to vote as he saw fit. All the Senator from Minnesota said was that he did not recall any objections being made. Neither of us is violating the respect we have for each other, because the Senator from Ohio is one of my cherished and dear friends, and will always be so. Moreover, when he fights for a cause, he fights well and honorably.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Do I correctly understand the situation now is that, without enactment of the amendment, we are sending foodstuffs, under Public Law 480, to foreign countries, and money paid for the foodstuffs does not come to the United States, but constitutes counterpart funds?

Mr. HUMPHREY. No; it constitutes local currencies to the deposit of and in the account of the U.S. Treasury.

Mr. PASTORE. What is the money used for, and by whom?

Mr. HUMPHREY. It is used for many activities by our Government. We sometimes lend it back, at interest, to be repaid in local currencies or dollars. We use it to pay for costs of military construction and for embassy operations.

Mr. PASTORE. But does the money ever come back to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Oh, yes. Some of it is already being paid, and up to 25 percent is loaned to American industry abroad. So here we convert this money. This is almost like the alchemist of old who tried to convert a base metal into gold. Here we convert foodstuffs and fiber into economic development.

May I say, with respect to this particular amendment, since my time is limited, that in a country like Ceylon, for example, there is at the most a 2-week supply.

This is a valuable country in the contest between the Communist world and the free world. This proposal would give the President the opportunity, if he should see fit—the provision is not mandatory; it is permissive—to make available, in a food deficit area such as Ceylon or India, storage grain, if storage facilities are there, so that the grain can be used either for purposes of sale in the area or for purposes of famine relief.

Under the existing section 201 of Public Law 480, what does that do? It provides one thing; namely, a saving on storage.

If my colleagues wish us to continue to pay out a million and a half dollars a day for storage, let them continue this policy. Wheat can be stored abroad for one-fifth of the cost in this country. Moreover, the wheat, cotton, rice, or other commodity is on location. In addition, the administration is of the opinion that this provision would improve the operations of Public Law 480.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Is it the opinion of the Senator from Minnesota that if some of this surplus food were stored in countries where it is nip and tuck in the fight between freedom and totalitarianism, it might well be helpful to the political leaders in those countries that stand for freedom if they knew that in time of famine they would have this food available?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I do feel that way. I want to add to the Senator's comment, which is most pertinent and relevant, that the Senate voted to put large stocks of arms in Germany in caves underground in storage depots before the German army was constituted. The Senate voted to put large amounts of trucks and vehicles in surplus amounts overseas for our Armed Forces and for others. Yet Admiral Briscoe, the chief of the command of the southern flank of NATO, told the Senator from Minnesota and told a representative of the Foreign Relations Committee staff, one Mr. Patrick Holt, assigned on that mission, when I visited the southern flank of NATO, that if war broke out in Europe, because of the inadequacy of food we could not feed our own troops for 10 days. The military departments of Government have recommended for years that we maintain food reserves overseas. The Department of Defense is on record, time after time, in favor of these depots of foods overseas, not for helping others, but for helping ourselves.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. I am very much in sympathy with this amendment. The thing which concerns the junior Senator from Rhode Island is the question raised by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] to the effect that, after all, this money is being used for other industrial developments in these countries, so why not use it to build storehouses instead, to store this food?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes.

Mr. PASTORE. Then I asked the question whether this money would come back to the Treasury of the United States, and the Senator said it would.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes.

Mr. PASTORE. How do we spend this money for industrial development in foreign countries?

Mr. HUMPHREY. We loan the money to the countries at interest, repayable, under terms of an agreement, either in local currency or in American dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes from the time of the bill to myself, so that I may respond to the question of my good friend and colleague.

We loan the money to the countries, and it is repayable with interest, under the terms of an agreement, country by country, contract by contract.

Mr. PASTORE. Nevertheless, it is a fact that if the money were not used for this purpose it would come back to the U.S. Treasury?

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. What we are seeking to do under the law is to authorize use of the money for the building of warehouses in foreign countries.

Mr. HUMPHREY. May I say, most respectfully, to my good friend——

Mr. PASTORE. I am not quarreling about it, but I think the record should be straight.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The record will be straight.

It is very difficult to spend Indian rupees in either Providence, R.I., or Minneapolis, Minn. We spend Indian rupees in India. We sell the wheat, cotton, or other commodity under title I for the local currencies, over and above what we can sell for dollars. When we sell commodities for local currencies the only place the local currencies can be used is where the local currencies are generated.

Mr. PASTORE. Therefore, this money would not come back to the U.S. Treasury. It is money we would have to spend in the foreign countries.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes. In the agreement relating to the use of the money, it would be repayable either in the local currency or in dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional 2 minutes the Senator yielded have expired.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield himself 1 more minute?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 more minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to inquire as to whether the Senator in control of the time on the bill wishes to yield time on the bill to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I understand the majority leader is willing to yield time on the bill to handle these amendments. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] has control of the time on the bill. Does the Senator desire additional time?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I wish to respond to questions. Who is controlling the time against the bill? The Senator is against the committee amendments.

This is an anomaly, if I have ever seen one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous consent agreement, the minority leader controls the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. In other words, what we have happening is that the time on both sides is controlled by the opponents.

This is a "deal."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the acting minority leader yield time?

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, first let the record show that the Senator from Minnesota may or may not be correct in his statement. I am one Senator who is trying, in the midst of considerable confusion, to determine how my vote should be cast.

In any event, with the customary generosity which goes with this desk, 1 minute is allotted to the able Senator. [Laughter]

Mr. HUMPHREY. I will say, with the customary gratitude which comes from this side, "Thank you."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may ask one question?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Oregon understands that a considerable amount of storage space will be built in some countries with the use of soft currencies, the use of local currencies which could not possibly come back to the Treasury of the United States, but which must be spent in such countries for uses for which soft currencies can be spent. Is that a correct understanding?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I should like to go back to the point raised by the Senator from Rhode Island, in the 30 seconds remaining, if I may do so.

When we sell the commodities under title I, we get money for them. It may be dollars, pounds, or francs, or it may be some other currency, but we get money of some kind. The money is a negotiable instrument within the country where the sale is made. Therefore, under the terms of Public Law 480, we make agreements with those countries to loan back a portion of the total amount of the proceeds, as to which we are repaid interest and principal.

Mr. PASTORE. That is the point I mean to make, precisely. In other words, these warehouses will be paid for out of money which we are obligated to loan to the countries, anyway.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. At any rate, this is not money which will come into the United States Treasury.

Mr. HUMPHREY. It is in the Treasury.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; it is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I have no time.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, the acting minority leader is available for an allocation of additional time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KUCHEL. I yield 5 minutes to the able senior Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I think there is some misunderstanding in connection with the amendment now pending.

The storage bins or granaries will be built with currencies which belong to the U.S. Government, and currencies which will come back to this country if they are not spent or loaned. Such currencies are spent or loaned only at our discretion. These are not counterpart funds.

The warehouses will be built with money of American taxpayers, whether it is money which we have in American dollars or whether it is money which we have in foreign currencies which we have accepted in exchange for commodities which we have sold at discounts.

This is one of the most fantastic proposals I think we have ever had in this Congress—it commits the American taxpayers to pay for the building of storage houses throughout the world. We will then be storing our surplus commodities in those storage houses. Once the commodity is in the foreign country stored in one of the storage houses, we cannot sell it to any other purchaser except the country in which it is stored, unless it give its consent. We will have to negotiate on a price with that country as the only prospective buyer. The country will know it has the commodity. We can give it to them or we can sell it at what they offer. We will even be required to pay storage on our grain stored in this foreign country in warehouses we build.

If there happens to be a famine in an adjoining country, we cannot take the commodity out of the storage house in x country, without an internal accident, and move it over to the country which has a famine.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Who will determine how much we put in the storage house?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The United States Government.

Mr. PASTORE. Is that not enough protection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. It has not been in the past. It is our money. We should control it.

Mr. PASTORE. We determine whether we shall put in much or little.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. The argument has been developed here that because we put in something there should be apprehension that the program will be abused. If we have the final decision, what difference does it make?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. We could build one warehouse, or we could build several. I do not think we should build any.

Mr. PASTORE. We can put in as much as we wish.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The Senate will determine tonight whether we want to build worldwide granaries and store all of our grain throughout the world.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I will yield in just a moment.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I will yield in just a moment.

Mr. President, it has been said that these warehouses would be built with currencies which we could not bring back to the Treasury of the United States. These warehouses will be built with currencies which we can spend for needed strategic commodities which we can use in our national stockpile. This is money we can use for embassies, or military establishments abroad.

I think we had better act on this question with our eyes open. It was admitted in the committee that we would have no control over the commodity once we put it in the storage house.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Is it not a fact that it is proposed to build these warehouses with money which can be used in foreign countries to build mills which produce and sell textile products in competition with American manufactured goods?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The moneys can be used for that purpose, or they can be put back in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PASTORE. What is the difference between doing that and building a warehouse where the food can be stored?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I am not suggesting that we should build textile mills, either.

Mr. PASTORE. In point of fact, we are doing it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. The fact that we are doing it does not mean we should build granaries. Merely because we are doing something which is wrong, why should we start a second project which is wrong?

Mr. PASTORE. It is not exactly wrong.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. We are building textile mills in foreign countries because the Congress voted to do so. We will build warehouses if Congress votes to do so. If the Senator does not like it, he can vote against it rather than talk about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President. will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Delaware has expired.

All time on the amendment has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, a correction. It is a committee amendment.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the able Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields 2 minutes from the time on the bill?

Mr. KUCHEL. From the time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. President, I should like to take a minute or two to explain the provision. When we sell these commodities to foreign countries, we accept their currency.

The average deal operates in this manner: 30 percent of the funds are set aside for use by the United States. That is for our own use, and there is no doubt about it. The other 70 percent of the funds we loan back to these countries.

These storage facilities would be built by using the 70 percent of the funds which are to be loaned back to these foreign countries for some other purpose, anyway.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. That is exactly the point which impresses the junior Senator from Rhode Island. As I understand the situation, these warehouses will not be built with the hard currencies which will come back to the Treasury of the United States, but will be built by use of the soft currencies which will have to be spent, under our agreements, in those countries anyway.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. They would not be built out of the 30 percent of the currencies which, under the act, would be set aside for U.S. use.

Mr. PASTORE. Is that a correct understanding?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] on behalf of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. ERVIN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS] are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARTKE] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH] is absent on official business attending the Interparlimentary meeting in Warsaw, Poland.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CHURCH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARTKE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] would each vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. ERVIN] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. McGEE]. If present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina would vote "nay," and the Senator from Wyoming would vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is absent on official business attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference at Warsaw, Poland.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays, 46, as follows:

So the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLLAND. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have been consulting with the Parliamentarian as to whether I might call up an amendment which I sponsored in my own right. Apparently some Senators think the committee amendments which are being offered are my amendments. These are, of course, the amendments of the majority of the committee. My question is whether I may call up at this time an amendment other than those approved by the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the amendments are to be treated as committee amendments, they will be acted on first.

Mr. HUMPHREY. If an amendment is treated as a committee amendment, it is an amendment which comes from the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement on the face of the amendment is: "Amendments reported by Mr. HUMPHREY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry." That makes them appear to be committee amendments.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct. Indeed, they are committee amendments. One would never know it, but indeed they are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair was advised earlier in the evening that the amendments contained in this group were not committee amendments but were amendments of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I do not know who advised the Chair of that, but I appreciate the compliment.

I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If an amendment other than the committee amendment is offered at this time, unanimous consent is required to permit the amendment to come in ahead of the committee amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I do not believe we should ask for miracles at this hour of the night. I was trying to accommodate one of our esteemed, beloved colleagues, who wanted to make a statement in reference to the amendment, which I know will be adopted overwhelmingly. But I will proceed.

Mr. President, I call up the amendment relating to section 104, paragraphs 6, 7, 8, and 9, starting on page 2, line 17, and continuing through line 6, page 4 of the amendment designated "8–25–59—B."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the appropriate place in the bill the following:

(6) Section 104(k) (relating to scientific activities) is amended by striking out the colon and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "and to promote and support programs of medical and scientific research, cultural and educational development, health, nutrition, and sanitation:".

(7) Section 104(o) (relating to assistance to educational facilities sponsored by United States citizens) is amended by striking out so much thereof as follows the semicolon.

(8) Section 104 (relating to uses of foreign currencies) is further amended by inserting after paragraph (o) the following new paragraphs:

"(p) For supporting workshops in American studies or American educational techniques, and supporting chairs in American studies;

"(q) For assistance to meet emergency or extraordinary relief requirements other than requirements for surplus food commodities: Provided, That not more than a total amount equivalent to $2,000,000 may be made available for this purpose during any fiscal year;

"(r) For financing the preparation, distribution, and exhibiting of audio-visual informational and educational materials, including Government materials, abroad: Provided, That not more than a total amount equivalent to $5,000,000 may be made available for this purpose during any fiscal year;

"(s) For financing the services of technicians, advisers, and administrators who are nationals of any friendly country, which may be needed to further economic and social development programs in other friendly countries;".

(9) Section 104 is further amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That foreign currencies shall be available for the purpose of subsections (p) and (s), in addition to funds otherwise made available for such purposes, only in such amounts as may be specified from time to time in appropriation Acts".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that amendments to this committee amendment are now in order.

Mr. HUMPHREY. It is my intention to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will submit his amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Must an amendment relate to this particular section to be germane or to be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment must be germane.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I mean must it be in order? I withdraw the statement with respect to germaneness. Must an amendment to section 104 relate to section 104 to be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So long as it does not relate to another portion of the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Then I call up my amendment designated "9–1–59—B" as an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will state it.

Mr. KEATING. Is the committee amendment now offered subject to severance?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is subject to a division for a question.

Mr. KEATING. I ask that the amendment be divided in order to enable us to vote on that part thereof which extends from line 12 to line 16 on page 2 as a separate item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That matter has already been voted on.

Mr. KEATING. Then I ask that so much thereof as begins on line 9 and ends on line 13, page 3, be voted on as a separate item. Is that permissible?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is subject to a division.

Mr. KEATING. I ask that that part be voted on as a separate item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota has not been stated.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment designated "9–1–59—B," title II being entitled "Enrichment and Packaging of Certain Donated Commodities; Enrichment and Sanitary Packaging of Certain Commodities," and title III being entitled "Demonstration Food Stamp Allotment Programs," be printed at this point in the RECORD. It will undoubtedly simplify action on the amendment at this late hour if we proceed with a discussion of the amendment without its being read, unless there is an objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment is as followed:

On page 1, between lines 2 and 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

"TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO THE AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954"

At the end of the bill add the following new titles:

"TITLE II—ENRICHMENT AND PACKAGING OF CERTAIN DONATED COMMODITIES

"Enrichment and sanitary packaging of certain commodities

"SEC. 201. (a) In order to insure the nutritional value of cornmeal, grits, white rice, and white flour when such foods are made available for distribution under section 416(3) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 or for distribution to schools under the National School Lunch Act or any other Act, such foods shall be enriched so as to meet the standards for enriched cornmeal, enriched corn grits, enriched rice, or enriched flour, as the case may be, prescribed in regulations promulgated under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act; and in order to protect the nutritional value and sanitary quality of such enriched foods during transportation and storage such foods shall be packaged in sanitary containers. For convenience and ease in handling, the weight of any sanitary container when filled shall not exceed fifty pounds.

"(b) The term 'sanitary container' means any container of such material and construction as (1) will not permit the infiltration of foreign matter into the contents of such container under ordinary conditions of shipping and handling, and (2) will not, for a period of at least one year, disintegrate so as to contaminate the contents of the container, necessitating the washing of the contents prior to use.

"TITLE III—DEMONSTRATION FOOD STAMP ALLOTMENT PROGRAMS

"Definitions

"SEC. 301. As used in this title—

"(a) The term 'food commodity' means any food product raised or produced in the United States on farms, including agricultural, horticultural, and dairy products, livestock, poultry, and honey.

"(b) The term 'State' includes the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

"(c) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Agriculture.

"(d) The term 'food stamp' means a certificate, coupon, or other similar medium of exchange issued to eligible recipients.

"Demonstration programs authorized

"SEC. 302. (a) The Secretary is authorized and directed, as soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act, to formulate and administer in geographically dispersed areas of the United States demonstration food stamp allotment programs under which food commodities will be made available to persons with low incomes, unemployed persons, and such other persons as the Secretary determines to be in need of the type of assistance made available under such programs.

"(b) Demonstration food stamp allotment programs authorized by subsection (a) shall be administered by the Secretary in not less than three nor more than six different areas of the United States, and shall, to the extent practicable, be administered in areas determined by the Secretary of Labor to be areas of surplus labor. In carrying out the provisions of this section the Secretary shall provide for at least one such program in a rural area of the United States.

"Types of demonstration programs

"SEC. 303. (a) The Secretary shall, with respect to the demonstration food stamp allotment program to be administered in any area, determine the type of program it is to be, the requirements of eligibility for participation therein, and the manner in which it is to be administered.

"(b) In formulating and administering any demonstration food stamp allotment program pursuant to the provisions of this title the Secretary is authorized to consult and cooperate with appropriate State and local authorities as well as representatives of any private industry concerned with the operation of such program.

"(c) The Secretary is authorized and directed in carrying out the provisions of this title to utilize such stocks of the Commodity Credit Corporation (determined by the Secretary to be in surplus supply) as he shall deem fit.

"Rules and regulations

"SEC. 304. The Secretary is authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as he deems necessary to effectuate the provisions of the title.

"Termination of programs—report to Congress

"SEC. 305. (a) The demonstration food stamp allotment programs authorized by this title shall terminate prior to January 1, 1962.

"(b) The Secretary shall, as soon as practicable after the termination of such programs, submit to the Congress a final report on the operation of such programs, including such recommendation as he deems appropriate. The Secretary may also from time to time make such earlier reports to the Congress as he deems appropriate.

"Appropriations

"SEC. 306. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for carrying out the demonstration food stamp allotment programs.

"Maintenance of other assistance

"SEC. 307. Receipt by any person of benefits under this title shall not be deemed to be income or resources under the provisions of the Social Security Act or any other Federal legislation pertaining to the security of the aged, blind, disabled, dependent children, unemployed, or other similar groups. Any State or local subdivision thereof which decreases the cash or other assistance extended to any person or group as a consequence of the assistance made available under this title shall be ineligible for further participation under this title."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that my amendment to the committee amendment is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the pending question.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Chair. The request of the Senator from New York will be in order at the conclusion of the debate on the amendment to the committee amendment. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Where does the Senator from Minnesota desire his amendment to appear in the committee amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY. At the end of line 6, page 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator from Minnesota that a request has been made for a severance of the amendment at a point which will come before the point proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Then wherever the severance is made or the surgery is performed, I should like to have some slight plastic surgery applied at that point. That is where I should like to place the amendment which has just been called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will state it.

Mr. KEATING. On what amendment is the Senator from Minnesota about to proceed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has offered an amendment which constitutes the portion of the severance which was requested by the Senator from New York.

Mr. KEATING. So the vote, when it is taken, will be on what?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be taken on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the committee amendment.

Mr. KEATING. But this amendment has no relationship to the paragraph on page 3; is that correct?

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unable to state that, because the amendment has not yet been read.

Mr. KEATING. After the reading of the amendment, I shall renew my parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on whose time are we now proceeding?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has not yet begun to run.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, we must be proceeding on time available to someone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the committee amendment has not yet been placed before the Senate.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I respectfully point out that my amendment to the committee amendment has been offered.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will state it.

Mr. ELLENDER. To what bill is the amendment submitted?

Are we now dealing with an amendment to Senate bill 1748; or are we dealing with amendments which were reported by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota as committee amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A portion of the committee amendments was submitted, and a division was requested.

The Senator from Minnesota has submitted an amendment to the committee amendment.

The first question will be on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the committee amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will state it.

Mr. ELLENDER. If that amendment to the committee amendment should be agreed to, will the issue again come before the Senate, in connection with the question of amending the pending measure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the pending amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to, the next question will be on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will state it.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understand the situation, the Senator from Minnesota proposes to further amend the committee amendment, not the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How much time does the Senator from Minnesota allot to himself?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I understood that 15 minutes are available to each side, in connection with the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I shall allot myself whatever time I may require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well—out of the 15 minutes available to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I shall not need to use all of the 15 minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HUMPHREY. On whose time?

Mr. KEATING. On the time available to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes, with my typical generosity.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, may we have the pending amendment to the committee amendment read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A unanimous-consent agreement was proposed, and no objection was made.

Mr. KEATING. In other words, I am too late in making my request?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from New York is never too late. In this particular instance, something happened while the Senator from New York was very busy.

Mr. KEATING. Will the Senator from Minnesota explain the amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes; and I am about to do so, if the Senator from New York will permit me to.

Mr. President, several Senators suggested that a very important amendment which is lying at the desk be called up before they had to leave; and I thought we would accommodate them.

This amendment is on the Senate calendar as a bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I believe it was reported by majority vote. I shall ask the committee staff to give me the facts in connection with the reporting of the amendment.

In any case, in our calendar for Friday, September 4, on page 9, Calendar No. 664 is Senate bill 2522, to provide for the enrichment and sanitary packaging of certain donated commodities, and to establish experimental food stamp allotment programs. The bill was reported to the Senate on August 11. It was my privilege to report the bill to the Senate, for the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

This bill is a combination of a proposal introduced by my esteemed friend and colleague on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON]. I now refer to the enrichment features, to enrich certain surplus foods, so they will be edible and usable and of a high dietary quality.

The other part of the bill is the Aiken-Young-Humphrey proposal; in fact, a dozen other Senators joined in the proposal for what we call a food stamp allotment program. The allotment part of it is the Aiken bill. The food stamp plan is the Symington bill.

In the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, we held hearings for several days in regard to how best to utilize certain surplus foods for consumption in the United States, for our own needy people.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] pointed out, very properly and wisely, that some of the food in storage today is not usable without enrichment.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] has been tirelessly—for years—seeking to have established a food allotment program as a means of supplementing inadequate diets.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SYMINGTON] has taken the lead, over the years, in offering to the Senate a food stamp plan, which years ago was a working arrangement in this country.

Mr. President, let me state what this particular amendment will do—inasmuch as the Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING] has asked me to explain its purpose.

The first section of the amendment provides that—

> In order to insure the nutritional value of cornmeal, grits—

That word should strike a harmonious chord—

> white rice—

Those words should appeal strongly to the chairman of the committee—> and white flour—

I will cheer for that—> when such foods are made available for distribution under section 416(3) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 or for distribution to schools under the National School Lunch Act or any other Act, such foods shall be enriched so as to meet the standards for enriched cornmeal, enriched corn grits, enriched rice, or enriched flour—

In other words, to make usable; or, in other words, instead of talking and talking about surplus foods, to talk about foods that will be usable for human diet.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] offered this amendment, not only because of his own judgment in regard to it, but also because every expert says this must be done if we are to use the foods which now are in storage.

I read now the next provision:

> DEMONSTRATION PROGRAMS AUTHORIZED
> SEC. 202. (a) The Secretary is authorized and directed, as soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act, to formulate and administer in geographically dispersed areas of the United States demonstration food stamp allotment programs under which food commodities will be made available to persons with low incomes, unemployed persons, and such other persons as the Secretary determines to be in need of the type of assistance made available under such programs.
> (b) Demonstration food stamp allotment programs authorized by subsection (a) shall be administered by the Secretary in not less than three nor more than six different areas of the United States, and shall, to the extent practicable, be administered in areas determined by the Secretary of Labor to be areas of surplus labor. In carrying out the provisions of this section the Secretary shall provide for at least one such program in a rural area of the United States.

Mr. President, these are to be demonstration, pilot-project programs. The maximum amount of the authorization will be $20 million, to carry out these demonstration experimental food stamp allotment programs.

Mr. President, this bill is a good one. It has been reported by the committee. Long hearings were held. The bill has the support of the overwhelming majority of the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. This measure is on our calendar as a separate bill.

A much broader measure was passed by the House of Representatives.

I wish to say to my colleagues that when we go to conference, it seems to me we should have a measure which will be within these bounds of what I call experimental pilot projects.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President——

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, at this time I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is this program limited by application to surplus food already held by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. HUMPHREY. No; it is not. It is use of surplus foods held by the Secretary of Agriculture, but not more than $20 million is to be expended for the surplus foods held by the Secretary of Agriculture and such other foods as he may deem necessary. The amount of money is limited.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, as we have just heard, the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] has offered an amendment to S. 1748, which will provide for the establishment of a demonstration food stamp allotment program.

This amendment represents an important step toward promoting the health and welfare, augmenting the purchasing power, and improving the nutrition of those persons receiving public assistance, the unemployed, and other low income, needy persons.

Last month a more extensive food stamp plan was adopted in the House as part of the bill extending Public Law 480. This bill was introduced by a great lady from Missouri, Congresswoman LEONOR SULLIVAN, and passed overwhelmingly, 2 to 1.

Many of our fellow Americans are underfed and undernourished—and it is a tragic commentary that this should be true in a Nation as rich and productive as the United States.

Today there are nearly 4 million Americans unemployed. Nearly 2 million of these people do not now receive any assistance, or unemployment compensation. Consequently, they cannot purchase the foods needed for a balanced diet.

The problem is also serious for the several million of our fellow Americans whose only source of income is through public assistance.

These people—the aged, the dependent children, the blind, and the disabled—are finding it increasingly difficult to make ends meet on this limited income.

The average public assistance, per individual, is some $60 per month. With such an income, it is difficult to meet the basic costs of living and still purchase the food needed for a decent diet.

The amendment offered today would supplement the purchasing power of some of those needy persons by providing food certificates, or stamps, to be used as partial payment toward the purchase of needed nutritious foods, which are in surplus in this country.

The current food distribution program of the Department of Agriculture is making some food available to hungry persons in certain distressed areas throughout the country. But the program is far from adequate, either as to quantity or quality.

Throughout the United States we have billions of dollars of Government-stored food surpluses.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of this surplus is being shipped to people in foreign lands.

Surely we can afford this proposed plan for our own least fortunate citizens.

Therefore I urge favorable action on this amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

This amendment provides for, first, the enrichment and sanitary packaging of cornmeal, grits, white rice, and white flour distributed to needy or to schools; and, second, demonstration food stamp programs in from three to six areas.

It is identical to S. 2522 which was reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture on August 11, 1959. Both the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare are opposed to the establishment of a food stamp program.

The Department of Agriculture reports that programs are already in effect with respect to the distribution of surplus foods to needy persons and institutions.

For the first three-quarters of last fiscal year, monthly participation in the needy family program has averaged about 5.2 million people. This is in sharp contrast to the situation 5 years ago when less than a million needy people were receiving Federal surplus foods and the program was confined to but 223 counties. In April of this year, 1,200 counties and an additional 165 cities were participating. Through the first 9 months of last fiscal year, the States have distributed over one-half billion pounds of surplus goods to needy families. This exceeds the amount distributed in all of the prior fiscal year.

It is apparent from these comparisons that the States in operating their family welfare programs have found it possible in the past 5 years to make better use of Federal surplus foods to help out in emergency situations and to provide supplemental assistance to the aged, the handicapped, and others on State or local public assistance rolls.

Mr. President, as much as I would like to see some sort of a pilot plant food stamp plan enacted, I cannot agree that attaching such a plan to Public Law 480 is the manner in which to proceed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. CURTIS. In reference to the first part of the amendment to the amendment, it calls for the enrichment of cornmeal, grits, and so on. Who is to do that? Is that a Government operation?

Mr. ELLENDER. Government money would be used to provide for such services on a contract basis.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Government provide the facilities, and employ Government help to carry out the program as a Government project?

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understand, this plan would be operated by the Government, and the cost of it would be paid for out of the Treasury.

Mr. CURTIS. I know the cost will be, but what I am wondering is whether we are setting up an industry. The amendment provides:

When such foods are made available for distribution—

And the Government owns title to all that are made available for distribution—such foods shall be enriched.

Is it planned to set up a Government program of processing plants, packaging, and doing whatever is necessary to enrich and package the food in a sanitary manner?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Government would have responsibility over the program. Of course the Government is doing that now by manufacturing flour, as the Senator knows.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; but it does not own the flour mills.

Mr. ELLENDER. No.

Mr. CURTIS. What I am getting at is this: There is no language in the amendment which provides that it shall be done by contract. It merely provides that it shall be done. How?

Mr. ELLENDER. It is a Government food stamp plan on a trial basis, to be operated by the Government.

Mr. CURTIS. I am referring to the first section.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it the Senator's understanding that the Government will contract with someone to package and enrich this food, or are we launching a program under which the Government will build processing plants and operate them?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Government could do either, I suppose.

Mr. CURTIS. Are we authorizing either under the amendment?

Mr. ELLENDER. The point I wish to make is that it is a Government operation, whether under contract or directly by the Government, and Government money would be used in order to carry on the program.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of my prepared statement be printed in the RECORD, in order to conserve time.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On pages 59–63 of the hearings on food distribution programs the Department of Agriculture testified that the present program worked in the following manner:

"First, the Department enters into an agreement with some agency of the State government which assumes basic responsibility for program operations. We do not deal directly with political subdivisions of the State.

"Second, provisions are made for the sharing of costs between the Federal Government and the States. The Department provides the surplus food to the State at no cost, finances necessary processing and packaging costs, and ships the commodities in carload lots—on a freight-paid basis—to receiving points designated by the various States. States are responsible for arranging for the receipt, storage, and delivery of the surplus foods made available to them. They also make arrangements with their counties and communities for the operation of a distribution center where the eligible families can receive the food. (In a few metropolitan areas, local arrangements have been worked out to distribute surplus foods through retail stores.)

"Third, under our present operations States are responsible for establishing eligibility standards as to recipients and for developing a procedure for certifying applicant families. The Department, however, requires that the eligibility standards used by a State bear a relationship to the standards that the States use under their own regular welfare assistance programs. This requirement, we believe, is logical from the standpoint of gearing this surplus food program into the basic, on-going, welfare assistance programs of State and local governments. Also, we believe that this requirement helps to insure that these surplus food donations can be accomplished without any significant interference with regular food markets.

"We believe that experience has demonstrated the effectiveness of these food donation policies. By requiring an agency of the State government to assume overall responsibility for the program, we can be assured that the food donation program will be operated in a manner that is consistent with the policies the State follows in the administration of its basic welfare assistance programs. Under the present arrangement, delivery costs within a State can be held to a practical minimum through the use of State, county, or municipal food storage and handling facilities and, in some cases, with the use of volunteer labor. In addition, such a system maintains sufficient flexibility to permit the scope of the program to be adjusted to changes in the need for such a program or in the volume of surplus food available for donation. More importantly, however, we do not believe the Federal Government should undertake a direct food procurement program on a welfare basis. We do not see how it could help but be disruptive to orderly food marketing or help from exerting an upward pressure on food prices. The operation of welfare assistance programs, basically, is a State and local responsibility. Nonetheless, a complete review would show that the Federal Government already is providing significant amounts of financial assistance to help States and localities carry out that responsibility under the welfare grants authorized by the Social Security Act and through the donation of surplus foods. We do not feel additional Federal action with respect to food assistance is warranted, although we support continued full use of Federal surplus foods to supplement the diets of needy people.

"Butter, dry milk, rice flour, and cornmeal have so far this year been available for donation to needy people in family units and these foods provide significant extra nutrients to needy people. At the rates of distribution recommended by the Department for a four-person family, for example, these surplus foods alone would provide almost one-fourth of the energy and protein allowances recommended by the food and nutrition board of the National Research Council. With the exception of fat and ascorbic acid, the donated foods also would provide between about one-sixth to one-third of the NRC[1] allowances for other nutrients. In addition, these contributions will be increased during the period needy families and institutions receive the dried eggs now being purchased under a section 32 surplus-removal program. As of May 28, a total of 3.5 million pounds of dried eggs, valued at $3.9 million, had been purchased."

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If the Senators will look at the report——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend until it can be determined who is yielding time to him.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolinia. If Senators will look at the report on Calender No. 664, Report No. 657, at the bottom of page 3, they will find that the Department of Agriculture has estimated that the additional cost of enrichment and packaging required by the bill would be between $200,000 and $250,000.

Mr. CURTIS. That does not answer the question.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I will answer the question.

Mr. CURTIS. Is the Government to do it by contract or is the Government to do it by direct Government action?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I suppose that Secretary Benson has enough good sense to contract it out, just as he is currently doing for oversea distribution. We are already packaging food for overseas. We are already enriching food for people in Afghanistan, for example, but if we start doing something for people in this country by enriching food, certain questions arise. We have already started.

Mr. CURTIS. My question was very simple. Is the Senator proposing a Government activity?

Mr. HUMPHREY. No.

Mr. CURTIS. Or private enterprise?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I really feel, since this is a limited program for a year, and since I suppose that Secretary Benson is not to be fired—although I have had the courage at times to say that such a noble purpose should be fulfilled—it appears that this great patron of private enterprise will do it on a contract basis. I will give the Senate my word, and I amend the amendment by saying that the processing shall not be done through socialistic methods but the noble standards of our free enterprise shall be adhered to.

Mr. CURTIS. At what point in the amendment would that language be inserted?

Mr. HUMPHREY. That amendment is included.

Mr. President, one point needs to be clarified. The Senator from Missouri was concerned, as was the Senator from Louisiana and others, about the term "surplus." This does apply to surplus foods, but all surplus foods do not necessarily have to be in the possession of the Commodity Credit Corporation. Again we rely upon the Secretary of Agriculture to determine those supplies that are in surplus.

Mr. GRUENING. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GRUENING. Will the senior Senator from Minnesota tell us whether he is proposing an amendment which actually would do something for the American people exclusively?

Mr. HUMPHREY. This is a great day. That is true. I do not think we shall be damaged. All that is involved is a little pilot project.

I can assure Senators that if this amendment is adopted, a few good, solid, substantial citizens in the United States, people who once were taxpayers and who gave their sons and daughters to the country, may get some food stamps. Would that not be wonderful? And they may get some enriched food like that which people abroad get. I think we should package it too, just as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] has proposed. I think he is to be commended for his efforts.

Mr. GRUENING. What a wonderful present it would be to do something for the American people.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I certainly want to join my colleague, the senior Senator from Minnesota, in support of this proposal to amend Public Law 480 so as to provide for a food stamp plan.

The proposal of the Senator from Minnesota is similar to one on which I have worked for quite a number of years. It is one I believe in. It is a proposal which I feel will do double duty in two areas of our economy which need relief.

First, one of the most pressing domestic problems facing our Nation today is the tragic plight of the American farmer. The root of this very real problem is the surplus commodities headache.

We have not been able to "eat our way out of the surplus" through the Benson assumption that lower prices for farm products would mean lower retail prices for foods, thus inducing housewives to increase their purchases.

Second, my colleague's food stamp proposal will provide assistance for millions of our less fortunately situated citizens at the same time it provides a wider outlet for disposal of the staggering surplus of agricultural products.

Over the years, numerous attempts have been made to increase the demand for farm products. Research programs have been carried on designed to find new uses. We have sold our surpluses at prices below the market level to the needy, to industrial users, and to foreign countries. We have even tried to give the surpluses away, sometimes without success.

But there has been nothing systematic or organized about these efforts. They have received far less emphasis than the other approach of restricting production. With one conspicuous exception, they have not been integrated into our present methods of distribution.

It is that one exception which may hold some hope for the future. It was tried with conspicuous success just before World War II. During the war it was abandoned, and it has never been revived. I am speaking of the food stamp plan.

Older persons receiving social security benefits represent a class of citizens for whom the food stamp plan would be particularly well suited. Under the benefits they now receive, it is hard for our older persons just to exist, to say nothing of having a decent and adequate diet. Moreover, if they find jobs which bring their incomes above a minimum level, they lose their social security benefits. What could be more desirable than a program which would enable our older citizens to eat more and better food and which at the same time would raise the incomes of the American farmer?

One of the most desirable attributes of the food stamp plan is its flexibility, a feature not possessed by many other farm programs.

As supply and demand conditions changed, new products could be put on the surplus list and others taken off. The amount of free stamps given with each purchase of regular stamps could be varied with changing conditions.

Finally, its overall scope, which is determined by the number of free stamps issued, could be increased or decreased at will. We could always know its cost because it would be determined in advance.

In closing, may I again emphasize that the food stamp plan is by no means the complete answer to the farm problem. It is just one step, but, I believe, a step in the right direction.

It has these merits:

It will increase farm incomes.

It will enlarge and improve food consumption of those whose need is the greatest.

It fits perfectly into our present method of food processing and distribution.

It can be quickly expanded if unemployment becomes a serious problem.

It is well suited to the needs of all persons receiving social security benefits, particularly our older citizens.

It is flexible and adaptable to changing conditions.

Its cost would be set and known in advance.

Finally, it has been tried in the past and it works.

[1] National Research Council.

A great philosopher once said that the only thing men learn from history is that men learn nothing from history. This observation is usually recalled when we repeat a mistake of the past. It is equally appropriate when we fail to repeat a success of the past.

I urge the adoption of the amendment of my distinguished colleague, the able senior Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, Senators who were here 3 or 4 years ago, when we initiated the current program in this field, will remember that the Senator from Florida handled it, both as chairman of the subcommittee and on the floor.

They will remember that it was established because of heavy unemployment in the coal industry in two States at that time; and the unemployment later spread to other places.

I am glad to report to the Senate that under that program exactly the same commodities which would be covered by the pending bill are now being distributed—but through the States and local official agencies—to those who need them, and to a total of several millions of our people.

The total in 1958 was of a value of $457,900,000. The total in 1959 was of a value of $413,400,000. Forty-three States are currently participating in this program.

Mr. President, because the time does not permit me to read it in full, I ask unanimous consent at this time that the latest report of the Department of Agriculture, dated September 3 of this year, USDA 2459–59, be fully printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bulletin was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

USDA SURPLUS FOOD DONATIONS SET RECORD IN 1959 FISCAL YEAR

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
September 3, 1959.

A record total of nearly 3 billion pounds of surplus foods was donated by the U.S. Department of Agriculture during fiscal year 1959 for use in school lunch programs and by charitable institutions in this country and by needy persons both here and abroad. Distribution totaled 2,979,600,000 pounds, an increase of 5 percent over the previous fiscal year, and marked a record high volume for donations of Government-owned foods.

Domestic outlets received all of the increase, with donations to schools, institutions, and needy persons totaling slightly more than 1 billion pounds for the year, compared with 871,600,000 pounds the previous year. Greater amounts of wheat flour, cornmeal, rice, nonfat dry milk, and butter to needy persons in family units accounted for most of the gain.

Donations for foreign distribution amounted to 1,867,200,000 pounds in fiscal year 1959, a decline of about 100 million pounds from 1958. Increased donations of wheat flour were offset by decreased amounts of cheese, which was removed from the foreign donation list in July 1958 to reserve the declining Government-owned stocks for domestic outlets.

The foods were acquired through USDA's price-support and surplus-removal programs and were made available through the distribution program of the USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service. They are distributed to eligible recipients in this country through designated agencies of State and local governments. Foreign distribution in 91 countries was handled by 19 U.S. voluntary church and welfare organizations. Surplus foods are donated for overseas relief only after sufficient stocks have been made available to meet needs of recipients in this country.

In addition to regular distribution, surplus foods are made immediately available to victims of natural disasters. In the 1959 fiscal year, about 309,000 pounds of food were distributed to some 21,000 people in 6 States, American Samoa, and Puerto Rico under that plan.

During the 1959 fiscal year, approximately 250 million pounds of food donated through the direct distribution program benefited some 14 million schoolchildren taking part in school lunch programs. And 1,400,000 persons in charitable institutions in this country received a total of 156 million pounds. Distribution of surplus commodities to schools and institutions is made in all the States, the District of Columbia, and in five territories. Not included in these figures are foods which the Department has purchased specifically for schools participating in the national school lunch program.

Distribution to needy persons during the year totaled over 706¾ million pounds, an increase of 50 percent from the 471½ million pounds in fiscal 1958. Participation varied from month to month, and ranged from a high of 5¾ million persons to a low of 4¾ million.

Currently, 43 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, American Samoa, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific are distributing surplus foods to needy persons, with 150 cities and 1,160 counties participating in those States. The following table shows the number of needy persons in family units receiving donated commodities in June 1959:

[2] Distribution from fiscal year 1958 purchase.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, nearly 3 billion pounds of surplus foods of all kinds were distributed to our people, under this program, in the fiscal year ending on July 1, 1959.

The Secretary of Agriculture has very strongly opposed the addition of even this limited food stamp program—which would be a very minor one, $20 million, applicable in only six limited areas—because of the fact that it would be a duplicate program, reaching to the same general class of people, every one of whom is eligible now, provided the authorities in the State, county, or city are willing to assume the responsibility of distribution, which has been done in very great degree in each year of the operation of the present program.

Mr. President, I think the RECORD should show also that the bill introduced by my distinguished friend, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], referred to by the Senator from Minnesota, had nothing to do with this particular bill or program; but it was a highly meritorious bill, suggesting that enrichment processes be used in connection with surplus foods now being distributed under the existing program. That bill was reported to the Senate, as I recall, unanimously—the Senator from South Carolina can correct me if I am inaccurate—and is on the calendar.

I would be perfectly willing and happy to see the pending program changed so as to make more nourishing every one of the surplus foods we have on hand now, and which we may have on hand in the future.

I am willing to have it apply now to surplus foods, whether they come under the price support program or whether they are bought under section 32, when surpluses arise in various perishable commodities.

Mr. President, to attempt a second, duplicate program, to make a welfare official of the Secretary of Agriculture, over his strenuous opposition, and when this new program would be but a drop in the bucket compared to the tremendous program already being accomplished, bringing all kinds of administrative difficulties into the picture, I think would be most unwise. Therefore I oppose it.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN].

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, for the last 15 years a food allotment program has been proposed. It is something that ought to be considered seriously. However, I will not vote to put the food allotment program onto other amendments which, judging from previous votes, are likely to be defeated. I would much prefer to have the food allotment program stand on its own feet, and not be tied to a sudden death amendment or defeated in any other way.

Therefore, if I have to vote against the pending amendment I do not want that vote to be construed as meaning I am opposed to the food allotment program, because I am in favor of a food allotment program but I am not in favor of committing hara-kiri in this matter.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the acting minority leader yield me 1 minute?

Mr. KUCHEL. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I understand the Senator's concern, but I say to the Senator from Vermont that the Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING] has asked for a division of the amendments relating to section 104, and we shall be voting on those separately. Then, if these particular amendments do not succeed, there is one amendment which the Senator from New York insists stand on its own, namely, the administration proposal for $2 million for extra supplies. I say to my friend, who is the main sponsor of this proposal——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I yield 30 additional seconds to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator cannot waste his vote on this amendment, because other items will have to be voted on before this particular amendment is added to the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. Is it proposed to add this amendment to the other amendments?

Mr. HUMPHREY. We shall vote on this one first, but then the other amendments are to be divided, and then this particular amendment will be put on whatever other amendments are left in section 104.

Mr. AIKEN. I understood the Senator from Minnesota was proposing the food allotment amendment as an amendment to another amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. To the committee amendments; but the committee amendments are to be divided, according to the suggestion made by the Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING]. The parliamentary situation, as I understand, is that the Senate will vote on this amendment, and then vote on the division of the other committee amendments under section 104(k).

I ask the Chair if that is correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. If they are defeated, this particular amendment will stand on its own merits.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator offer it again?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has again expired.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, does the Senator from Louisiana have time remaining?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I certainly agree that the amendment should not be tacked on to Public Law 480.

There are certain features in regard to the amendment which, at the proper time and the proper place, it might be well to consider.

Again I should like to state for the RECORD the fact that needy people in this country have indeed been getting food. Nearly 3 billion pounds of Federal surplus foods were donated by the Department of Agriculture in 1959. In 1959 5¾ million people in family units received surplus foods. More than 21 million people in this country this year were beneficiaries. We are not neglecting the needy people in this country. The needy people are getting food.

This is a proposal for a new program, superimposed on the old. I do not think it has any place in the bill under consideration. I think it should be considered on its own merits, separate and distinct from Public Law 480.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] to the committee amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the committee amendment. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT BOND PRICES

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, on September 2, 1959 the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] raised the question in the Senate as to why marketable Treasury bonds issued in the period August 1957 to June 1958 could be offered at successively lower rates dropping from 4 percent in the fall of 1957 to 2⅝ percent in June 1958 in comparison with the higher rates prevailing now on both Treasury and high-grade corporate bonds.

The Senator from Tennessee obtained unanimous consent for me to place in the RECORD the answer to this question. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is only necessary to look behind the figures at the hard facts of the economic situation to find the explanation for the differences in interest rates in these two periods. What was not pointed out in making the comparison is that the period of declining interest rates in 1957–58 was also a period of rising unemployment, declining incomes, and falling output. Monetary policies during that period were properly directed toward easier credit as a means of helping us get out of the recession.

Today, in contrast, our economy has passed the recovery point and is moving rapidly into the boom phase. Employment is high, incomes are rising and—up to the time of the steel strike—output was expanding in almost every sector of the economy. Under these circumstances there has been a heavy demand for credit and interest rates have moved up in response to this demand.

The question is simply this: Do we want the low interest rates which accompany a recessionary situation, or do we want a prosperous economy in which the higher level of interest rates reflects a strong demand for funds? As Secretary of the Treasury Anderson stated in his testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee on June 10, 1959: "Interest rates commonly decline during recessions, partly because of a slackening demand for funds on the part of individuals and businesses, partly because of a relative increase in availability of financial savings, and partly because of greater availability of bank credit in connection with a flexible shift of monetary policy toward credit ease."

No responsible government, the Secretary adds, would attempt to induce recession—with its accompanying loss of production and rise in unemployment—simply to produce lower rates of interest. "For a responsible government, the choice between high levels of business activity and employment as opposed to low interest rates is actually no choice at all. Stated differently, high interest rates are not an end in themselves; rather they are the usual accompaniment of the active credit demands that characterize expansion in production, employment, and income."

As was suggested in the debate in the Senate on September 2, there is one way of getting interest rates down in a boom period. This is to require the Federal Reserve to support Treasury bonds by standing ready to purchase any amount of them at a stated price—as was done during World War II and in the early part of the postwar period. The unfortunate experience with this technique up to 1951, when it was abandoned, should convince serious observers of the dangers involved.

During the period of market support, as a former Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System has remarked, the System was transformed into an "engine of inflation." It could not fulfill the central banking function of attempting to promote sustainable economic growth, since market operations of the System could take place in only one direction: The creation of bank reserves through purchases of securities in whatever amounts market holders should desire.

To sum up: Interest rates are higher now than they were in 1957–58 because our economy has changed from recession to a rate of activity close to boom proportions. We could probably bring interest rates down somewhat by returning to a policy of Federal Reserve support for Treasury bonds. But this would open the floodgates to an increase in the money supply which would be entirely beyond the power of the Federal Reserve System to control. The result would almost certainly be a disastrous inflation leading to later recession, with the loss and damage which that entails to the entire economy.

TRANSACTION OF ADDITIONAL ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following additional routine business was transacted:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. BIBLE, from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, with amendments:

S. 2033. A bill to amend the mining laws of the United States to provide for the inclusion of certain nonmineral lands in patents to placer claim (Rept. No. 904).

By Mr. CARROLL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments:

H.J. Res. 403. Joint resolution granting consent of Congress to a compact entered into between the State of New York and the State of New Jersey for the creation of the New York-New Jersey Transportation Agency (Rept. No. 907).

By Mr. PASTORE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, with amendments:

S. 1886. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934 with respect to community antenna television systems and certain rebroadcasting activities (Rept. No. 908).

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY ACTS OF 1956 AND 1958, RELATING TO CERTAIN ADJUSTMENTS IN HIGHWAY PROGRAM—REPORTS OF COMMITTEES—MINORITY AND INDIVIDUAL VIEWS

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Works, I report favorably, with amendments, the bill (H.R. 8678) to amend the Federal-Aid Highways Acts of 1956 and 1958 to make certain adjustments in the Federal-aid highway program, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 902) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 8678.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Subsequently, Mr. BYRD of Virginia, from the Committee on Finance, reported the bill (H.R. 8678) to amend the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1956 and 1958 to make certain adjustments in the Federal-aid highway program, and for other purposes, with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 903) thereon.

Mr. GORE subsequently said: Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCCARTHY], as members of the Committee on Finance, I submit minority views to the report on House bill 8678, the Federal Highway Act, together with the individual views of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. I ask unanimous consent that the minority and individual views be accepted and printed, as part of the report of the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NEUBERGER subsequently said: Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROUTY], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], as members of the Committee on Public Works, I submit minority views on House bill 8678, the Federal-aid highway bill, and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed with the majority report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL BILLS INTRODUCED

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1959

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Psalm 112: 7: He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord.

Eternal and ever-blessed God, inspire us now to receive and respond to all the experiences of this new day in ways that shall be acceptable unto Thee.

Grant that we may have a greater insight into Thy gracious and beneficent purposes and seek more eagerly to bring them to fulfillment.

We pray that Thou wilt lead us in these perilous times into those safety zones of peace and blessedness which Thou hast marked out for all who put their trust in Thee.

May none of the pressures of life deflect our minds and hearts from loyalty to those noble ideals and instincts which Thou hast implanted within our souls.

Help us to give ourselves as completely to the work of preserving our freedoms as our forefathers gave their lives to the task of establishing them.

Hear us in the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. McGown, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 53. An act to amend the acts approved April 16 and July 27, 1906 (34 Stat. 116 and 519), so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands on the Huntley reclamation project, Yellowstone County, Mont., to school district No. 24, Huntley project schools, Yellowstone County, Mont.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1555) entitled "An act to provide for the reporting and disclosure of certain financial transactions and administrative practices of labor organizations and employers, to prevent abuses in the administration of trusteeships by labor organizations, to provide standards with respect to the election of officers of labor organizations, and for other purposes."

The message also announced the appointment of the Senator from Colorado, Mr. CARROLL, to be a conferee on the bill (S. 607) entitled "An act for the relief of the estate of Sinclair G. Stanley," in place of the Senator from Wyoming, Mr. O'MAHONEY, excused.

The message also announced that the Vice President has appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. CARLSON members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the U.S. Government," for the disposition of executive papers referred to in the report of the Archivist of the United States No. 60–5.

PUBLIC WORKS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the public works appropriation bill.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this request have anything to do in any way with bringing up the bill tomorrow?

Mr. CANNON. It has nothing at all to do with bringing up the bill. It merely gives us until midnight to file a report to be brought up at any time the two distinguished gentlemen, the majority and the minority leaders, decide to bring it up.

Mr. McCORMACK. Just a moment. The gentleman from Missouri said at any time the majority and the minority leaders decide to bring it up. The Speaker has a voice, too, and every Member has a voice. It takes a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. HALLECK. Under the rules of the House, of course, the bill would have to lie over for 3 days unless unanimous consent is given for its consideration.

Mr. McCORMACK. Naturally.

Mr. HALLECK. And, of course, if there is objection to its being considered tomorrow, then it would have to lie over.

Mr. CANNON. All we ask is that we have until midnight tonight to file a report.

Mr. HALLECK. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION APPROPRIATION BILL, 1960

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 8575) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 1146)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8575) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 6, and 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, and 14, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$204,112,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$776,832,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$8,980,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendment numbered 2.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8575) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1960, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

ADVANCED RESEARCH PROJECTS AGENCY

Amendment No. 1—Advanced Research Projects Agency: Corrects appropriation title.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, ARMY

Amendment No. 2—Military Construction, Army: Reported in technical disagreement. The committee of conference has approved the program as proposed by the House with the deletions thereto proposed by the Senate and the following additional projects:

(Army)

White Sands Missile Range, New Mexico, commissary	$254,000
Fort Lee, Virginia:
Enlisted men's barracks	203,600
Bachelor officer quarters	289,000
Fort Huachuca, Arizona:
1 barracks	690,000
Heating plant	145,000
Bn. Adm. & Supply Bldg	267,000
Bn. Mess Bldg	365,000
Cold Regions Laboratory, New Hampshire	225,000
Fort Eustis, Virginia, hospital	3,500,000
Carlisle Barracks, Pennsylvania, infirmary	1,130,000
Fort Meade, Maryland	879,000
Fort Benning, Georgia, bachelor officer quarters	682,000
Fort McClellan, Alabama, hospital	2,625,000
Fort Sam Houston, Texas, aircraft facilities	510,000
Fort Sill, Oklahoma, missile training facilities	1,800,000
U.S. Military Academy, barracks	4,225,000
Helemano, Hawaii, land acquisition	90,000
Army Security Agency, location 12	1,700,000
Army Security Agency, location 23	1,025,000
Forward depots	1,000,000
Minor construction	275,000
Access roads	263,000

Hospitals: The conferees have approved the amounts shown above and in amendment Nos. 3 and 5 for hospital construction for the services. This is done with specific directions to the Secretary of Defense that the funds will be used to meet all hospital requirements, including fixed equipment, at each location, construction will be strictly on a utilitarian basis to meet essential needs and maximum utilization made of existing private and governmental medical facilities in the area. The Secretary of Defense is directed to certify to the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate prior to the obligation of construction funds for each facility that the service concerned is in compliance with these conditions. The committee of conference directs that available equipment be utilized to equip these hospitals prior to initiation of new procurement, including fixed equipment and other equipment not normally financed from construction funds.

Fort Huachuca, Arizona: The committee of conference has confirmed the House action in reducing funds for construction at Fort Huachuca, Arizona, due to high costs. Funds requested at this installation in the future should be based on costs similar to those experienced elsewhere within the continental United States.

Fort Knox, Kentucky: The committee of conference has deleted the $347,000 approved by the Senate for post office facilities at Fort Knox, Kentucky. The Defense Department is directed to thoroughly review existing facilities at this location to meet the need for this postal substation. The Post Office Department is expected to restudy the need for a substation of this size and scope at this location.

Fort Sam Houston, Texas: The conferees are in agreement that the funds mentioned above for Fort Sam Houston, Texas, have been provided with the specific understanding that this will be the only facility maintained in this general geographical area for the training of personnel in the proper utilization of helicopters in aero-medical evacuation services.

Fort Sill, Oklahoma: The conferees have approved $1,800,000 for certain missile training facilities requested for Fort Sill, Oklahoma, instead of $2,500,000 as proposed by the Senate. The Department of Defense is directed to restudy the requirements at this installation and at Fort Bliss, Texas, especially in view of the reduction in the air defense program, to insure the maximum utilization of facilities at these two installations and to use these funds only to meet essential requirements.

Location 12, Japan: The conferees have approved $1,700,000 for an Army Security Agency facility in Japan as proposed by the Senate. The conferees are in agreement that these funds are available only for the purchase of local currencies available through the United States Treasury and to be used only for the construction of facilities, other than housing and community facilities, at this location.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, NAVY

Amendment No. 3—Military Construction, Navy: Appropriates $204,112,400 instead of $180,048,000 as proposed by the House and $225,785,400 as proposed by the Senate. The committee of conference has approved the funding program as proposed by the House and the following additional projects:

Naval Submarine Base, New London, Connecticut:
Barracks	$2,225,000
Land acquisition	27,000
NAS, Meridian, Mississippi:
Crosswind runway	1,729,000
Outlying field	2,887,000
NAS, Lemoore, California, hospital	1,874,000
NAMC, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania	333,000
NNMC, Bethesda, Maryland	6,788,000
NRL, Washington, D.C	1,591,000
NSD, Guam, POL facilities	3,060,000
NTC, Great Lakes, Illinois	3,250,000
Minor construction	175,000
Access roads	125,000

Amendment No. 4—Military Construction, Navy: Deletes language proposed by the Senate.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, AIR FORCE

Amendment No. 5—Military Construction, Air Force: Appropriates $776,832,500 instead of $756,616,600 as proposed by the House and $803,495,600 as proposed by the Senate. The committee of conference has approved the funding program as proposed by the House and the following additional projects:

SAC dispersed maintenance shops	$2,650,000
Ground powered equipment shops	750,000
Shepherd AFB, hospital	5,547,200
L. G. Hanscom AFB:
Laboratory	1,286,000
Library	500,000
Amarillo AFB, training facility	1,040,000
Webb AFB, air defense facilities	1,679,600
Davis-Monthan AFB, air defense facilities	338,100
Lackland AFB, training facility	1,067,400
Clinton County AFB, hospital	1,200,000
Grand Forks AFB, hospital	1,232,200
George AFB, hospital	1,555,400
Main site, community support facilities	370,000
Minor construction	500,000
Access roads	250,000
Surplus commodity housing support	250,000

SAC Dispersed Maintenance Facilities: The committee of conference has approved $2,650,000 for shop facilities in support of the SAC dispersed maintenance program, instead of $5,329,800 as proposed by the Senate. The conferees are in agreement that these funds shall be allocated to specific locations upon a priority to be determined by the Department of Defense with the understanding that maximum utilization will be made of existing facilities and that funds will be allocated only for the construction of complete shops.

Ground-Powered Equipment Shops: The amount of $750,000 has been approved for ground-powered equipment shops instead of $2,232,900 as proposed by the Senate. The committee of conference is in agreement that these funds shall be allocated to specific locations upon a priority to be determined by the Department of Defense with the understanding that maximum utilization will be made of existing facilities and that funds will be allocated only for the construction of complete shops.

Lackland AFB, Texas: Funds in the amount of $1,067,400 have been approved for technical training facilities at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, as proposed by the Senate. The committee of conference is in agreement that prior to the obligation of these funds, a study should be made by the Secretary of Defense as to the feasibility of combining the various cryptographic training schools of the several services at a single location and the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate notified of the results of this study.

MACE Facilities: Since the Secretary of Defense has not yet made a determination as to the procurement and deployment of the MACE missile, no funds have been approved for the construction of facilities in support of this missile. Should a determination for such procurement and deployment be made, the Secretary of Defense is directed to use funds available and unobligated within this appropriation, including prior year funds, for the construction of necessary facilities after the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate have been notified of the type, location, and cost of these facilities and when 30 days have elapsed from the date of said notification.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, ARMY RESERVE

Amendment No. 6—Military Construction, Army Reserve: Appropriates $20,000,000 as proposed by the House instead of $20,160,000 as proposed by the Senate.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, NAVAL RESERVE

Amendment No. 7—Military Construction, Naval Reserve: Appropriates $8,980,000 instead of $8,589,000 as proposed by the House and $9,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, AIR FORCE RESERVE

Amendment No. 8—Military Construction, Air Force Reserve: Corrects appropriation title.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, ARMY NATIONAL GUARD

Amendment No. 9—Military Construction, Army National Guard: Appropriates $23,219,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $11,000,000 as proposed by the House.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, AIR NATIONAL GUARD

Amendment No. 10—Military Construction, Air National Guard: Appropriates $16,440,000 as proposed by the House instead of $17,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment Nos. 11, 12, 13, and 14: Add clarifying language as proposed by the Senate.

HARRY R. SHEPPARD,
JAMIE L. WHITTEN,
CLARENCE CANNON,
CHARLES R. JONAS,
JOHN TABER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, the total in the military construction bill as reached by the conference committee is $1.363 billion. This is approximately $200 million less than the budget estimates, $78.9 million above the House bill and $64.2 million less than the Senate bill. The increases agreed to by the conferees above the House bill are, generally speaking, for high priority projects where additional information was made available to the Senate which was not available at the time of the House hearings.

The two large increases are for construction of hospitals and Army National Guard armories. Largely as a result of the House action in deleting funds for hospital construction and language in the House report the Senate was able to make substantial reductions in hospital costs, including changes recommended by the House as to design and scope. Accordingly the conferees accepted the Senate action in this area which, although an increase of $26 million in the House bill, is a reduction of over 20 percent in the budget estimates for hospital construction.

Your conferees accepted the Senate increase of $12.2 million for Army National Guard armories. We felt that these additional funds are needed to provide long overdue training facilities for the guard units. This is in keeping with the action of the Congress on the recent Defense Department appropriation bill which increased the strength of the guard to 400,000 men. The specific projects are listed in the Senate committee report and represent only those projects for which the local governments have provided their portion of the funds required for the armory construction.

The managers on the part of the House are in complete agreement on this conference report and on the amendment to be offered. I urge its adoption without change.

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE

Mr. Speaker, $2,650,000 is included in the appropriation for aircraft and engine maintenance shops at locations to be selected on a priority basis; $750,000 is included for ground equipment shops at locations to be selected on a priority basis:

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSS. By how much, if any, did the other body up this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. One hundred and forty-three million dollars.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman; and on the basis of the increase in conference, I wish to record my opposition to adoption of the report.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, this conference report is not an agreement based upon an arbitrary division of the dollar differences in the House and Senate bills. It is a carefully reached agreement based upon all available facts and reflects the collective judgment of the House and Senate conferees. It was arrived at after long and arduous hours of discussion extending over a period of 4 full days.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize the points made by the chairman of the House conferees, the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD], with respect to hospitals and National Guard armories. To my mind, the action taken with respect to hospitals is one of the most forward steps taken in this field in recent years. It directs the Secretary of Defense to see to it that the funds provided for hospital construction shall be expended on a strictly utilitarian basis to meet essential needs and requires the maximum utilization of existing private and governmental medical facilities.

Funds are provided in the bill agreed upon in conference to build the armories for which local and State contributions are already in hand. These new armories will provide adequate housing for one National Guard and take care of a long standing need.

The budget estimate for military construction was $1,563,200,000. The House reduced this sum by $278,197,300 and passed a bill which contained $1,285,002,700. The other body added $143,176,000 to the House bill and the Senate bill as it passed that body contained $1,428,178,700. In conference the House bill was increased by $78,958,500 and the Senate bill was reduced by $64,217,500, so we wind up with a bill containing $1,363,961,200 which is $199,238,800 below the budget.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a good conference report. It was agreed to unanimously by the managers on the part of the House and I urge its adoption.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 2: Page 2, line 20, strike out "$241,564,100" and insert "$278,773,700."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHEPPARD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "$263,632,300, including $1,700,000 to be used only for the purchase of foreign currencies to construct military facilities (except housing and community facilities) for the Army Security Agency, location 12."

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which action was taken on the motion was laid on the table.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE ACT OF 1959

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 1555) to provide for the reporting and disclosure of certain financial transactions and administrative practices of labor organizations and employers, to prevent abuses in the administration of trusteeships by labor organizations, to provide standards with respect to the election of officers of labor organizations, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 1147)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1555) to provide for the reporting and disclosure of certain financial transactions and administrative practices of labor organizations and employers, to prevent abuses in the administration of trusteeships by labor organizations, to provide standards with respect to the election of officers of labor organizations, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"SHORT TITLE

"SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the 'Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959'.

"DECLARATION OF FINDINGS, PURPOSES, AND POLICY

"SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that, in the public interest, it continues to be the responsibility of the Federal Government to protect employees' rights to organize, choose their own representatives, bargain collectively, and otherwise engage in concerted activities for their mutual aid or protection; that the relations between employers and labor organizations and the millions of workers they represent have a substantial impact on the commerce of the Nation; and that in order to accomplish the objective of a free flow of commerce it is essential that labor organizations, employers, and their officials adhere to the highest standards of responsibility and ethical conduct in administering the affairs of their organizations, particularly as they affect labor-management relations.

"(b) The Congress further finds, from recent investigations in the labor and management fields, that there have been a number of instances of breach of trust, corruption, disregard of the rights of individual employees, and other failures to observe high standards of responsibility and ethical conduct which require further and supplementary legislation that will afford necessary protection of the rights and interests of employees and the public generally as they relate to the activities of labor organizations, employers, labor relations consultants, and their officers and representatives.

"(c) The Congress, therefore, further finds and declares that the enactment of this Act is necessary to eliminate or prevent improper practices on the part of labor organizations, employers, labor relations consultants, and their officers and representatives which distort and defeat the policies of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, as amended, and the Railway Labor Act, as amended, and have the tendency or necessary effect of burdening or obstructing commerce by (1) impairing the efficiency, safety, or operation of the instrumentalities of commerce; (2) occurring in the current of commerce; (3) materially affecting, restraining, or controlling the flow of raw materials or manufactured or processed goods into or from the channels of commerce, or the prices of such materials or goods in commerce; or (4) causing diminution of employment and wages in such volume as substantially to impair or disrupt the market for goods flowing into or from the channels of commerce.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 3. For the purposes of titles I, II, III, IV, V (except section 505), and VI of this Act—

"(a) 'Commerce' means trade, traffic, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among the several States or between any State and any place outside thereof.

"(b) 'State' includes any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, Wake Island, the Canal Zone, and Outer Continental Shelf lands defined in the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331–1343).

"(c) 'Industry affecting commerce' means any activity, business, or industry in commerce or in which a labor dispute would hinder or obstruct commerce or the free flow of commerce and includes any activity or industry 'affecting commerce' within the meaning of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, as amended, or the Railway Labor Act, as amended.

"(d) 'Person' includes one or more individuals, labor organizations, partnerships, associations, corporations, legal representatives, mutual companies, joint-stock companies, trusts, unincorporated organizations, trustees, trustees in bankruptcy, or receivers.

"(e) 'Employer' means any employer or any group or association of employers engaged in an industry affecting commerce (1) which is, with respect to employees engaged in an industry affecting commerce, an employer within the meaning of any law of the United States relating to the employment of any employees or (2) which may deal with any labor organization concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work, and includes any person acting directly or indirectly as an employer or as an agent of an employer in relation to an employee but does not include the United States or any corporation wholly owned by the Government of the United States or any State or political subdivision thereof.

"(f) 'Employee' means any individual employed by an employer, and includes any individual whose work has ceased as a consequence of, or in connection with, any current labor dispute or because of any unfair labor practice or because of exclusion or expulsion from a labor organization in any manner or for any reason inconsistent with the requirements of this Act.

"(g) 'Labor dispute' includes any controversy concerning terms, tenure, or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, regardless of whether the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee.

"(h) 'Trusteeship' means any receivership, trusteeship, or other method of supervision or control whereby a labor organization suspends the autonomy otherwise available to a subordinate body under its constitution or bylaws.

"(i) 'Labor organization' means a labor organization engaged in an industry affecting commerce and includes any organization of any kind, any agency, or employee representation committee, group, association, or plan so engaged in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours, or other terms or conditions of employment, and any conference, general committee, joint or system board, or joint council so engaged which is subordinate to a national or international labor organization, other than a State or local central body.

"(j) A labor organization shall be deemed to be engaged in an industry affecting commerce if it—

"(1) is the certified representative of employees under the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, or the Railway Labor Act, as amended; or

"(2) although not certified, is a national or international labor organization or a local labor organization recognized or acting as the representative of employees of an employer or employers engaged in an industry affecting commerce; or

"(3) has chartered a local labor organization or subsidiary body which is representing or actively seeking to represent employees of employers within the meaning of paragraph (1) or (2); or

"(4) has been chartered by a labor organization representing or actively seeking to represent employees within the meaning of paragraph (1) or (2) as the local or subordinate body through which such employees may enjoy membership or become affiliated with such labor organization; or

"(5) is a conference, general committee, joint or system board, or joint council, subordinate to a national or international labor organization, which includes a labor organization engaged in an industry affecting commerce within the meaning of any of the preceding paragraphs of this subsection other than a State or local central body.

"(k) 'Secret ballot' means the expression by ballot, voting machine, or otherwise, but in no event by proxy, of a choice with respect to any election or vote taken upon any matter, which is cast in such a manner that the person expressing such choice cannot be identified with the choice expressed.

"(l) 'Trust in which a labor organization is interested' means a trust or other fund or organization (1) which was created or established by a labor organization, or one or more of the trustees or one or more members of the governing body of which is selected or appointed by a labor organization, and (2) a primary purpose of which is to provide benefits for the members of such labor organization or their beneficiaries.

"(m) 'Labor relations consultant' means any person who, for compensation, advises or represents an employer, employer organization, or labor organization concerning employee organizing, concerted activities, or collective bargaining activities.

"(n) 'Officer' means any constitutional officer, any person authorized to perform the functions of president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, or other executive functions of a labor organization, and any member of its executive board or similar governing body.

"(o) 'Member' or 'member in good standing', when used in reference to a labor organization, includes any person who has fulfilled the requirements for membership in such organization, and who neither has voluntarily withdrawn from membership nor has been expelled or suspended from membership after appropriate proceedings consistent with lawful provisions of the constitution and bylaws of such organization.

"(p) 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Labor.

"(q) 'Officer, agent, shop steward, or other representative', when used with respect to a labor organization, includes elected officials and key administrative personnel, whether elected or appointed (such as business agents, heads of departments or major units, and organizers who exercise substantial independent authority), but does not include salaried nonsupervisory professional staff, stenographic, and service personnel.

"(r) 'District court of the United States' means a United States district court and a United States court of any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

"TITLE I—BILL OF RIGHTS OF MEMBERS OF LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"Bill of rights

"SEC. 101. (a)(1) EQUAL RIGHTS.—Every member of a labor organization shall have equal rights and privileges within such organization to nominate candidates, to vote in elections or referendums of the labor organization, to attend membership meetings, and to participate in the deliberations and voting upon the business of such meetings, subject to reasonable rules and regulations in such organization's constitution and bylaws.

"(2) FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND ASSEMBLY.—Every member of any labor organization shall have the right to meet and assemble freely with other members; and to express any views, arguments, or opinions; and to express at meetings of the labor organization his views, upon candidates in an election of the labor organization or upon any business properly before the meeting, subject to the organization's established and reasonable rules pertaining to the conduct of meetings: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to impair the right of a labor organization to adopt and enforce reasonable rules as to the responsibility of every member toward the organization as an institution and to his refraining from conduct that would interfere with its performance of its legal or contractual obligations.

"(3) DUES, INITIATION FEES, AND ASSESSMENTS.—Except in the case of a federation of national or international labor organizations, the rates of dues and initiation fees payable by members of any labor organization in effect on the date of enactment of this Act shall not be increased, and no general or special assessment shall be levied upon such members, except—

"(A) in the case of a local labor organization, (i) by majority vote by secret ballot of the members in good standing voting at a general or special membership meeting, after reasonable notice of the intention to vote upon such question, or (ii) by majority vote of the members in good standing voting in a membership referendum conducted by secret ballot; or

"(B) in the case of a labor organization, other than a local labor organization or a federation of national or international labor organizations, (i) by majority vote of the delegates voting at a regular convention, or at a special convention of such labor organization held upon not less than thirty days' written notice to the principal office of each local or constituent labor organization entitled to such notice, or (ii) by majority vote of the members in good standing of such labor organization voting in a membership referendum conducted by secret ballot, or (iii) by majority vote of the members of the executive board or similar governing body of such labor organization, pursuant to express authority contained in the constitution and bylaws of such labor organization: Provided, That such action on the part of the executive board or similar governing body shall be effective only until the next regular convention of such labor organization.

"(4) PROTECTION OF THE RIGHT TO SUE.—No labor organization shall limit the right of any member thereof to institute an action in any court, or in a proceeding before any administrative agency, irrespective of whether or not the labor organization or its officers are named as defendants or respondents in such action or proceeding, or the right of any member of a labor organization to appear as a witness in any judicial, administrative, or legislative proceeding, or to petition any legislature or to communicate with any legislator: Provided, That any such member may be required to exhaust reasonable hearing procedures (but not to exceed a four-month lapse of time) within such organization, before instituting legal or administrative proceedings against such organizations or any officer thereof: And provided further, That no interested employer or employer association shall directly or indirectly finance, encourage, or participate in, except as a party, any such action, proceeding, appearance, or petition.

"(5) SAFEGUARDS AGAINST IMPROPER DISCIPLINARY ACTION.—No member of any labor organization may be fined, suspended, expelled, or otherwise disciplined except for nonpayment of dues by such organization or by any officer thereof unless such member has been (A) served with written specific charges; (B) given a reasonable time to prepare his defense; (C) afforded a full and fair hearing.

"(b) Any provision of the constitution and bylaws of any labor organization which is inconsistent with the provisions of this section shall be of no force or effect.

"Civil enforcement

"SEC. 102. Any person whose rights secured by the provisions of this title have been infringed by any violation of this title may bring a civil action in a district court of the United States for such relief (including injunctions) as may be appropriate. Any such action against a labor organization shall be brought in the district court of the United States for the district where the alleged violation occurred, or where the principal office of such labor organization is located.

"Retention of existing rights

"SEC. 103. Nothing contained in this title shall limit the rights and remedies of any member of a labor organization under any State or Federal law or before any court or other tribunal, or under the constitution and bylaws of any labor organization.

"Right to copies of collective bargaining agreements

"SEC. 104. It shall be the duty of the secretary or corresponding principal officer of each labor organization, in the case of a local labor organization, to forward a copy of each collective bargaining agreement made by such labor organization with any employer to any employee who requests such a copy and whose rights as such employee are directly affected by such agreement, and in the case of a labor organization other than a local labor organization, to forward a copy of any such agreement to each constituent unit which has members directly affected by such agreement; and such officer shall maintain at the principal office of the labor organization of which he is an officer copies of any such agreement made or received by such labor organization, which copies shall be available for inspection by any member or by any employee whose rights are affected by such agreement. The provisions of section 210 shall be applicable in the enforcement of this section.

"Information as to act

"SEC. 105. Every labor organization shall inform its members concerning the provisions of this Act.

"TITLE II—REPORTING BY LABOR ORGANIZATIONS, OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF LABOR ORGANIZATIONS, AND EMPLOYERS

"Report of labor organizations

"SEC. 201. (a) Every labor organization shall adopt a constitution and bylaws and shall file a copy thereof with the Secretary, together with a report, signed by its president and secretary or corresponding principal officers, containing the following information—

"(1) the name of the labor organization, its mailing address, and any other address at which it maintains its principal office or at which it keeps the records referred to in this title;

"(2) the name and title of each of its officers;

"(3) the initiation fee or fees required from a new or transferred member and fees for work permits required by the reporting labor organization;

"(4) the regular dues or fees or other periodic payments required to remain a member of the reporting labor organization; and

"(5) detailed statements, or references to specific provisions of documents filed under this subsection which contain such statements, showing the provision made and procedures followed with respect to each of the following: (A) qualifications for or restrictions on membership, (B) levying of assessments, (C) participation in insurance or other benefit plans, (D) authorization for disbursement of funds of the labor organization, (E) audit of financial transactions of the labor organization, (F) the calling of regular and special meetings, (G) the selection of officers and stewards and of any representatives to other bodies composed of labor organizations' representatives, with a specific statement of the manner in which each officer was elected, appointed, or otherwise selected, (H) discipline or removal of officers or agents for breaches of their trust, (I) imposition of fines, suspensions, and expulsions of members, including the grounds for such action and any provision made for notice, hearing, judgment on the evidence, and appeal procedures, (J) authorization for bargaining demands, (K) ratification of contract terms, (L) authorization for strikes, and (M) issuance of work permits. Any change in the information required by this subsection shall be reported to the Secretary at the time the reporting labor organization files with the Secretary the annual financial report required by subsection (b).

"(b) Every labor organization shall file annually with the Secretary a financial report signed by its president and treasurer or corresponding principal officers containing the following information in such detail as may be necessary accurately to disclose its financial condition and operations for its preceding fiscal year—

"(1) assets and liabilities at the beginning and end of the fiscal year;

"(2) receipts of any kind and the sources thereof;

"(3) salary, allowances, and other direct or indirect disbursements (including reimbursed expenses) to each officer and also to each employee who, during such fiscal year, received more than $10,000 in the aggregate from such labor organization and any other labor organization affiliated with it or with which it is affiliated, or which is affiliated with the same national or international labor organization;

"(4) direct and indirect loans made to any officer, employee, or member, which aggregated more than $250 during the fiscal year, together with a statement of the purpose, security, if any, and arrangements for repayment;

"(5) direct and indirect loans to any business enterprise, together with a statement of the purpose, security, if any, and arrangements for repayment; and

"(6) other disbursements made by it including the purposes thereof; all in such categories as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(c) Every labor organization required to submit a report under this title shall make available the information required to be contained in such report to all of its members, and every such labor organization and its officers shall be under a duty enforceable at the suit of any member of such organization in any State court of competent jurisdiction or in the district court of the United States for the district in which such labor organization maintains its principal office, to permit such member for just cause to examine any books, records, and accounts necessary to verify such report. The court in such action may, in its discretion, in addition to any judgment awarded to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, allow a reasonable attorney's fee to be paid by the defendant, and costs of the action.

"(d) Subsections (f), (g), and (h) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, are hereby repealed.

"(e) Clause (i) of section 8(a)(3) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the following: 'and has at the time the agreement was made or within the preceding twelve months received from the Board a notice of compliance with sections 9 (f), (g), (h)'.

"Report of officers and employees of labor organizations

"SEC. 202. (a) Every officer of a labor organization and every employee of a labor organization (other than an employee performing exclusively clerical or custodial services) shall file with the Secretary a signed report listing and describing for his preceding fiscal year—

"(1) any stock, bond, security, or other interest, legal or equitable, which he or his spouse or minor child directly or indirectly held in, and any income or any other benefit with monetary value (including reimbursed expenses) which he or his spouse or minor child derived directly or indirectly from, an employer whose employees such labor organization represents or is actively seeking to represent, except payments and other benefits received as a bona fide employee of such employer;

"(2) any transaction in which he or his spouse or minor child engaged, directly or indirectly, involving any stock, bond, security, or loan to or from, or other legal or equitable interest in the business of an employer whose employees such labor organization represents or is actively seeking to represent;

"(3) any stock, bond, security, or other interest, legal or equitable, which he or his spouse or minor child directly or indirectly held in, and any income or any other benefit with monetary value (including reimbursed expenses) which he or his spouse or minor child directly or indirectly derived from, any business a substantial part of which consists of buying from, selling or leasing to, or otherwise dealing with, the business of an employer whose employees such labor organization represents or is actively seeking to represent;

"(4) any stock, bond, security, or other interest, legal or equitable which he or his spouse or minor child directly or indirectly held in, and any income or any other benefit with monetary value (including reimbursed expenses) which he or his spouse or minor child directly or indirectly derived from, a business any part of which consists of buying from, or selling or leasing directly or indirectly to, or otherwise dealing with such labor organization;

"(5) any direct or indirect business transaction or arrangement between him or his spouse or minor child and any employer whose employees his organization represents or is actively seeking to represent, except work performed and payments and benefits received as a bona fide employee of such employer and except purchases and sales of goods or services in the regular course of business at prices generally available to any employee of such employer; and

"(6) any payment of money or other thing of value (including reimbursed expenses) which he or his spouse or minor child received directly or indirectly from any employer or any person who acts as a labor relations consultant to an employer, except payments of the kinds referred to in section 302(c) of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, as amended.

"(b) The provisions of paragraphs (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (a) shall not be construed to require any such officer or employee to report his bona fide investments in securities traded, on a securities exchange registered as a national securities exchange under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, in shares in an investment company registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940, or in securities of a public utility holding company registered under the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, or to report any income derived therefrom.

"(c) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to require any officer or employee of a labor organization to file a report under subsection (a) unless he or his spouse or minor child holds or has held an interest, has received income or any other benefit with monetary value or a loan, or has engaged in a transaction described therein.

"Report of employers

"SEC. 203. (a) Every employer who in any fiscal year made—

"(1) any payment or loan, direct or indirect, of money or other thing of value (including reimbursed expenses), or any promise or agreement therefor, to any labor organization or officer, agent, shop steward, or other representative of a labor organization, or employee of any labor organization, except (A) payments or loans made by any national or State bank, credit union, insurance company, savings and loan association or other credit institution and (B) payments of the kind referred to in section 302(c) of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, as amended;

"(2) any payment (including reimbursed expenses) to any of his employees, or any group or committee of such employees, for the purpose of causing such employee or group or committee of employees to persuade other employees to exercise or not to exercise, or as the manner of exercising, the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing unless such payments were contemporaneously or previously disclosed to such other employees;

"(3) any expenditure, during the fiscal year, where an object thereof, directly or indirectly, is to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, or is to obtain information concerning the activities of employees or a labor organization in connection with a labor dispute involving such employer, except for use solely in conjunction with an administrative or arbitral proceeding or a criminal or civil judicial proceeding;

"(4) any agreement or arrangement with a labor relations consultant or other independent contractor or organization pursuant to which such person undertakes activities where an object thereof, directly or indirectly, is to persuade employees to exercise or not to exercise, or persuade employees as to the manner of exercising, the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, or undertakes to supply such employer with information concerning the activities of employees or a labor organization in connection with a labor dispute involving such employer, except information for use solely in conjunction with an administrative or arbitral proceeding or a criminal or civil judicial proceeding; or

"(5) any payment (including reimbursed expenses) pursuant to an agreement or arrangement described in subdivision (4); shall file with the Secretary a report, in a form prescribed by him, signed by its president and treasurer or corresponding principal officers showing in detail the date and amount of each such payment, loan, promise, agreement, or arrangement and the name, address, and position, if any, in any firm or labor organization of the person to whom it was made and a full explanation of the circumstances of all such payments, including the terms of any agreement or understanding pursuant to which they were made.

"(b) Every person who pursuant to any agreement or arrangement with an employer undertakes activities where an object thereof is, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to persuade employees to exercise or not to exercise, or persuade employees as to the manner of exercising, the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing; or

"(2) to supply an employer with information concerning the activities of employees or a labor organization in connection with a labor dispute involving such employer, except information for use solely in conjunction with an administrative or arbitral proceeding or a criminal or civil judicial proceeding; shall file within 30 days after entering into such agreement or arrangement a report with the Secretary, signed by its president and treasurer or corresponding principal officers, containing the name under which such person is engaged in doing business and the address of its principal office, and a detailed statement of the terms and conditions of such agreement or arrangement. Every such person shall file annually, with respect to each fiscal year during which payments were made as a result of such an agreement or arrangement, a report with the Secretary, signed by its president and treasurer or corresponding principal officers, containing a statement (A) of its receipts of any kind from employers on account of labor relations advice or services, designating the sources thereof, and (B) of its disbursements of any kind, in connection with such services and the purposes thereof. In each such case such information shall be set forth in such categories as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(c) Nothing in this section shall be construed to require any employer or other person to file a report covering the services of such person by reason of his giving or agreeing to give advice to such employer or representing or agreeing to represent such employer before any court, administrative agency, or tribunal of arbitration or engaging or agreeing to engage in collective bargaining on behalf of such employer with respect to wages, hours, or other terms or conditions of employment or the negotiation of an agreement or any question arising thereunder.

"(d) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to require an employer to file a report under subsection (a) unless he has made an expenditure, payment, loan, agreement, or arrangement of the kind described therein. Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to require any other person to file a report under subsection (b) unless he was a party to an agreement or arrangement of the kind described therein.

"(e) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to require any regular officer, supervisor, or employee of an employer to file a report in connection with services rendered to such employer nor shall any employer be required to file a report covering expenditures made to any regular officer, superviser, or employee of an employer as compensation for service as a regular officer, supervisor, or employee of such employer.

"(f) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed as an amendment to, or modification of the rights protected by, section 8(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

"(g) The term "interfere with, restrain, or coerce" as used in this section means interference, restraint, and coercion which, if done with respect to the exercise of rights guaranteed in section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, would, under section 8(a) of such Act, constitute an unfair labor practice.

"Attorney-client communications exempted

"SEC. 204. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to require an attorney who is a member in good standing of the bar of any State, to include in any report required to be filed pursuant to the provisions of this Act any information which was lawfully communicated to such attorney by any of his clients in the course of a legitimate attorney-client relationship.

"Reports made public information

"SEC. 205. (a) The contents of the reports and documents filed with the Secretary pursuant to sections 201, 202, and 203 shall be public information, and the Secretary may publish any information and data which he obtains pursuant to the provisions of this title. The Secretary may use the information and data for statistical and research purposes, and compile and publish such studies, analyses, reports, and surveys based thereon as he may deem appropriate.

"(b) The Secretary shall by regulation make reasonable provision for the inspection and examination, on the request of any person, of the information and data contained in any report or other document filed with him pursuant to section 201, 202, or 203.

"(c) The Secretary shall by regulation provide for the furnishing by the Department of Labor of copies of reports or other documents filed with the Secretary pursuant to this title, upon payment of a charge based upon the cost of the service. The Secretary shall make available without payment of a charge, or require any person to furnish, to such State agency as is designated by law or by the Governor of the State in which such person has his principal place of business or headquarters, upon request of the Governor of such State, copies of any reports and documents filed by such person with the Secretary pursuant to section 201, 202, or 203, or of information and data contained therein. No person shall be required by reason of any law of any State to furnish to any officer or agency of such State any information included in a report filed by such person with the Secretary pursuant to the provisions of this title, if a copy of such report, or of the portion thereof containing such information, is furnished to such officer or agency. All moneys received in payment of such charges fixed by the Secretary pursuant to this subsection shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury.

"Retention of records

"SEC. 206. Every person required to file any report under this title shall maintain records on the matters required to be reported which will provide in sufficient detail the necessary basic information and data from which the documents filed with the Secretary may be verified, explained or clarified, and checked for accuracy and completeness, and shall include vouchers, worksheets, receipts, and applicable resolutions, and shall keep such records available for examination for a period of not less than five years after the filing of the documents based on the information which they contain.

"Effective date

"SEC. 207. (a) Each labor organization shall file the initial report required under section 201(a) within ninety days after the date on which it first becomes subject to this Act.

"(b) Each person required to file a report under section 201(b), 202, 203(a), or the second sentence of 203(b) shall file such report within ninety days after the end of each of its fiscal years; except that where such person is subject to section 201(b), 202, 203(a), or the second sentence of 203(b), as the case may be, for only a portion of such a fiscal year (because the date of enactment of this Act occurs during such person's fiscal year or such person becomes subject to this Act during its fiscal year) such person may consider that portion as the entire fiscal year in making such report.

"Rules and regulations

"SEC. 208. The Secretary shall have authority to issue, amend, and rescind rules and regulations prescribing the form and publication of reports required to be filed under this title and such other reasonable rules and regulations (including rules prescribing reports concerning trusts in which a labor organization is interested) as he may find necessary to prevent the circumvention or evasion of such reporting requirements. In exercising his power under this section the Secretary shall prescribe by general rule simplified reports for labor organizations or employers for whom he finds that by virtue of their size a detailed report would be unduly burdensome, but the Secretary may revoke such provision for simplified forms of any labor organization or employer if he determines, after such investigation as he deems proper and due notice and opportunity for a hearing, that the purposes of this section would be served thereby.

"Criminal provisions

"SEC. 209. (a) Any person who willfully violates this title shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"(b) Any person who makes a false statement or representation of a material fact, knowing it to be false, or who knowingly fails to disclose a material fact, in any document, report, or other information required under the provisions of this title shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"(c) Any person who willfully makes a false entry in or willfully conceals, withholds, or destroys any books, records, reports, or statements required to be kept by any provision of this title shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"(d) Each individual required to sign reports under sections 201 and 203 shall be personally responsible for the filing of such reports and for any statement contained therein which he knows to be false.

"Civil enforcement

"SEC. 210. Whenever it shall appear that any person has violated or is about to violate any of the provisions of this title, the Secretary may bring a civil action for such relief (including injunctions) as may be appropriate. Any such action may be brought in the district court of the United States where the violation occurred or, at the option of the parties, in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"TITLE III—TRUSTEESHIPS

"Reports

"SEC. 301. (a) Every labor organization which has or assumes trusteeship over any subordinate labor organization shall file with the Secretary within thirty days after the date of the enactment of this Act or the imposition of any such trusteeship, and semiannually thereafter, a report, signed by its president and treasurer or corresponding principal officers, as well as by the trustees of such subordinate labor organization, containing the following information: (1) the name and address of the subordinate organization; (2) the date of establishing the trusteeship; (3) a detailed statement of the reason or reasons for establishing or continuing the trusteeship; and (4) the nature and extent of participation by the membership of the subordinate organization in the selection of delegates to represent such organization in regular or special conventions or other policy-determining bodies and in the election of officers of the labor organization which has assumed trusteeship over such subordinate organization. The initial report shall also include a full and complete account of the financial condition of such subordinate organization as to the time trusteeship was assumed over it. During the continuance of a trusteeship the labor organization which has assumed trusteeship over a subordinate labor organization shall file on behalf of the subordinate labor organization, the annual financial report required by section 201(b) signed by the president and treasurer or corresponding principal officers of the labor organization which has assumed such trusteeship and the trustees of the subordinate labor organization.

"(b) The provisions of section 201(c), 205, 206, 208, and 210 shall be applicable to reports filed under this title.

"(c) Any person who willfully violates this section shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"(d) Any person who makes a false statement or representation of a material fact, knowing it to be false, or who knowingly fails to disclose a material fact, in any report required under the provisions of this section or willfully makes any false entry in or willfully withholds, conceals, or destroys any documents, books, records, reports, or statements upon which such report is based, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year or both.

"(e) Each individual required to sign a report under this section shall be personally responsible for the filing of such report and for any statement contained therein which he knows to be false.

"Purposes for which a trusteeship may be established

"SEC. 302. Trusteeships shall be established and administered by a labor organization over a subordinate body only in accordance with the constitution and bylaws of the organization which has assumed trusteeship over the subordinate body and for the purpose of correcting corruption or financial malpractice, assuring the performance of collective bargaining agreements or other duties of a bargaining representative, restoring democratic procedures, or otherwise carrying out the legitimate objects of such labor organization.

"Unlawful acts relating to labor organization under trusteeship

"SEC. 303. (a) During any period when a subordinate body of a labor organization is in trusteeship, it shall be unlawful (1) to count the vote of delegates from such body in any convention or election of officers of the labor organization unless the delegates have been chosen by secret ballot in an election in which all the members in good standing of such subordinate body were eligible to participate, or (2) to transfer to such organization any current receipts or other funds of the subordinate body except the normal per capita tax and assessments payable by subordinate bodies not in trusteeship: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the distribution of the assets of a labor organization in accordance with its constitution and bylaws upon the bona fide dissolution thereof.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates this section shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"Enforcement

"SEC. 304. (a) Upon the written complaint of any member or subordinate body of a labor organization alleging that such organization has violated the provisions of this title (except section 301) the Secretary shall investigate the complaint and if the Secretary finds probable cause to believe that such violation has occurred and has not been remedied he shall, without disclosing the identity of the complainant, bring a civil action in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the labor organization for such relief (including injunctions) as may be appropriate. Any member or subordinate body of a labor organization affected by any violation of this title (except section 301) may bring a civil action in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the labor organization for such relief (including injunctions) as may be appropriate.

"(b) For the purpose of actions under this section, district courts of the United States shall be deemed to have jurisdiction of a labor organization (1) in the district in which the principal office of such labor organization is located, or (2) in any district in which its duly authorized officers or agents are engaged in conducting the affairs of the trusteeship.

"(c) In any proceeding pursuant to this section a trusteeship established by a labor organization in conformity with the procedural requirements of its constitution and bylaws and authorized or ratified after a fair hearing either before the executive board or before such other body as may be provided in accordance with its constitution or bylaws shall be presumed valid for a period of eighteen months from the date of its establishment and shall not be subject to attack during such period except upon clear and convincing proof that the trusteeship was not established or maintained in good faith for a purpose allowable under section 302. After the expiration of eighteen months the trusteeship shall be presumed invalid in any such proceeding and its discontinuance shall be decreed unless the labor organization shall show by clear and convincing proof that the continuation of the trusteeship is necessary for a purpose allowable under section 302. In the latter event the court may dismiss the complaint or retain jurisdiction of the cause on such conditions and for such period as it deems appropriate.

"Report to Congress

"SEC. 305. The Secretary shall submit to the Congress at the expiration of three years from the date of enactment of this Act a report upon the operation of this title.

"Complaint by Secretary

"SEC. 306. The rights and remedies provided by this title shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies at law or in equity: Provided, That upon the filing of a complaint by the Secretary the jurisdiction of the district court over such trusteeship shall be exclusive and the final judgment shall be res judicata.

"TITLE IV—ELECTIONS

"Terms of office; election procedures

"SEC. 401. (a) Every national or international labor organization, except a federation of national or international labor organizations, shall elect its officers not less often than once ever five years either by secret ballot among the members in good standing or at a convention of delegates chosen by secret ballot.

"(b) Every local labor organization shall elect its officers not less often than once every three years by secret ballot among the members in good standing.

"(c) Every national or international labor organization, except a federation of national or international labor organizations, and every local labor organization, and its officers, shall be under a duty, enforceable at the suit of any bona fide candidate for office in such labor organization in the district court of the United States in which such labor organization maintains its principal office, to comply with all reasonable requests of any candidate to distribute by mail or otherwise at the candidate's expense campaign literature in aid of such person's candidacy to all members in good standing of such labor organization and to refrain from discrimination in favor of or against any candidate with respect to the use of lists of members, and whenever such labor organizations or its officers authorize the distribution by mail or otherwise to members of campaign literature on behalf of any candidate or of the labor organization itself with reference to such election, similar distribution at the request of any other bona fide candidate shall be made by such labor organization and its officers, with equal treatment as to the expense of such distribution. Every bona fide candidate shall have the right, once within 30 days prior to an election of a labor organization in which he is a candidate, to inspect a list containing the names and last known addresses of all members of the labor organization who are subject to a collective bargaining agreement requiring membership therein as a condition of employment, which list shall be maintained and kept at the principal office of such labor organization by a designated official thereof. Adequate safeguards to insure a fair election shall be provided, including the right of any candidate to have an observer at the polls and at the counting of the ballots.

"(d) Officers of intermediate bodies, such as general committees, system boards, joint boards, or joint councils, shall be elected not less often than once every four years by secret ballot among the members in good standing or by labor organization officers representatives of such members who have been elected by secret ballot.

"(e) In any election required by this section which is to be held by secret ballot a reasonable opportunity shall be given for the nomination of candidates and every member in good standing shall be eligible to be a candidate and to hold office (subject to section 504 and to reasonable qualifications uniformly imposed) and shall have the right to vote for or otherwise support the candidate or candidates of his choice, without being subject to penalty, discipline, or improper interference or reprisal of any kind by such organization or any member thereof. Not less than fifteen days prior to the election notice thereof shall be mailed to each member at his last known home address. Each member in good standing shall be entitled to one vote. No member whose dues have been withheld by his employer for payment to such organization pursuant to his voluntary authorization provided for in a collective bargaining agreement shall be declared ineligible to vote or be a candidate for office in such organization by reason of alleged delay or default in the payment of dues. The votes cast by members of each local labor organization shall be counted, and the results published, separately. The election officials designated in the constitution and bylaws or the secretary, if no other official is designated, shall preserve for one year the ballots and all other records pertaining to the election. The election shall be conducted in accordance with the constitution and bylaws of such organization insofar as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title.

"(f) When officers are chosen by a convention of delegates elected by secret ballot, the convention shall be conducted in accordance with the constitution and bylaws of the labor organization insofar as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The officials designated in the constitution and bylaws or the secretary, if no other is designated, shall preserve for one year the credentials of the delegates and all minutes and other records of the convention pertaining to the election of officers.

"(g) No moneys received by any labor organization by way of dues, assessment, or similar levy, and no moneys of an employer shall be contributed or applied to promote the candidacy of any person in an election subject to the provisions of this title. Such moneys of a labor organization may be utilized for notices, factual statements of issues not involving candidates, and other expenses necessary for the holding of an election.

"(h) If the Secretary, upon application of any member of a local labor organization, finds after hearing in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act that the constitution and bylaws of such labor organization do not provide an adequate procedure for the removal of an elected officer guilty of serious misconduct, such officer may be removed, for cause shown and after notice and hearing, by the members in good standing voting in a secret ballot conducted by the officers of such labor organization in accordance with its constitution and bylaws insofar as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title.

"(i) The Secretary shall promulgate rules and regulations prescribing minimum standards and procedures for determining the adequacy of the removal procedures to which reference is made in subsection (h).

"Enforcement

"SEC. 402. (a) A member of a labor organization—

"(1) who has exhausted the remedies available under the constitution and bylaws of such organization and of any parent body, or

"(2) who has invoked such available remedies without obtaining a final decision within three calendar months after their invocation, may file a complaint with the Secretary within one calendar month thereafter alleging the violation of any provision of section 401 (including violation of the constitution and bylaws of the labor organization pertaining to the election and removal of officers). The challenged election shall be presumed valid pending a final decision thereon (as hereinafter provided) and in the interim the affairs of the organization shall be conducted by the officers elected or in such other manner as its constitution and bylaws may provide.

"(b) The Secretary shall investigate such complaint and, if he finds probable cause to believe that a violation of this title has occurred and has not been remedied, he shall, within sixty days after the filing of such complaint, bring a civil action against the labor organization as an entity in the district court of the United States in which such labor organization maintains its principal office to set aside the invalid election, if any, and to direct the conduct of an election or hearing and vote upon the removal of officers under the supervision of the Secretary and in accordance with the provisions of this title and such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. The court shall have power to take such action as it deems proper to preserve the assets of the labor organization.

"(c) If, upon a preponderance of the evidence after a trial upon the merits, the court finds—

"(1) that an election has not been held within the time prescribed by section 401, or

"(2) that the violation of section 401 may have affected the outcome of an election, the court shall declare the election, if any, to be void and direct the conduct of a new election under supervision of the Secretary and, so far as lawful and practicable, in conformity with the constitution and bylaws of the labor organization. The Secretary shall promptly certify to the court the names of the persons elected, and the court shall thereupon enter a decree declaring such persons to be the officers of the labor organization. If the proceeding is for the removal of officers pursuant to subsection (h) of section 401, the Secretary shall certify the results of the vote and the court shall enter a decree declaring whether such persons have been removed as officers of the labor organization.

"(d) An order directing an election, dismissing a complaint, or designating elected officers of a labor organization shall be appealable in the same manner as the final judgment in a civil action, but an order directing an election shall not be stayed pending appeal.

"Application of other laws

"SEC. 403. No labor organization shall be required by law to conduct elections of officers with greater frequency or in a different form or manner than is required by its own constitution or bylaws, except as otherwise provided by this title. Existing rights and remedies to enforce the constitution and bylaws of a labor organization with respect to elections prior to the conduct thereof shall not be affected by the provisions of this title. The remedy provided by this title for challenging an election already conducted shall be exclusive.

"Effective date

"SEC. 404. The provisions of this title shall become applicable—

"(1) ninety days after the date of enactment of this Act in the case of a labor organization whose constitution and bylaws can lawfully be modifid or amended by action of its constitutional officers or governing body, or

"(2) where such modification can only be made by a constitutional convention of the labor organization, not later than the next constitutional convention of such labor organization after the date of enactment of this Act, or one year after such date, whichever is sooner. If no such convention is held within such one-year period, the executive board or similar governing body empowered to act for such labor organization between conventions is empowered to make such interim constitutional changes as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

"TITLE V—SAFEGUARDS FOR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"Fiduciary responsibility of officers of labor organizations

"SEC. 501. (a) The officers, agents, shop stewards, and other representatives of a labor organization occupy positions of trust in relation to such organization and its members as a group. It is, therefore, the duty of each such person, taking into account the special problems and functions of a labor organization, to hold its money and property solely for the benefit of the organization and its members and to manage, invest, and expend the same in accordance with its constitution and bylaws and any resolutions of the governing bodies adopted thereunder, to refrain from dealing with such organization as an adverse party or in behalf of an adverse party in any matter connected with his duties and from holding or acquiring any pecuniary or personal interest which conflicts with the interests of such organization, and to account to the organization for any profit received by him in whatever capacity in connection with transactions conducted by him or under his direction on behalf of the organization. A general exculpatory provision in the constitution and bylaws of such a labor organization or a general exculpatory resolution of a governing body purporting to relieve any such person of liability for breach of the duties declared by this section shall be void as against public policy.

"(b) When any officer, agent, shop steward, or representative of any labor organization is alleged to have violated the duties declared in subsection (a) and the labor organization or its governing board or officers refuse or fail to sue or recover damages or secure an accounting or other appropriate relief within a reasonable time after being requested to do so by any member of the labor organization, such member may sue such officer, agent, shop steward, or representative in any district court of the United States or in any State court of competent jurisdiction to recover damages or secure an accounting or other appropriate relief for the benefit of the labor organization. No such proceeding shall be brought except upon leave of the court obtained upon verified application and for good cause shown, which application may be made ex parte. The trial judge may allot a reasonable part of the recovery in any action under this subsection to pay the fees of counsel prosecuting the suit at the instance of the member of the labor organization and to compensate such member for any expenses necessarily paid or incurred by him in connection with the litigation."

"(c) Any person who embezzles, steals, or unlawfully and willfully abstracts or converts to his own use, or the use of another, any of the moneys, funds, securities, property, or other assets of a labor organization of which he is an officer, or by which he is employed, directly or indirectly, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both.

"Bonding

"SEC. 502. (a) Every officer, agent, shop steward, or other representative or employee of any labor organization (other than a labor organization whose property and annual financial receipts do not exceed $5,000 in value), or of a trust in which a labor organization is interested, who handles funds or other property thereof shall be bonded for the faithful discharge of his duties. The bond of each such person shall be fixed at the beginning of the organization's fiscal year and shall be in an amount not less than 10 per centum of the funds handled by him and his predecessor or predecessors, if any, during the preceding fiscal year, but in no case more than $500,000. If the labor organization or the trust in which a labor organization is interested does not have a preceding fiscal year, the amount of the bond shall be, in the case of a local labor organization, not less than $1,000, and in the case of any other labor organization or of a trust in which a labor organization is interested, not less than $10,000. Such bonds shall be individual or schedule in form, and shall have a corporate surety company as surety thereon. Any person who is not covered by such bonds shall not be permitted to receive, handle, disburse, or otherwise exercise custody or control of the funds or other property of a labor organization or of a trust in which a labor organization is interested. No such bond shall be placed through an agent or broker or with a surety company in which any labor organization or any officer, agent, shop steward, or other representative of a labor organization has any direct or indirect interest. Such surety company shall be a corporate surety which holds a grant of authority from the Secretary of the Treasury under the Act of July 30, 1947 (6 U.S.C. 6–13), as an acceptable surety on Federal bonds.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates this section shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"Making of loans; payment of fines

"SEC. 503. (a) No labor organization shall make directly or indirectly any loan or loans to any officer or employee of such organization which results in a total indebtedness on the part of such officer or employee to the labor organization in excess of $2,000.

"(b) No labor organization or employer shall directly or indirectly pay the fine of any officer or employee convicted of any willful violation of this Act.

"(c) Any person who willfully violates this section shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"Prohibition against certain persons holding office

"SEC. 504. (a) No person who is or has been a member of the Communist Party or who has been convicted of, or served any part of a prison term resulting from his conviction of, robbery, bribery, extortion, embezzlement, grand larcency, burglary, arson, violation of narcotics laws, murder, rape, assault with intent to kill, assault which inflicts grievous bodily injury, or a violation of title II or III of this Act, or conspiracy to commit any such crimes, shall serve—

"(1) as an officer, director, trustee, member of any executive board or similar governing body, business agent, manager, organizer, or other employee (other than as an employee performing exclusively clerical or custodial duties) of any labor organization, or

"(2) as a labor relations consultant to a person engaged in an industry or activity affecting commerce, or as an officer, director, agent, or employee (other than as an employee performing exclusively clerical or custodial duties) of any group or association of employers dealing with any labor organization, during or for five years after the termination of his membership in the Communist Party, or for five years after such conviction or after the end of such imprisonment, unless prior to the end of such five-year period, in the case of a person so convicted or imprisoned, (A) his citizenship rights, having been revoked as a result of such conviction, have been fully restored, or (B) the Board of Parole of the United States Department of Justice determines that such person's service in any capacity referred to in clause (1) or (2) would not be contrary to the purposes of this Act. Prior to making any such determination the Board shall hold an administrative hearing and shall give notice of such proceeding by certified mail to the State, county, and Federal prosecuting officials in the jurisdiction or jurisdictions in which such person was convicted. The Board's determination in any such proceeding shall be final. No labor organization or officer thereof shall knowingly permit any person to assume or hold any office or paid position in violation of this subsection.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates this section shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"(c) For the purposes of this section, any person shall be deemed to have been 'convicted' and under the disability of 'conviction' from the date of the judgment of the trial court or the date of the final sustaining of such judgment on appeal, whichever is the later event, regardless of whether such conviction occurred before or after the date of enactment of this Act.

"Amendment to section 302, Labor Management Relations Act, 1947

"SEC. 505. Subsection (a), (b), and (c) of section 302 of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 302. (a) It shall be unlawful for any employer or association of employers or any person who acts as a labor relations expert, adviser, or consultant to an employer or who acts in the interest of an employer to pay, lend, or deliver, or agree to pay, lend, or deliver, any money or other thing of value—

"'(1) to any representative of any of his employees who are employed in an industry affecting commerce; or

"'(2) to any labor organization, or any officer or employee thereof, which represents, seeks to represent, or would admit to membership, any of the employees of such employer who are employed in an industry affecting commerce; or

"'(3) to any employee or group or committee of employees of such employer employed in an industry affecting commerce in excess of their normal compensation for the purpose of causing such employee or group or committee directly or indirectly to influence any other employees in the exercise of the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing; or

"'(4) to any officer or employee of a labor organization engaged in an industry affecting commerce with intent to influence him in respect to any of his actions, decisions, or duties as a representative of employees or as such officer or employee of such labor organization.

"'(b)(1) It shall be unlawful for any person to request, demand, receive, or accept, or agree to receive or accept, any payment, loan, or delivery of any money or other thing of value prohibited by subsection (a).

"'(2) It shall be unlawful for any labor organization, or for any person acting as an officer, agent, representative, or employee of such labor organization, to demand or accept from the operator of any motor vehicle (as defined in part II of the Interstate Commerce Act) employed in the transportation of property in commerce, or the employer of any such operator, any money or other thing of value payable to such organization or to an officer, agent, representative or employee thereof as a fee or charge for the unloading, or in connection with the unloading, of the cargo of such vehicle: Provided, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to make unlawful any payment by an employer to any of his employees as compensation for their services as employees.

"'(c) The provisions of this section shall not be applicable (1) in respect to any money or other thing of value payable by an employer to any of his employees whose established duties include acting openly for such employer in matters of labor relations or personnel administration or to any representative of his employees, or to any officer or employee of a labor organization, who is also an employee or former employee of such employer, as compensation for, or by reason of, his service as an employee of such employer; (2) with respect to the payment or delivery of any money or other thing of value in satisfaction of a judgment of any court or a decision or award of an arbitrator or impartial chairman or in compromise, adjustment, settlement, or release of any claim, complaint, grievance, or dispute in the absence of fraud or duress; (3) with respect to the sale or purchase of an article or commodity at the prevailing market price in the regular course of business; (4) with respect to money deducted from the wages of employees in payment of membership dues in a labor organization: Provided, That the employer has received from each employee, on whose account such deductions are made, a written assignment which shall not be irrevocable for a period of more than one year, or beyond the termination date of the applicable collective agreement, whichever occurs sooner; (5) with respect to money or other thing of value paid to a trust fund established by such representative, for the sole and exclusive benefit of the employees of such employer, and their families and dependents (or of such employees, families, and dependents jointly with the employees of other employers making similar payments and their families and dependents): Provided, That (A) such payments are held in trust for the purpose of paying, either from principal or income or both, for the benefit of employees, their families and dependents, for medical or hospital care, pensions on retirement or death of employees, compensation for injuries or illness resulting from occupational activity or insurance to provide any of the foregoing, or unemployment benefits or life insurance, disability and sickness insurance, or accident insurance; (B) the detailed basis on which such payments are to be made is specified in a written agreement with the employer, and employees and employers are equally represented in the administration of such fund, together with such neutral persons as the representatives of the employers and the representatives of employees may agree upon and in the event the employer and employee groups deadlock on the administration of such fund and there are no neutral persons empowered to break such deadlock, such agreement provides that the two groups shall agree on an impartial umpire to decide such dispute, or in event of their failure to agree within a reasonable length of time, an impartial umpire to decide such dispute shall, on petition of either group, be appointed by the district court of the United States for the district where the trust fund has its principal office, and shall also contain provisions for an annual audit of the trust fund, a statement of the results of which shall be available for inspection by interested persons at the principal office of the trust fund and at such other places as may be designated in such written agreement; and (C) such payments as are intended to be used for the purpose of providing pensions or annuities for employees are made to a separate trust which provides that the funds held therein cannot be used for any purpose other than paying such pensions or annuities; or (6) with respect to money or other thing of value paid by any employer to a trust fund established by such representative for the purpose of pooled vacation, holiday, severance or similar benefits, or defraying costs of apprenticeship or other training programs: Provided, That the requirements of clause (B) of the proviso to clause (5) of this subsection shall apply to such trust funds.'

"TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

"Investigations

"SEC. 601. (a) The Secretary shall have power when he believes it necessary in order to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this Act (except title I or amendments made by this Act to other statutes) to make an investigation and in connection therewith he may enter such places and inspect such records and accounts and question such persons as he may deem necessary to enable him to determine the facts relative thereto. The Secretary may report to interested persons or officials concerning the facts required to be shown in any report required by this Act and concerning the reasons for failure or refusal to file such a report or any other matter which he deems to be appropriate as a result of such an investigation.

"(b) For the purpose of any investigation provided for in this Act, the provisions of sections 9 and 10 (relating to the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents) of the Federal Trade Commission Act of September 16, 1914, as amended (15 U.S.C. 49, 50), are hereby made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the Secretary or any officers designated by him.

"Extortionate picketing

"SEC. 602. (a) It shall be unlawful to carry on picketing on or about the premises of any employer for the purpose of, or as part of any conspiracy or in furtherance of any plan or purpose for, the personal profit or enrichment of any individual (except a bona fide increase in wages or other employee benefits by taking or obtaining any money or other thing of value from such employer against his will or with his consent.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates this section shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both.

"Retention of rights under other Federal and State laws

SEC. 603. (a) Except as explicitly provided to the contrary, nothing in this Act shall reduce or limit the responsibilities of any labor organization or any officer, agent, shop steward, or other representative of a labor organization, or of any trust in which a labor organization is interested under any other Federal law or under the laws of any State, and, except as explicitly provided to the contrary, nothing in this Act shall take away any right or bar any remedy to which members of a labor organization are entitled under such other Federal law or law of any State.

"(b) Nothing contained in titles, I, II, III, IV, V, or VI of this Act shall be construed to supersede or impair or otherwise affect the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, as amended, or any of the obligations, rights, benefits, privileges, or immunities of any carrier, employee, organization, representative, or person subject thereto; nor shall anything contained in said titles (except section 505) of this Act be construed to confer any rights, privileges, immunities, or defenses upon employers, or to impair or otherwise affect the rights of any person under the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

"Effect on State laws

"SEC. 604. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to impair or diminish the authority of any State to enact and enforce general criminal laws respect to robbery, bribery, extortion, embezzlement, grand larceny, burglary, arson, violation of narcotics laws, murder, rape, assault with intent to kill, or assault which inflicts grievous bodily injury, or conspiracy to commit any of such crimes.

"Service of process

"SEC. 605. For the purposes of this Act, service of summons, subpena, or other legal process of a court of the United States upon an officer or agent of a labor organization in his capacity as such shall constitute service upon the labor organization.

"Administrative Procedure Act

"SEC. 606. The provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act shall be applicable to the issuance, amendment, or rescission of any rules or regulations, or any adjudication, authorized or required pursuant to the provisions of this Act.

"Other agencies and departments

"SEC. 607. In order to avoid unnecessary expense and duplication of functions among Government agencies, the Secretary may make such arrangements or agreements for cooperation or mutual assistance in the performance of his functions under this Act and the functions of any such agency as he may find to be practicable and consistent with law. The Secretary may utilize the facilities or services of any department, agency, or establishment of the United States or of any State or political subdivision of a State, including the services of any of its employees, with the lawful consent of such department, agency, or establishment; and each department, agency, or establishment of the United States is authorized and directed to cooperate with the Secretary and, to the extent permitted by law, to provide such information and facilities as he may request for his assistance in the performance of his functions under this Act. The Attorney General or his representative shall receive from the Secretary for appropriate action such evidence developed in the performance of his functions under this Act as may be found to warrant consideration for criminal prosecution under the provisions of this Act or other Federal law.

"Criminal contempt

"SEC. 608. No person shall be punished for any criminal contempt allegedly committed outside the immediate presence of the court in connection with any civil action prosecuted by the Secretary or any other person in any court of the United States under the provisions of this Act unless the facts constituting such criminal contempt are established by the verdict of the jury in a proceeding in the district court of the United States, which jury shall be chosen and empaneled in the manner prescribed by the law governing trial juries in criminal prosecutions in the district courts of the United States.

"Prohibition on certain discipline by labor organization

"SEC. 609. It shall be unlawful for any labor organization, or any officer, agent, shop steward, or other representative of a labor organization, or any employee thereof to fine, suspend, expel, or otherwise discipline any of its members for exercising any right to which he is entitled under the provisions of this Act. The provisions of section 102 shall be applicable in the enforcement of this section.

"Deprivation of rights under act by violence

"SEC. 610. It shall be unlawful for any person through the use of force or violence, or threat of the use of force or violence, to restrain, coerce, or intimidate, or attempt to restrain, coerce, or intimidate any member of a labor organization for the purpose of interfering with or preventing the exercise of any right to which he is entitled under the provisions of this Act. Any person who willfully violates this section shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"Separability provisions

"SEC. 611. If any provision of this Act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances, shall be held invalid, the remainder of this Act or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"TITLE VII—AMENDMENTS TO THE LABOR MANAGEMENT RELATIONS ACT, 1947, AS AMENDED

"Federal-State jurisdiction

"SEC. 701. (a) Section 14 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(c)(1) The Board, in its discretion, may, by rule of decision or by published rules adopted pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act, decline to assert jurisdiction over any labor dispute involving any class or category of employers, where, in the opinion of the Board, the effect of such labor dispute on commerce is not sufficiently substantial to warrant the exercise of its jurisdiction: Provided, That the Board shall not decline to assert jurisdiction over any labor dispute over which it would assert jurisdiction under the standards prevailing upon August 1, 1959.

"'(2) Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to prevent or bar any agency or the courts of any State or Territory (including the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands), from assuming and asserting jurisdiction over labor disputes over which the Board declines, pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection, to assert jurisdiction.'

"(b) Section 3(b) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) The Board is authorized to delegate to any group of three or more members any or all of the powers which it may itself exercise. The Board is also authorized to delegate to its regional directors its powers under section 9 to determine the unit appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining, to investigate and provide for hearings, and determine whether a question of representation exists, and to direct an election or take a secret ballot under subsection (c) or (e) of section 9 and certify the results thereof, except that upon the filing of a request therefor with the Board by any interested person, the Board may review any action of a regional director delegated to him under this paragraph, but such a review shall not, unless specifically ordered by the Board, operate as a stay of any action taken by the regional director. A vacancy in the Board shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all of the powers of the Board, and three members of the Board shall, at all times, constitute a quorum of the Board, except that two members shall constitute a quorum of any group designated pursuant to the first sentence hereof. The Board shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.'

"Economic strikers

"SEC. 702. Section 9(c)(3) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, is amended by amending the second sentence thereof to read as follows: 'Employees engaged in an economic strike who are not entitled to reinstatement shall be eligible to vote under such regulations as the Board shall find are consistent with the purposes and provisions of this Act in any election conducted within twelve months after the commencement of the strike.'

"Vacancy in office of General Counsel

"SEC. 703. Section 3(d) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, is amended by adding after the period at the end thereof the following: 'In case of a vacancy in the office of the General Counsel the President is authorized to designate the officer or employee who shall act as General Counsel during such vacancy, but no person or persons so designated shall so act (1) for more than forty days when the Congress is in session unless a nomination to fill such vacancy shall have been submitted to the Senate, or (2) after the adjournment sine die of the session of the Senate in which such nomination was submitted.'

"Boycotts and recognition picketing

"SEC. 704. (a) Section 8(b)(4) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(4)(i) to engage in, or to induce or encourage any individual employed by any person engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce to engage in, a strike or a refusal in the course of his employment to use, manufacture, process, transport, or otherwise handle or work on any goods, articles, materials, or commodities or to perform any services; or (ii) to threaten, coerce, or restrain any person engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce, where in either case an object thereof is:

"'(A) forcing or requiring any employer or self-employed person to join any labor or employer organization or to enter into any agreement which is prohibited by section 8(e);

"'(B) forcing or requiring any person to cease using, selling, handling, transporting, or otherwise dealing in the products of any other producer, processor, or manufacturer, or to cease doing business with any other person, or forcing or requiring any other employer to recognize or bargain with a labor organization as the representative of his employees unless such labor organization has been certified as the representative of such employees under the provisions of section 9: Provided, That nothing contained in this clause (B) shall be construed to make unlawful, where not otherwise unlawful, any primary strike or primary picketing;

"'(C) forcing or requiring any employer to recognize or bargain with a particular labor organization as the representative of his employees if another labor organization has been certified as the representative of such employees under the provisions of section 9;

"'(D) forcing or requiring any employer to assign particular work to employees in a particular labor organization or in a particular trade, craft, or class rather than to employees in another labor organization or in another trade, craft, or class, unless such employer is failing to conform to an order or certification of the Board determining the bargaining representative for employees performing such work:

Provided, That nothing contained in this subsection (b) shall be construed to make unlawful a refusal by any person to enter upon the premises of any employer (other than his own employer), if the employees of such employer are engaged in a strike ratified or approved by a representative of such employees whom such employer is required to recognize under this Act: Provided further, That for the purposes of this paragraph (4) only, nothing contained in such paragraph shall be construed to prohibit publicity, other than picketing, for the purpose of truthfully advising the public, including consumers and members of a labor organization, that a product or products are produced by an employer with whom the labor organization has a primary dispute and are distributed by another employer, as long as such publicity does not have an effect of inducing any individual employed by any person other than the primary employer in the course of his employment to refuse to pick up, deliver, or transport any goods, or not to perform any services, at the establishment of the employer engaged in such distribution;'.

"(b) Section 8 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(e) It shall be an unfair labor practice for any labor organization and any employer to enter into any contract or agreement, express or implied, whereby such employer ceases or refrains or agrees to cease or refrain from handling, using, selling, transporting or otherwise dealing in any of the products of any other employer, or to cease doing business with any other person, and any contract or agreement entered into heretofore or hereafter containing such an agreement shall be to such extent unenforcible and void: Provided, That nothing in this subsection (e) shall apply to an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done at the site of the construction, alteration, painting, or repair of a building, structure, or other work: Provided further, That for the purposes of this subsection (e) and section 8(b)(4)(B) the terms "any employer", "any person engaged in commerce or an industry affecting commerce", and "any person" when used in relation to the terms "any other producer, processor, or manufacturer,", "any other employer", or "any other person" shall not include persons in the relation of a jobber, manufacturer, contractor, or subcontractor working on the goods or premises of the jobber or manufacturer or performing parts of an integrated process of production in the apparel and clothing industry: Provided further, That nothing in this Act shall prohibit the enforcement of any agreement which is within the foregoing exception.'

"(c) Section 8(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (5), striking out the period at the end of paragraph (6), and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and", and adding a new paragraph as follows:

"'(7) to picket or cause to be picketed, or threaten to picket or cause to be picketed, any employer where an object thereof is forcing or requiring an employer to recognize or bargain with a labor organization as the representative of his employees, or forcing or requiring the employees of an employer to accept or select such labor organization as their collective bargaining representative, unless such labor organization is currently certified as the representative of such employees:

"'(A) where the employer has lawfully recognized in accordance with this Act any other labor organization and a question concerning representation may not appropriately be raised under section 9(c) of this Act,

"'(B) where within the preceding twelve months a valid election under section 9(c) of this Act has been conducted, or

"'(C) where such picketing has been conducted without a petition under section 9(c) being filed within a reasonable period of time not to exceed thirty days from the commencement of such picketing: Provided, That when such a petition has been filed the Board shall forthwith, without regard to the provisions of section 9(c)(1) or the absence of a showing of a substantial interest on the part of the labor organization, direct an election in such unit as the Board finds to be appropriate and shall certify the results thereof: Provided further, That nothing in this subparagraph (C) shall be construed to prohibit any picketing or other publicity for the purpose of truthfully advising the public (including consumers) that an employer does not employ members of, or have a contract with, a labor organization, unless an effect of such picketing is to induce any individual employed by any other person in the course of his employment, not to pick up, deliver or transport any goods or not to perform any services.

"'Nothing in this paragraph (7) shall be construed to permit any act which would otherwise be an unfair labor practice under this section 8(b).'

"(d) Section 10(l) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, is amended by adding after the words 'section 8(b),' the words 'or section 8(e) or section 8(b)(7),' and by striking out the period at the end of the third sentence and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That such officer or regional attorney shall not apply for any restraining order under section 8(b)(7) if a charge against the employer under section 8(a)(2) has been filed and after the preliminary investigation, he has reasonable cause to believe that such charge is true and that a complaint should issue.'

(e) Section 303(a) of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, is amended to read as follows:

"'(a) It shall be unlawful, for the purpose of this section only, in an industry or activity affecting commerce, for any labor organization to engage in any activity or conduct defined as an unfair labor practice in section 8(b)(4) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.'

"Building and construction industry

"SEC. 705. (a) Section 8 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended by section 704(b) of this Act, as amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(f) It shall not be an unfair labor practice under subsections (a) and (b) of this section for an employer engaged primarily in the building and construction industry to make an agreement covering employees engaged (or who, upon their employment, will be engaged) in the building and construction industry with a labor organization of which building and construction employees are members (not established, maintained, or assisted by any action defined in section 8(a) of this Act as an unfair labor practice) because (1) the majority status of such labor organization has not been established under the provisions of section 9 of this Act prior to the making of such agreement, or (2) such agreement requires as a condition of employment, membership in such labor organization after the seventh day following the beginning of such employment or the effective date of the agreement, whichever is later, or (3) such agreement requires the employer to notify such labor organization of opportunities for employment with such employer, or gives such labor organization an opportunity to refer qualified applicants for such employment, or (4) such agreement specifies minimum training or experience qualifications for employment or provides for priority in opportunities for employment based upon length of service with such employer, in the industry or in the particular geographical area: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall set aside the final proviso to section 8(a)(3) of this Act: Provided further, That any agreement which would be invalid, but for clause (1) of this subsection, shall not be a bar to a petition filed pursuant to section 9(c) or 9(e).'

"(b) Nothing contained in the amendment made by subsection (a) shall be construed as authorizing the execution or application of agreements requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment in any State or Territory in which such execution or application is prohibited by State or Territorial law.

"Priority in case handling

"SEC. 706. Section 10 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"'(m) Whenever it is charged that any person has engaged in an unfair labor practice within the meaning of subsection (a)(3) or (b)(2) of section 8, such charge shall be given priority over all other cases except cases of like character in the office where it is filed or to which it is referred and cases given priority under subsection (l)."

"Effective date of amendments

"SEC. 707. The amendments made by this title shall take effect sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act and no provision of this title shall be deemed to make an unfair labor practice, any act which is performed prior to such effective date which did not constitute an unfair labor practice prior thereto."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the House to the bill (S. 1555) to provide for the reporting and disclosure of certain financial transactions and administrative practices of labor organizations and employers, to prevent abuses in the administration of trusteeships by labor organizations, to provide standards with respect to the election of officers of labor organizations, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment strikes out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserts a substitute. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, with an amendment which is a substitute for both the Senate bill and the House amendment. The differences between the House amendment and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted in the following outline, except for minor, technical, and conforming changes.

SECTION 3—DEFINITIONS

The House amendment makes many changes in the definitions the Senate bill contains. In all major respects the compromise the conference agreed on adopts the House versions. However, in the conference substitute, the definition of "labor organization" and specification of which labor organizations that are engaged in an industry affecting commerce are changed to include "general committees." This refers to organizations of the type commonly found in the railway unions that designate general committees.

SECTION 101—BILL OF RIGHTS

This section of the Senate bill and the House amendment, for the most part, contain similar provisions. In all instances where there are differences between the Senate bill and the House amendment the conference substitute follows the House amendment.

In this section there is a matter that must be explained. In paragraph (5), relating to safeguards against improper disciplinary action, it should be noted that the prohibition on suspension without observing certain safeguards applies only to suspension of membership in the union; it does not refer to suspension of a member's status as an officer in the union.

SECTION 201—REPORT OF LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that it makes clear that the Secretary of Labor may prescribe the different categories financial data that labor organizations must report.

SECTION 203—REPORTS OF EMPLOYERS

The conference substitute substantially rewrites section 203 of the House amendment.

Subsection (a) of both the House amendment and the conference substitute require employers to make detailed reports to the Secretary of Labor of payments, expenditures, or agreements described below.

First, both the House amendment and the conference substitute require employers to report payments and loans to unions and union officers and employees; and they both except payments that section 302(c) of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, permits. The substitute also contains an exception, taken from the Senate bill, for payments and loans made by credit institutions, such as banks.

Second, the substitute requires reports of all payments by an employer to his employees, or to a group or committee of his employees, for the purpose of causing them to persuade other employees to exercise or not to exercise, or as to the manner of exercising, the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. This requires reporting payments to "front organizations" that employers set up purportedly as spontaneous employee committees or groups. Payments of this type would not have to be reported if they were disclosed to such other employees when they were made or before they were made.

Third, the substitute requires reports of expenditures by an employer made to interfere with, coerce, or restrain employees in exercising their statutory rights to organize and bargain collectively, or to purchase information not otherwise available concerning activities of employees, or of a union, in connection with a labor dispute involving such employer, unless the information is for use solely in connection with an administrative or arbitral proceeding, or a civil or criminal judicial proceeding. It should be noted that an employer is not required to report expenditures to obtain information in connection with a labor dispute in which he is not involved.

Fourth, the substitute requires reports of all agreements with independent contractors, such as Nathan Shefferman, pursuant to which the independent contractor undertakes to persuade employees to exercise or not to exercise, or as to the manner of exercising, their statutory right to organize and to bargain collectively, or undertakes to supply the employer with information concerning activities of employees, or of a union, in connection with a labor dispute involving such employer, unless the information is for use solely in connection with an administrative or arbitral proceeding or a criminal or civil judicial proceeding.

Fifth, the substitute requires reports of payments under the agreements the preceding paragraph describes.

Subsection (b) of section 203 of the substitute agreed upon in conference deals with reports by labor relations consultants.

It requires reports from a consultant who enters into an agreement with an employer to engage in any of the activities that, under section 203(a)(4), must be reported by the employer.

Subsection (c) of section 203 of the conference substitute grants a broad exemption from the requirements to the section with respect to the giving of advice. This subsection is further discussed in connection with section 204.

Subsection (d) of section 203 makes it clear that reports are required only where an expenditure, payment, loan, or agreement of the kinds described has been made.

Subsection (e) of section 203 makes it clear that no regular officer, supervisor, or employee is required to file a report in connection with services rendered to his employer. Similarly, no employer is required to file a report of expenditures made to any of his regular officers, supervisors, or employees for their services as such.

Subsection (f) of section 203 makes it clear that this section does not impair the free speech that is described in section 8(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

Subsection (g) of section 203 provides that the term "interfere with, restrain, or coerce" has the same meaning when used in this section as it has when used in the National Labor Relations Act. The House amendment contains a similar provision.

SECTION 204—ATTORNEY-CLIENT COMMUNICATIONS EXEMPTED

The Senate bill provides that an attorney need not include in any report required by the Act any information which was lawfully communicated to such attorney by any of his clients in the course of a legitimate attorney-client relationship.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of the Senate bill, but in connection therewith the conferees included, in esction 203(c), a provision taken from the Senate bill that provides that an employer or other person is not required to file a report covering the services of such person by reason of his giving or agreeing to give advice to such employer or representing or agreeing to represent such employer before any court, administrative agency, or tribunal of arbitration or engaging or agreeing to engage in collective bargaining on behalf of such employer or the negotiation of an agreement or any question arising thereunder.

SECTION 205—REPORTS MADE PUBLIC INFORMATION

The Senate bill, as a part of subsection (a) of this section, authorizes the Secretary of Labor to publish any information and data which he obtains under the title, and to use it for statistical and research purposes as he deems appropriate. It also allowed him to publish such studies, analyses, reports, and surveys based on information and data obtained under the title as he may deem appropriate. The House amendment contains no comparable provision. The conference substitute includes this provision.

SECTION 401—TERMS OF OFFICE; ELECTION PROCEDURES

Subsection (b) of section 401 of the Senate bill contains a provision making it the duty of each union and its officers to comply with reasonable requests of candidates to distribute, at the candidates' expense, campaign literature to all members of the union, and to refrain from discrimination in favor of or against any such candidate with respect to the use of lists of members. The Senate bill also requires that when a union or its officers authorize the distribution to members of campaign literature on behalf of any candidate or of the union itself, similar distribution shall be made by the union and its officers at the request of any other bona fide candidate, with equal treatment as to the expenses of the distribution. The duty so imposed could be enforced by civil action in the Federal courts.

The House amendment omits these provisions, but includes a provision giving every bona fide candidate the right to inspect and copy a list of the names and addresses of all members of the union who are subject to a union shop collective bargaining agreement, which list is to be maintained at principal office of the union.

The substitute agreed upon in conference contains both the provisions of the Senate bill and of the House amendment, except that the provisions from the House amendment are modified to deny candidates the right to copy membership lists and to restrict the right of candidates to inspect such lists to one time within 30 days of the election.

Subsection (d) of section 401 of the Senate bill requires that notice of a union election be mailed to the last known address of each member not less than 15 days before it is held. The House amendment provides that notice of a union election must be given in a manner which is reasonably calculated to inform substantially all of the members eligible to vote of the time and manner of making nominations and of the place and date of the election. Such notice would be given between the 45th and 15th day before the final day on which nominations could be made. The conference substitute accepts the Senate bill on this point.

Subsection (g) of section 401 of the proposed substitute accepts the provision of the Senate bill which permits, in union elections, union money to be used for factual statements of issues only if they do not involve candidates.

Subsection (b) of the conference substitute deals with removal of officers guilty of serious misconduct. The Senate bill provides that where the Secretary, upon application of a member of a local union, finds after a hearing that the constitution and bylaws of the local union do not provide an adequate procedure for the removal of an elected officer guilty of serious misconduct, such officer may be removed, for cause shown and after notice and opportunity for a hearing, by the members of the union voting in a secret ballot conducted by the officers in accordance with its constitution and bylaws insofar as they are not inconsistent with this title.

The House amendment provides a procedure which is similar, except that the Federal courts rather than the Secretary of Labor would determine whether the constitution and bylaws provide an adequate procedure for the removal of elected officers guilty of serious misconduct. The House amendment applies to all unions, not just to locals.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of the Senate bill, and also the final subsection in the Senate bill which gives the Secretary the duty to make rules prescribing minimum standards and procedures for determining the adequacy of removal procedures.

SECTION 402—ENFORCEMENT

Subsections (a) and (b) of section 402 of the Senate bill provide that if a member of a union who has exhausted the remedies available under the constitution and bylaws of the union and its parent body (or has invoked such remedies without obtaining a final decision within three months) may file a complaint with the Secretary of Labor alleging a violation of section 401 (which includes a violation of the constitution and bylaws of the union pertaining to the election and removal of officers). The Secretary will investigate each such complaint, and if he finds probable cause to believe that a violation of the title has occurred and has not been remedied, he will bring a civil action against the union in a Federal district court to set aside the invalid election, if any, and to direct the conduct of an election (or hearing and vote upon the removal of officers) under the supervision of the Secretary of Labor. During the course of a proceeding under this section a challenged election will be presumed valid and the affairs of the union will be conducted during such period by the officers elected or in such other manner as its constitution and bylaws may provide. When a civil action is filed, the court will have power to take such action as it deems proper to preserve the union's assets.

The House amendment differs from the Senate bill in that the members of the union, instead of the Secretary, can bring the civil action, and, therefore, there would be no investigation by the Secretary.

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill on this point.

In subsection (c) of section 402, the conference substitute adopts the provision of the Senate bill that directs the court to set aside an election if the violation "may have" affected the outcome. Under the House amendment an election could be set aside only if the violation did affect the outcome.

Subsection (d) of section 402 of the Senate bill would not permit the staying of an election during an appeal. The House amendment made this discretionary with the court. The conference substitute adopts the language of the Senate bill.

SECTION 502—BONDING

The House amendment contains a provision which requires the bonding of certain labor union officials in an amount not less than 10 per centum of the funds handled by them and their predecessors, if any, during the preceding fiscal year. The conference substitute adopts this provision of the House amendment, but, in addition, provides a maximum limitation so that no such official will be required to be bonded in an amount greater than $500,000.

SECTION 503—LOANS TO OFFICERS OF LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

The Senate bill sets $1,500 as the maximum amount by which an officer or employee could be indebted to his union. The House amendment raised this amount to $2,500. The conference substitute sets this maximum at $2,000.

The House amendment provides that the penalty for violating this section should be a fine of not more than $10,000, or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both. The conference substitute adopts the House amendment, except that the maximum fine is reduced to $5,000.

SECTION 504—PROHIBITION AGAINST CERTAIN PERSONS HOLDING OFFICE

The House amendment makes it a crime for a person to hold a union office for a prescribed period after he has been a Communist (or while he is a Communist), or after his conviction of certain offenses. The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that it adds a provision taken from the Senate bill which also makes it a crime for a labor organization or officer thereof to knowingly permit any person to assume or hold any office in violation of the section. A provision has also been added to make it clear that the prohibitions apply regardless of whether the conviction which disqualifies occurred before or after the date of enactment of the act.

SECTION 601—INVESTIGATIONS

The Senate bill contains a provision which directs the Secretary to conduct an investigation when he believes it necessary in order to determine whether any person has, or is about to, violate the act, or any rule or regulation authorized by the act.

The House amendment directs the Secretary to make an investigation when he has probable cause to believe that any person has violated a provision of the act, other than title I.

The conference substitute is similar to the Senate bill, except that the investigation authority is permissive rather than mandatory, no investigation may be made with respect to violations of rules and regulations, and the investigation authority does not extend to title I.

The Senate bill also contains a provision authorizing the Secretary to report to interested persons concerning the facts required to be shown in reports and concerning the reasons for failure or refusal to file a report or any other matter he deems appropriate as a result of an investigation. The conference substitute adopts this provision.

SECTION 611—SEPARABILITY PROVISIONS

The Senate bill provides that if any provision of the act, or its application to any person or circumstances, is held invalid the remainder of the act or the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby. The House amendment merely provides that if any provision of the act is held invalid, the remainder thereof will not be affected. The conference substitute adopts the provisions of the Senate bill.

SECTION 701—FEDERAL-STATE JURISDICTION

The Senate bill provision relating to this subject amends the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, so as to provide that nothing in that act could be construed to prevent any State or Territorial agency, other than a court, from exercising jurisdiction over all cases over which the Board has jurisdiction, but by rule or otherwise has declined to assert jurisdiction provided the State or Territorial agency applies and is governed solely by Federal law as set forth in section 8(a) and 8(b) and section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act.

The House amendment contains a provision which authorizes the Board, in its discretion, by rule of decision or by published rules adopted pursuant to the Administrative Procedures Act to decline to assert jurisdiction over any labor dispute involving any class or category of employers, where in the opinion of the Board, the effect of such labor dispute on commerce is not sufficiently substantial to warrant the exercise of its jurisdiction. The House amendment provides further that nothing in the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, shall be deemed to prevent or bar any agency or the courts of any State or Territory (including the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands) from assuming and asserting jurisdiction over labor disputes over which the Board, in its discretion, by rule of decision or by published rules adopted pursuant to the Administrative Procedures Act declines to assert jurisdiction.

The substitute agreed upon in conference contains the House amendment with two modifications. The first modification provides that the Board shall not decline to assert jurisdiction over any labor dispute over which it would assert jurisdiction under the standards prevailing upon August 1, 1959. The second modification would amend section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, to authorize the Board to delegate to its regional directors its powers under section 9 to determine the unit appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining, to investigate and provide for hearings, and determine whether a question concerning representation exists, and to direct an election or take a secret ballot under subsection (c) or (e) of section 9 and certify the results of such election, except that upon the filing of a request therefor with the Board by any interested person, the Board may review any action of a regional director delegated to him under section 9, but such a review by the Board would not, unless specifically ordered by the Board, operate as a stay of any action taken by the regional director.

SECTION 702—ECONOMIC STRIKERS

The Senate bill amends the second sentence of section 9(c)(3) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, to provide that employees on strike shall vote under such regulations as the National Labor Relations Board shall find to be consistent with the purposes and provisions of the Act.

The House amendment amends that sentence by adding a proviso that in any lawful strike in which recognition was not an issue when the strike began, no direction of election pursuant to a petition filed after the commencement of the strike by any person other than the bargaining representative shall issue prior to the termination of such strike as determined by the Board or the expiration of a six-month period from the commencement of the strike (or for a twelve-month period if the petition is filed by an employer), whichever occurs sooner. Under this provision the Board of course, could limit this right to vote even during this twelve-month period.

The substitute agreed upon in conference amends the second sentence in section 9(c)(3) to provide that "Employees engaged in an economic strike who are not entitled to reinstatement shall be eligible to vote under such regulations as the Board shall find are consistent with the purposes and provisions of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, in any election conducted within twelve months after the commencement of the strike.

SECTION 704(a)—BOYCOTTS

The House amendment contains provisions amending the secondary boycott provisions of section 8(b)(4) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended. The Senate bill does not contain comparable provisions. The conference committee adopted the provisions of the House amendment with the following changes: (1) the phrase "or agree to cease" was deleted from section 8(b)(4)(B) because the committee of conference concluded that the restrictions imposed by such language were included in the other provisions dealing with prohibitions against entering into "hot cargo" agreements, and therefore their retention in section 8(b)(4)(B) would constitute a duplication of language; (2) a proviso was added which specified that, for the purposes of this paragraph (4) only, nothing contained in such paragraph shall be construed to prohibit publicity, other than picketing, for the purpose of truthfully advising the public, including consumers and members of a labor organization, that a product or products are produced by an employer with whom the labor organization has a primary labor dispute and are distributed by another employer as long as such publicity does not have an effect of inducing any individual employed by any person other than the primary employer in the course of his employment to refuse to pick up, deliver, or transport any goods, or not to perform any services at the establishment of the employer engaged in such distribution; (3) no language has been included with reference to struck work because the committee of conference did not wish to change the existing law as illustrated by such decisions as Douds v. Metropolitan Federation of Architects, 75 Fed. Supp. 672 (S.D. N.Y. 1948), and NRLB v. Business Machine and Office Appliance Mechanics Board, 228 Fed. 2d 553; (4) the amendment adopted by the committee of conference contains a provision "that nothing contained in clause (B) of this paragraph (4) shall be construed to make unlawful, where not otherwise unlawful, any primary strike or primary picketing." The purpose of this provision is to make it clear that the changes in section 8(b)(4) do not overrule or qualify the present rules of law permitting picketing at the site of a primary labor dispute. This provision does not eliminate, restrict, or modify the limitations on picketing at the site of a primary labor dispute that are in existing law. See, for example, NRLB v. Denver Building and Construction Trades Council, et al., 341 U.S. 675 (1951); Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers, etc., and Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., 110 NRLB 455 (1954); Moore Drydock Co., 81 NLRB 1108; Washington Coca-Cola Bottling Works, Inc., 107 NLRB 233 (1953).

SECTION 704(B)—HOT CARGO AGREEMENTS

The Senate bill amends section 8 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (e) which makes it an unfair labor practice for any labor organization and any employer who is a common carrier subject to part II of the Interstate Commerce Act to enter into any contract or agreement, express or implied, whereby such employer ceases or refrains or agrees to cease or refrain from handling, using, or transporting any of the products of any other employer, or to cease doing business with the same.

The House amendment amends section 8 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (e) to make it an unfair labor practice for any labor organization and any employer to enter into any contract or agreement, express or implied, whereby such employer ceases or refrains or agrees to cease or refrain from handling, using, selling, transporting or otherwise dealing in any of the products of any other employer, or to cease doing business with any other person. The House amendment also makes any such agreement heretofore or hereafter executed unenforceable and void.

The committee of conference adopted the House amendment but added three provisions. The first proviso specifies "that nothing in this subsection (e) shall apply to an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done at the site of the construction, alteration, painting, or repair of a building, structure, or other work." It should be particularly noted that the proviso relates only and exclusively to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done at the site of the construction. The proviso does not exempt from section 8(e) agreements relating to supplies or other products or materials shipped or otherwise transported to and delivered on the site of the construction. The committee of conference does not intend that this proviso should be construed so as to change the present state of the law with respect to the validity of this specific type of agreement relating to work to be done at the site of the construction project or to remove the limitations which the present law imposes with respect to such agreements. Picketing to enforce such contracts would be illegal under the Sand Door case (Local 1796, United Brotherhood of Carpenters v. NLRB, 357 U.S. 93 (1958)). To the extent that such agreements are legal today under section 8(b)(4) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the proviso would prevent such legality from being affected by section 8(e). The proviso applies only to section 8(e) and therefore leaves unaffected the law developed under section 8(b)(4). The Denver Building Trades case and the Moore Drydock case would remain in full force and effect. The proviso is not intended to limit, change, or modify the present state of the law with respect to picketing at the site of a construction project. Restrictions and limitations imposed upon such picketing under present law as interpreted, for example, in the United States Supreme Court decision in the Denver Building Trades case would remain in full force and effect. It is not intended that the proviso change the existing law with respect to judicial enforcement of these contracts or with respect to the legality of a strike to obtain such a contract.

The second proviso specifies that for the purposes of this subsection (e) and section 8(b)(4) the terms "any employer," "any person engaged in commerce or an industry affecting commerce," and "any person" when used in relation to the terms "any other producer, processor, or manufacturer," "any other employer," or "any other person" shall not include persons in the relation of a jobber, manufacturer, contractor, or subcontractor working on the goods or premises of a jobber or manufacturer or performing parts of an integrated process of production in the apparel and clothing industry. This proviso grants a limited exemption in three specific situations in the apparel and clothing industry, but in no other industry regardless of whether similar integrated processes of production may exist between jobbers, manufacturers, contractors, and subcontractors.

The third proviso applies solely to the apparel and clothing industry.

SECTION 704(C)—ORGANIZATIONAL AND RECOGNITION PICKETING

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment contain provisions which place certain restrictions on organizational and recognition picketing. The committee of conference adopted a substitute provision, section 704(c), which amends the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, to add a new section 8(b)(7) making it an unfair labor practice to picket or cause to be picketed, or threaten to picket or cause to be picketed, any employer where an object thereof is forcing or requiring an employer to recognize or bargain with a labor organization as the representative of his employees, or forcing or requiring the employees of an employer to accept or select such labor organization as their collective bargaining representative, unless such labor organization is currently certified as the representative of such employees:

"(A) Where the employer has lawfully recognized in accordance with this Act any other labor organization and a question concerning representation may not appropriately be raised under section 9(c) of this Act.

"(B) Where within the preceding twelve months a valid election under section 9(c) of this Act has been conducted or

"(C) Where such picketing has been conducted without a petition under section 9(c) being filed within a reasonable period of time not to exceed thirty days from the commencement of such picketing: Provided, That when such a petition has been filed the Board shall forthwith, without regard to the provisions of section 9(c)(1) or the absence of a showing of a substantial interest on the part of the labor organization, direct an election in such unit as the Board finds to be appropriate and shall certify the results thereof: Provided further, That nothing in this subparagraph (C) shall be construed to prohibit any picketing or other publicity for the purpose of truthfully advising the public (including consumers) that an employer does not employ members of or have a contract with, a labor organization, unless an effect of such picketing is to induce any individual employed by any other person in the course of his employment, not to pick up, deliver or transport any goods or not to perform any services."

The final sentence to the proposed new section 8(b)(7) of the Act provides that "Nothing in this paragraph (7) shall be construed to permit any act which would otherwise be an unfair labor practice under section 8(b) of the Act." Section 8(b)(7) overrules the Curtis and Alloy cases to the extent that those decisions are inconsistent with section 8(b)(7).

SECTION 705—BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

The Senate bill amends section 8 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, to add a new subsection (e) which provides that it shall not be an unfair labor practice under subsections (a) and (b) of section 8 of that Act, for an employer engaged primarily in the building and construction industry to make an agreement covering employees engaged (or who upon their employment would be engaged) in the building and construction industry with a labor organization (not established, maintained, or assisted by any action defined in section 8(a) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, as an unfair labor practice) of which building and construction employees are members (1) where the majority status of such labor organization has not been established under the provisions of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, prior to the making of such agreement, (2) because such agreement requires as a condition of employment, membership in such labor organization after the seventh day following the beginning of such employment, or the effective date of the agreement, whichever was later, or (3) because such agreement requires the employer to notify such labor organization of opportunities for employment with such employer, or gives such labor organization an opportunity to refer qualified applicants for such employment, or (4) because such agreement specifies minimum training or experience qualifications for employment or provides for priority in opportunities for employment based upon length of service with such employer, in the industry or in the particular geographical area. The Senate provision specifies, however, (1) that nothing in such provision shall set aside the final proviso to section 8(a)(3) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and (2) that any agreement which would not be valid except for this amendment which permits an agreement to be entered into where the majority status of such labor organization has not been established under the provisions of section 9 of that Act prior to the making of such agreement, shall not be a bar to a petition filed pursuant to section 9(c) or 9(e) of that Act. The Senate provision also specifies that nothing therein shall be construed as authorizing the execution of or application of agreements requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment in any State or Territory in which such execution or application is prohibited by State or territorial law.

The conference adopted the provision of the Senate bill permitting prehire agreements in the building and construction industry. Nothing in such provision is intended to restrict the applicability of the hiring hall provisions enunciated in the Mountain Pacific case (119 NLRB 883, 893), or to authorize the use of force, coercion, strikes, or picketing to compel any person to enter into such prehire agreements.

GRAHAM A. BARDEN,
PHIL M. LANDRUM,
FRANK THOMPSON, JR.,
CARROLL D. KEARNS,
WILLIAM H. AYRES,
ROBERT P. GRIFFIN,
Managers on the Part of the House.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 161]

Andrews	Davis, Tenn.	Mitchell
Anfuso	Derwinski	Rhodes, Pa.
Baumhart	Evins	Scott
Bolton	Ford	Van Pelt
Broyhill	Hall	Wainwright
Canfield	Hébert	Westland
Carter	Holifield	Willis
Celler	McDowell
Cooley	Martin

The SPEAKER. On this rollcall 409 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE ACT OF 1959

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, your conferees on the part of the House have had a very, very difficult job because the bill under consideration is not only a very long bill but one that involves some new fields. I will not at this time attempt to go into a detailed discussion, because I think the report is clear, and the statement on the part of the managers certainly covers the important parts.

Mr. Speaker, the first six titles of this bill are essentially the same as the Landrum-Griffin bill which was thoroughly debated on the floor of the House and was, of course, passed by the House. We changed some language; I think in several respects we cleared up some of the language, and I honestly believe these first six titles are in just as good or better shape now than they were when they left the floor of the House. We removed some of the provisions that some Members raised objections to. I think at one point in the debate there seemed to be some question about the law prohibiting all picketing including picketing in protest of unfair labor practices. I think that has been cleared to the satisfaction of everyone concerned.

With reference to the no man's land provision, that is worked out in a way that I think is satisfactory. It fixes a date when the jurisdictional standards set by the National Labor Relations Board shall prevail. That was, I believe, on August 1, 1959. What that does is this; the jurisdiction of the Board as of August 1 stands and those cases below that are to be handled by the States.

There is one addition and that is this. The conferees adopted a provision that there should be some consideration given to expediting the handling of some of the representation cases. Therefore, the Board is authorized, but not commanded, to delegate to the regional directors certain powers which it has under section 9 of the act.

Upon an appeal to the Board by any interested party the Board would have the authority to review and stay any action of a regional director, delegated to him under section 9. But the hearings have not been dispensed with. There is not any such thing as reinstating authority or procedure for a quicky election. Some were disturbed over that and the possibility of that is out. The right to a formal hearing before an election can be directed is preserved without limitation or qualification.

With respect to the bonding provisions, there are many sections in the bill that were perhaps touched up some but personally I was so enthusiastic over the bonding provision, I think it will be satisfactory. It makes the person himself responsible for that bond instead of its being an office bond or a position bond. It is a personal bond.

I think it is well within the knowledge of everyone that in the handling of the finances there have been many wrongs committed and there was a very high risk run by all the members who had an interest in those funds. With respect to the matter of a personal bond, I think it is clear to everyone that a bonding company is not going to write a bond for a bad risk. In that manner I think this will be of tremendous value to the unions because of the fact that when the bond is written, they will know that the man involved will be a good man to start with and will not be some criminal who has just been released from prison after having robbed a bank.

The first proviso under subsection (b) of section 704 permits the making of voluntary agreements between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done directly on the site of construction.

This proviso is intended to permit what is now lawful and deals only with situations where there is a contractor-subcontractor relationship and not to situations where there is no privity of contract between two or more contractors on a particular site, such as in the case of cocontractors, each having direct contracts with the owner.

Section 705 relates to prehire agreements in the building and construction industry. During the Senate debate in 1958 on S. 3974, which contained a similar provision, a colloquy took place between Senator HOLLAND and Senator KENNEDY as to the correct interpretation of the provision as it related to such prehire contracts. I am in full accord with the statements which Senator KENNEDY made during that particular colloquy as to the proper interpretation to be placed on that provision and I believe that interpretation is equally applicable to section 705 of the bill we are considering today. The colloquy between Senator HOLLAND and Senator KENNEDY to which I have referred, is reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 16, 1958, volume 104, part 9, page 11308, and reads as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, my constituents are expressing concern as a result of some difficulty with the interpretation, at least, on their part, of the provisions of section 604(a).

Accordingly, we have prepared a question and an answer which have been agreed upon between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] and myself. We hope this will clarify the matter. So I shall appreciate it if the Senator from Massachusetts will yield for a question at this time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Was it the intention of the committee that section 604(a) shall require employers to enter into prehire agreements where the union had not been the recognized or certified bargaining agent of the employees involved?

Mr. KENNEDY. I shall answer the Senator from Florida as follows—and it is my intention, by so answering, to establish the legislative history on this question: It was not the intention of the committee to require by section 604(a) the making of prehire agreements, but, rather, to permit them; nor was it the intention of the committee to authorize a labor organization to strike, picket, or otherwise coerce an employer to sign a prehire agreement where the majority status of the union had not been established. The purpose of this section is to permit voluntary prehire agreements. This is because of the inability to conduct representation elections in the construction industry.

Other Members will go somewhat into detail on various matters, and of course they will be in a position to answer questions that are asked. But let me say this. This has been the roughest assignment I have had in my many years in the House. I think we have done a good job. I think this bill is going to be approved by the American people. When I say the American people, I think it is going to be approved by the rank and file of labor and eventually by the leaders of organized labor because they have much at stake. The good name of labor was in jeopardy. I think this will do a lot to restore it and eventually I think they, too, will applaud the action of Congress in passing this bill.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARENDS. I simply want to take a moment to express to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN], to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KEARNS], and to every one of the conferees my appreciation and I think the appreciation of most of the Members of the House, for the splendid job, for the excellent work the conferees of the House did on this bill under the most trying circumstances. I will say to the gentleman that I think he is to be highly commended for his work, as is each and every one of the conferees.

Mr. BARDEN. I am sure the members of the Committee of Conference are, and certainly I myself am, very grateful for those kind remarks. I think I can truthfully say for everyone on the committee, we did our best. That is all anyone can do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] has consumed 8 minutes.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

QUESTION: WHO WRITES OUR LAWS?—ANSWER: THE PEOPLE, WHEN AROUSED

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious to those of us who have watched the proceedings that what is said here today will not change any votes. The bill will receive an overwhelming majority.

"Who Writes Our Laws?" That was the title of a short talk made by me from the well of the House on July 27 last.

The answer was given by the House on August 14, when Congressmen, having been given an opportunity to consider the terms of the legislation adopted the night before by a majority of 28, to again go over the letters from home which were in their files, seized the opportunity—and perhaps in part because of the exposé by Peter Edson of political contributions made to Congressmen—to demonstrate their independence and the fact that, when the people were aroused, they are truly the people's lawmakers, will respond to their constituents' demand. They did just that by giving a majority of 178 for the pending legislation, instead of the majority of 28 given the day before.

Last night, the Senate likewise demonstrated its willingness to give the people, by a vote of 95 to 2, the answer to my question as to who writes our law.

When the chips are down, the people through their Representative, write the law, though sometimes many individuals must be grievously hurt before they insist their public servants conscientiously perform their duty.

Scientists have made wondrous progress. Today we hear and we see individuals on the other side of the world, but human nature remains much the same.

One of my earliest pleasures was to hear the blare of the cornet and the boom of the drum, as the parade came within sight and hearing. No time was wasted by me in joining in at the tail, and today politicians and statesmen hesitate not at all when the people who elect them, who place them in office, insist that a certain thing be done.

Yesterday, to my desk came a letter from the gentleman from Pennsylvania

[Mr. KEARNS].[1] After advising that I would be permitted to speak when the bill again came before the House, and being told over the phone that I would be given 5 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania wrote:

However, I would like to advise you that no doubt Mr. AYRES, Mr. GRIFFIN, and myself who have sat in the conference, might be in a better position to go into the details of the legislation.

That, it may be assumed, was a directive that, because of my lack of knowledge of what was in the conference report, I refrain from discussing in detail the terms of the report.

It is freely conceded by me that the gentlemen named have a far greater knowledge of what they were trying to do than does your humble servant.

It may be permissible, however, to call attention to the fact that I have, on occasion, not only read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the newspapers, many of the hearings of the McClellan committee and, as late as yesterday, was given a press release written by the gentleman from Arizona, Senator GOLDWATER,[2] who, as he was one of them, has at least some knowledge of the accomplishments of the conferees. It was also my privilege to hear much of last night's debate in the Senate and to read the RECORD of this morning.

While my knowledge as to what is in the report of the conferees may be somewhat vague and limited, as is suggested by my delightful colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. KEARNS], because it was my privilege to, in April of 1937, introduce a bill which contained what might be called a bill of rights, and subsequently, to write and introduce approximately 135 so-called labor bills and to,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., September 3, 1959.

Hon. CLARE E. HOFFMAN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CLARE: The conferees' bill on labor-management reform legislation, known as the Kennedy-Landrum-Griffin bill, will either hit the floor of the House tomorrow or go over until Tuesday or Wednesday of next week. This decision will depend largely on whether or not the Senate wraps it up today.

As you well know, each side has 30 minutes for debate and I want to extend the privilege to each and every person on our side of the committee to have time. However, I would like to advise you that no doubt Mr. AYRES, Mr. GRIFFIN, and myself, who have sat in on the conference, might be in a better position to go into the details of the legislation.

Please let me know by telephone if you wish time and I will schedule it for you.

Always,

CARROLL D. KEARNS.

P. S.—I will make the request that all Members will have 5 days to extend their remarks.

[2] Statement of Senator BARRY GOLDWATER on Senate floor on adoption of conference report with Landrum-Griffin provisions, September 3, 1959:

"Mr. President, as one of the Senate conferees who sat for 12 days in the conference on the labor bill between the House and Senate, I am pleased we have reached agreement on a bill which, I believe, will not only merit overwhelming approval of both Houses of Congress, but most of all, will fully meet the demand that the American people have emphatically made upon us for the enactment of a strong and effective labor reform bill.

"Mr. President, the conference report before us today carries out, in substance, all of the recommendations contained in the McClellan committee interim report of March, 1958. In addition, this conference report contains provisions which strike at the heart of the racketeering, hoodlumism and gangsterism in the union movement so dramatically revealed during the 2½ years of hearings held by the McClellan committee.

"First, I would like to read to the Senate the five legislative recommendations made in the first interim report. These recommendations are:

"1. LEGISLATION TO REGULATE AND CONTROL PENSION, HEALTH, AND WELFARE FUNDS

"Last year Congress enacted a bill to require filing of reports on the management of union pension and welfare funds. This year, using the Landrum-Griffin bill's language, we require bonding of officials who handle all union funds, requiring of them high standards of fiduciary responsibility. I will explain this in connection with the next McClellan committee recommendation.

"2. LEGISLATION TO REGULATE AND CONTROL UNION FUNDS

"In four major areas, the bill which we agreed to in conference gives full force and meaning to the McClellan committee recommendation for the regulation and control of union funds, by the adoption of provisions in the Landrum-Griffin House passed bill.

"We deleted the Senate provision granting an exemption from reporting for small unions because the McClellan committee report made no distinction between large and small unions and, in fact, some of the worst abuses uncovered involved smaller unions. Thus, under the conference bill, members of small locals are given the same opportunity to know how their money is being spent as are members of large unions.

"We dropped the provision in the Senate bill which would have required only those union officers and employees receiving more than $5,000 a year from the union to report any conflict-of-interest transactions in which they may be involved. We agreed to the House provision requiring all officers and employees to report conflicts-of-interest transactions because it is our belief that the Senate provision would have created a major loophole by means of which the crooks and shady operators could have evaded the filing requirements to the detriment of the honest union members.

"While both the Senate and House bills contained a provision requiring every union officer who handles funds or property to be bonded, the Senate bill would have permitted blanket bonding with a maximum bond of $250,000. The House provision was much stricter, requiring personal bonding of not less than 10 percent of the amount handled by the union officer. An additional safeguard of the House provision prohibited the placing of the bond with a surety company in which an officer or employee of the union had any interest. The conferees originally agreed to the House provision but subsequently adopted an amendment which I offered, striking out the 10-percent minimum and making the maximum amount $500,000. There are many unions with pension and welfare funds totaling hundreds of millions of dollars. To require a bond of 10 percent of such funds would be unrealistic and burdensome.

"A further strengthening provision of the House bill which the conferees adopted dealt with the fiduciary responsibility imposed upon union officers. The McClellan committee recommendations on regulation and control of union funds specifically stated that:

"'Since union-dues moneys, as well as health and welfare funds, are in actuality a trust, being held for the members of the union by their officers, the committee feels that attention should be given to placing certain restrictions on the use of these funds, such as are now imposed on banks and other institutions which act as repositories and administrators for trust funds.

"'This type of legislation, in the committee's opinion, would go a long way toward preventing wholesale misappropriation and misuse of union funds such as that disclosed by committee testimony.'

"While the Senate bill imposed a fiduciary responsibility upon union officers, the House bill in addition gave the union member a right to bring suit in court against a union officer to recover damages growing out of a breach of fiduciary responsibility.

"3. LEGISLATION TO INSURE UNION DEMOCRACY

"While both bills effectively carried out this recommendation, the conferees adopted a very important provision contained in the House bill. It guarantees to every bona fide candidate for union office the right to inspect a list containing the names and addresses of all members of the union who are covered by a union-shop contract. Such a provision, in my opinion, is a long stride forward in equalizing the balance between candidates running for union office, now so heavily weighted on the side of incumbents.

"4. LEGISLATION TO CURB ACTIVITIES OF MIDDLEMEN IN LABOR-MANAGEMENT DISPUTES

"In this area, both the Senate and House bills, by requiring detailed reports from employers and labor relations consultants, effectively controls the Shefferman-type operation spotlighted by the McClellan committee. We borrowed language from both bills in order to achieve our desired objective.

"5. LEGISLATION TO CLARIFY THE 'NO MAN'S LAND' IN LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

"The McClellan committee was very explicit in recommending that—

"'The NLRB should exercise its jurisdiction to the greatest extent practicable, and, further, that any State or Territory should be authorized to assume and assert jurisdiction over labor disputes over which the Board declines jurisdiction.'

"The Senate bill attempted to solve the 'no man's land' problem by allowing State labor relations boards (but not State courts) to take jurisdiction over cases declined by the NLRB. The State board, however, would have to apply Federal law. Only 12 States have labor boards and even those States would have to pass legislation allowing the board to apply Federal law. Obviously, this treatment of the 'no man's land' offered no solution to the problem.

"The House provision, which was agreed to by the conferees, specifically carries out the recommendation of the McClellan committee by authorizing State labor boards and courts to assume jurisdiction and apply State law in cases over which the NLRB declines to assert jurisdiction. The conferees added a provision requiring the NLRB to continue to take cases meeting its present standards.

"Secondary boycotts, 'hot cargo' agreements, and recognition and organizational picketing

"Some of the most shocking of the revelations of the McClellan committee involve the use of secondary boycotts and recognition and organizational picketing as a weapon of extortion, terror, and intimidation. Many small 'main street' businessmen were forced to their knees by the use of these as chairman of a subcommittee, or ranking member of such a committee, participate in some 16 hearings, 68 days in different cities, it will be conceded, I hope, that I have some slight knowledge, not necessarily of what is in this bill, but of what should be in it.

The bill is not a tough bill in the sense that it unduly restrains the right of an individual or of a labor union. A bill which would be tough in that sense is neither needed, nor wanted, by fair-minded individuals.

Many needed restraints to curb the criminal activities of those who have found sanctuary and opportunity for extortion in labor organizations, and their misuse and abuse of special legislative privileges granted labor, can be found in either State or Federal law.

But, as always, shrewd, able lawyers have been able to find loopholes through which to slip a client. It is those unanticipated ways of escape which the Congress must continuously seek to close. That is one of the purposes of this bill.

Present evil practices by so-called labor leaders who in no sense represent the union have become intolerable primarily because of lack of enforcement of existing State and Federal legislation. However, as was made clear in the Senate debate last night, some additional legal restraints are needed if the security of the Nation is to be protected, the right of the individual maintained.

While the proposed legislation does not contain adequate restraints which will fully protect the people, it is a long, long step toward the desired goal. Just as the laws which punish robbery and murder do not end either, so this bill will not end the misuse or abuse of union power.

THERE MUST BE ENFORCEMENT

The Lindbergh law was designed to prevent kidnaping. We have stringent laws against rape. Yet, within the week, here on the streets of the Nation's Capital, two young women employees of the FBI were kidnaped and raped. Enactment of laws is not an answer—just the road toward a desired end.

Legislation does not prevent crime. Neither does it automatically bring about a desired objective or situation. There must be adequate enforcement.

We should, nevertheless, make an effort to, as completely as possible through legislation, and, of equal importance, its enforcement, continue our efforts to minimize and possibly cure the present evil practices brought to public notice by the McClellan committee and publicized by press, radio, and TV.

In the debate last night, the Senator from Arkansas, Senator MCCLELLAN, among other things, said:

> If this legislation won't stop the Hoffas and the Bridges, then there is only one alternative—place the transportation unions in this country under the antitrust laws.

An amendment to do just that was offered by me in the House when the present bill was under consideration on August 13. I was given just 54 seconds to discuss it.

Two bills, H.R. 7331 and H.R. 7332, doing just what the Senator suggested, were introduced—one on May 5, the other on May 21, 1958—both reintroduced this year—but ignored by both the House committee and by the House on August 13, 1958.

When we were writing the Taft-Hartley law, at one time we had in it a provision designed to prevent nationwide, industrywide bargaining.

When the draft of the bill came up for final consideration, on the insistence of the then Republican leader, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] in spite of my violent protest, that provision was stricken.

Had that provision been included in the Taft-Hartley Act, and enforced, it would have been a deterrent to Hoffa's recent boast that, if denied his demands, he, Bridges, and their associates might tie up nationwide transportation.

There would appear to be no sound reason why those provisions making antimonpoly laws applicable to unions should not now be in this bill.

The bill also fails to carry an offered provision designed to prevent strikes and work stoppages in public utilities. The need has time and again been demonstrated several times here in Washington.

Another provision, that preventing the extracting of involuntary contributions from union members for political purposes of which they do not approve, should be in the books.

Public approval of all three of these provisions was existent. The votes were available, had the leaders of the coalition been willing to accept them, as they were urged. Under the circumstances, it is impossible for me to see any other reason except that of political expediency for the refusal to accept them.

Overall, the present bill is probably as effective a bill as can now be written, and it will undoubtedly be passed by the House with an overwhelming majority. It should not, however, be assumed that it will of itself end the practices of which the people now so vigorously complain. It must be followed by enforcement which has, in connection with present legislation, been intolerably lacking in some sections of the country.

The Kennedys, the Senator from Arkansas, Senator MCCLELLAN, the Senator from Arizona, Senator GOLDWATER, as well as a host of others, are to be commended for the consistency and the vigor they have shown in now translating into legislation some of the complaints and demands of our people. Equality under the law rather than political expediency should be the present political slogan.

While many are now claiming credit for the enactment of the bill now before us, honesty compels the statement that it was not until public hearings, given publicity, brought about an aroused public demand that justice be done that the Congress even undertook consideration of the present measure. Its adoption by an overwhelming vote forces the admission that the people still rule. Even the tactics and were either forced out of business or else succumbed to the unions' demands. In all such cases the interests and desires of the employees involved as to whether they wished to be unionized were never considered.

"The people of this country have reacted to this sordid condition and have expressed themselves in no uncertain terms in one of the greatest avalanches of mail from irate constitutents Congressmen and Senators have ever received. The demand is uniform—they want immediate relief from this exercise of coercive power.

"The House bill carried out this mandate by closing up the loopholes in secondary boycotts and by banning recognition and organizational picketing. With some clarifying provisions, the conferees adopted the House bill on secondary boycotts, 'hot cargo' agreements and recognition and organizational picketing.

"The Senate bill did not deal with the subject of secondary boycotts. The House bill, however, closed up every loophole in the boycott section of the law including the use of a secondary consumer picket line, an example of which the President gave on his nationwide TV program on August 6.

"Only 'hot cargo' agreements between a union and a common carrier were banned by the Senate bill; the House bill extended this ban to all unions and employers by making them illegal, unenforcible and void. Because of the persuasive arguments made our colleagues, Senators JAVITS, KEATING, and SCOTT, the Republican conferees were persuaded to support the addition of a provision exempting the garment industry from the prohibitions on boycotts and 'hot cargo' agreements.

"In the field of recognition and organizational picketing, the Senate bill prohibited picketing for these purposes for 9 months after an election or when another union had been certified or lawfully recognized. This was all. The Landrum-Griffin bill went further—it restricted picketing unless the union could show a 30-percent interest among the employees and then allowed it only for a reasonable period of time, not exceeding 30 days. The conferees adopted the substance of the House provisions except for the 30 percent showing of interest requirement.

"All in all, the sentiment expressed so overwhelmingly by the House in approving the Landrum-Griffin bill was again manifested by the conference which adopted the basic Landrum-Griffin bill with a few clarifications and modifications. The bill that we have agreed upon carries out President Eisenhower's urgent request for labor reform legislation.

"The bill carries out not only the recommendations of the McClellan committee, but it also reflects the provisions of Senator MCCLELLAN's own bill which was used as a guide in drafting the Landrum-Griffin measure substantially adopted by the conference.

"Mr. President, at the time of passage by the Senate of the Kennedy-Ervin bill, I cast the lone negative vote. At that time I declared that the bill would mislead the public into the false belief that adequate measures had been adopted to cope with the evils they abhor.

"I contended, in voting at that time, that I did not choose to be a party to this deception. I also declared that I regarded it as my duty, not only as a Senator, but as an American citizen to enlighten the public to the facts of the matter.

"Therefore, Mr. President, I am extremely gratified with the events of the past few weeks. I applaud the work of the House, the response of the public, the encouragement of the President, and the efforts of the joint conferees in recognizing the need for adequate labor reform legislation.

"We have now succeeded in putting together a bill which is a victory for the American people and for organized labor itself when we consider that organized labor is the workingman."

master political strategists now cry "me too."

May the enforcement agencies of State and Nation follow through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HARRIS). The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WIER].

Mr. WIER. Mr. Speaker, I have lived with this legislation in this session since early in March. I sat on the subcommittee through all of the hearings and participated in the executive sessions of the full committee in the writing of this bill. I wish I could take a more encouraging position but I find it impossible. When this bill, the so-called Landrum-Griffin bill, was before the House I found it impossible to support it and opposed it. I had some hope that when the bill came back from the conference of the 14 conferees that some improvements and realizations could be made in the final bill. But as this conference report comes to us here today I find little if any substance in the way of changes. There was some language in the bill that passed the House that was not quite in order. There were some interpretations to be made, to be sure; but as this report comes to us here this morning for the acceptance or rejection of the House in its final form, I repeat, there have not been the changes that I expected and hoped would be made. Therefore I want to say to the world that I just cannot accept this bill, nor can I vote for it, because to me, individually, on behalf of the movement I have been associated with for so long, it is an antiunion bill, call it what you will.

We started out on a theme song in March and that was: "Get Hoffa. Perfect the laws to cure some of the evils and some of the abuses of trust that were involved in his high office. But it was not long before we found the program as enunciated over a year ago by the National Chamber of Commerce, the National Manufacturers Association, the American Farm Bureau Association, the American Retail Trade Association, all of them following the same trend and the same line of legislative objectives. All of those objectives except two—they were uniformly presented around the Nation—all of those objectives except two, if I remember correctly, are now a part of this bill.

I have been associated with an international union, as I have said before on this floor, since 1914; that is 45 years. My international union is made up of little local unions all over the United States, and in one of the jurisdictions of my international is the motion picture operators, small locals all over the United States, with the exception, of course, of the big urban centers. Those are the unions that are going to be deeply affected by the procedures and the severe restrictions that they are limited to under this bill.

This is a curbing bill; this is a bill taking away the most effective economic weapons the worker has in his trials and tribulations of trying to get his fair share of the production created in the plant in which he works. Let me say to you there are on the floor here a lot of people pondering what they are going to do when the roll is called—if there is going to be a rollcall, and I hope there will. I know that many of you hope to be able to perpetuate yourself here. I did not come here to perpetuate myself in office. I came here to live and let live.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. Speaker, may I say to those who are in doubt as to where you stand, I will use myself as an example. I have a lot of antiunion employers in the city in which I live. They have not all become angels yet. And may I say to you that the record was made here for me and those of you who voted pro and con. In my next election those in industry and my Republican opponent which I am bound to have, will point to the vote of August 12, Wednesday, August 12. That was the vote of 201 to 229. That is the vote, not the vote on final passage, not the vote on this formality of passing a conference report. It will be on the vote that you have already cast.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Members of this House should certainly consider the full meaning of the conference report which we are going to vote on today. I would like to go behind the real purpose and intent of the Landrum-Griffin bill on the economy of the Nation.

Some of the questions you must answer and I hope that you will consider them before casting your vote.

Should our income be cut to meet Southern States demands for cheap labor? Shall we permit southern Democrats and northern Republicans to destroy our unions? Here are some comparisons:

Per capita income for 10 southern right-to-work States for 1954

Alabama	$1,359
Arkansas	1,228
Florida	1,876
Georgia	1,487
Mississippi	1,053
North Carolina	1,384
South Carolina	1,218
Tennessee	1,439
Texas	1,814
Virginia	1,674

Percentage of draftees disqualified by mental tests and physical tests for 1957 in our 10 southern right-to-work States

Alabama	42.6
Arkansas	32.1
Florida	31.3
Georgia	37.0
Mississippi	49.9
North Carolina	32.4
South Carolina	49.8
Tennessee	28.9
Texas	23.1
Virginia	31.9

Would you, as a resident of the Northern States like to have your per capita income lowered to the above standard or your educational facilities lowered to the extent that such a percentage would be turned down for the draft because of illiteracy?

In my own State of Pennsylvania the per capita income for 1958 was $2,127 and the percentage turned down for the draft was 9.5.

There was plenty of nationwide publicity given to this so-called "labor reform" bill. The press was full of it. The newscasts—sponsored by big industry—covered it continually. The television gave the President free time to endorse and request its passage. But only one side of the story was heard.

In a recent column by Drew Pearson the explanation for the President's endorsement was revealed. He stated that "personal friends of the President—who are members of industry active in the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, and national right-to-work organizations—have convinced him that he should stay out of the present steel strike controversy so the steel companies can give the union a defeat it will not soon forget." Pearson further pointed out these individuals contributed $214,250 to Mr. Eisenhower's 1956 campaign for reelection, and he lists as follows:

National Steel, with Mr. George M. Humphrey, contributing $37,200. Republic Steel, with Mesrs. James Black and George Allen contributing $16,300. United States Steel, with the executives of that company contributing $26,800. Armco Steel, with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Payson, Mr. Kenneth Spencer, and other officers, contributing $96,450. Bethlehem Steel, with its executives, contributing $8,750. Inland Steel, with Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Ryerson, contributing $3,150. Jones & Laughlin, with its executives, contributing $25,800.

This all ties in together when you stop to think that should this bill be enacted into law the public will wake up and discover it is not labor reforming, but, rather, labor deforming, for the following points are included in it:

First. The right to organize would be denied the southern workers, and would naturally react upon those in the North.

Second. Improvements of inadequate unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation laws, and other fringe benefits in Southern States would be blocked, thus undermining the standards long established for working men and women in our own State of Pennsylvania and other Northern States.

Third. It would deny freedom of speech to union members in efforts to appeal to the public for assistance in winning fair labor standards, and this raises a question of constitutionality.

Fourth. It would weaken, if not destroy, voluntary machinery for settling jurisdictional disputes, successfully supported for over a decade by both employers and unions.

Fifth. It would turn over to States the so-called no man's land problem, undermining a national labor policy and imposing complex labor problems on States which have no established machinery—only four States have—for handling them.

Sixth. It fails to correct inequitable provisions of the Labor Act which prohibits economic strikers to vote in Labor Board representation elections, a provision which has been called union busting by our esteemed President who endorsed this bill apparently without reading it.

Let me assure you that I was—and still am—in favor of the original purpose of the so-called labor reform legislation that was to eliminate crooks and racketeers in both labor and management.

The Shelley bill—for which I was a cosponsor—did this, and I voted for it. The Landrum-Griffin bill does not do this, and I voted against it. The Landrum-Griffin bill penalizes the very people it is alleged to protect—the rank-and-file members of labor unions.

The Landrum-Griffin bill was passed by a coalition of southern Democrats and northern Republicans. The reason is not too difficult to find when you look at the economic picture.

One of the sponsors comes from Georgia. His State is one of the 19 States which have so-called right-to-work laws. Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Mississippi, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia also have these right-to-work laws; and the Congressmen from these States almost unanimously supported the Landrum-Griffin bill.

In Georgia, laws prohibit mass picketing. In Alabama, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas there is no compulsory law for workmen's compensation. Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas have no minimum wage law. Arkansas, the home of the great defender of the laboring man, has a minimum wage law; it is 16 cents per hour.

The South has been luring industries from the North by bragging of their tax advantages and vacant plants and their supply of cheap labor. They want to keep it that way and prevent organized labor from going into the South and raising the living standards, the wages, providing more education for the masses, and improving the general welfare of the citizens of those States. That is their idea of labor reform.

A mayor of a city in Mississippi wrote to a northern manufacturer as follows:

> No one will tell you whom you must employ. All detrimental State laws for industrial operations have been repealed. The closed union shop in Mississippi has been outlawed. Industrial wages are from 50 cents to 95 cents an hour below Northern States.

This conference report will guarantee the continuation of cheap labor and unbelievably poor working conditions for the workers. The northern Republican Congressmen—who voted for this bill—apparently want to see those same conditions and wages exist in our State and all Northern States also.

I am forced to vote against the conference report, as the changes still do not make it a good bill.

The American labor movement has been continuously under investigation for the past 5 years and, while isolated cases representing a very small segment of the labor movement, have been found guilty of wrongdoing, it must be realized this corruption did not and could not exist in a vacuum. It is a part of a pattern that is deeply rooted in the ethical deterioration of business and industry in our country today.

This deeper corruption of our business society is well known, but as yet it has not been investigated nor any attempt made to correct it. It would seem that legislation should be drawn to correct the $5 billion which—according to Life magazine—normally changes hands among businessmen and industrialists in the form of kickbacks, payoffs, and bribes every year.

Today class legislation against the labor segment of our Government is being considered and possibly enacted; tomorrow another Congress can just as easily legislate against business and industry, the other segment of our Government, with a different type of class legislation.

This is not a threat. It is common sense. If the pendulum swings too far one way it is bound to swing just as far the other way.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HIESTAND].

Mr. HIESTAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to second the tribute of our minority whip, to the conferees and to the committee, especially to the sponsors, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANDRUM] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GRIFFIN] but more especially than all to the chairman of a great committee, a great chairman.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] sat through all of these meetings and all these sessions. I was a member of the subcommittee and I was present at practically all of the sessions.

I want to tell the House, Mr. Speaker, this statesmanship on the part of the gentleman from North Carolina was superb.

I rise to pay tribute also to our minority leader on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KEARNS]. A large part of the harmony that ensued in our committee, and it was a bipartisan proposition right straight through, was due to the magnificent leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KEARNS].

Mr. Speaker, this is the House bill 98 percent. This is the bill that the House passed with a thumping and decisive majority of 229 on the first vote and 303 on the final vote. It is essentially a bipartisan bill.

Mr. Speaker, I recommend this House bill. As mild as it is, it is a good step in the right direction. It will help drive out, or at least reform, some of the crooks and racketeers. It will give power to union members that will enable them to clean out some of the dictator bosses. It is the very best we could do, and it is a good start. But we should act today with full knowledge that passage of the Landrum-Griffin bill will not solve every problem. The heart of the problem, the very heart, is the sheer power in the hands of labor union leaders due to their above-the-law status with respect to our antimonopoly laws.

This peculiar exemption to basic law plus certain Supreme Court decisions, are back of State and local law enforcement agencies' failure to protect our citizens from abuse by labor racketeers. Every State has laws against extortion, conspiracy, robbery, blackmail, assault, and so forth. But organized labor, in effect, has many times been treated as though immune to these laws.

Some sheriffs no doubt, ignore union misdeeds for political reasons. But mainly, officers have been told not to "take sides" in labor disputes because of the confusion and frustration surrounding previous attempts to hold them responsible for their crimes. And the confusion and frustration is based on their special relationship to the law.

We should now direct our attention to this problem. In my judgment, it should be the first order of business at the next session. In the meantime, the Landrum-Griffin bill, distinctly a workers' bill, will be a lasting tribute to the 86th Congress because it is for the rank and file union members and the public. It deserves a unanimous vote. I hope it will get it.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN].

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to join in the congratulations to all the conferees on this report. As an editorial in today's New York Times puts it, the conference committee has done a conspicuous service to the public and to honest democratic unionism in sweating out a labor reform bill. Sweating it out is what the conference committee has been through. Theirs was a difficult and delicate task. They have done what I am sure we all recognize is a remarkable job. Legislation in this field is not easy to develop. Still more difficult is the reconciliation of widely differing views which has been achieved. This is an accomplishment of the first magnitude.

The House conferees especially, in my opinion, are to be commended for their steadfastness in sticking to the basic principles of the Landrum-Griffin bill. This conference report represents essentially what the House passed. There may be some Members who regret that more major changes were not made in the bill as passed by the House, but, in my opinion, that is one of the basic reasons why we should be thankful that we have before us this conference report today.

As a member of the Education and Labor Committee, I should like to say also, now that the miracle has occurred, that I would never have been presumptuous enough last January to predict that we would be enacting such constructive and substantial legislation. No one expects perfection in a law of this kind, and as it is now before us it represents a compromise of varying views as to what needs to be done. Nonetheless, it is a landmark, representing unquestionably the major legislative achievement of this session. I am convinced, as we gain experience under this new law, that all segments of our population will benefit. Despite the hostile criticism from some quarters it is my conviction that our great organized labor movement will also benefit.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, the enactment of an effective labor-management reform bill will be remembered as a great achievement of the 1st session of the 86th Congress. For that reason, I do not want this occasion to pass without extending a personal word of praise, and a heartfelt thank you, to the members of the Conference Committee who worked long and hard to ultimately produce this sound bill.

I never believed that the differences between the House-passed bill and the legislation approved by the other body were insurmountable—but I realized that nevertheless they were substantial. And along with many other Americans, I knew that the emergence of a sound bill depended on the good faith and capacities of the men chosen to settle these differences.

For 12 days as these men worked together, the people of our country waited for word on the labor bill. Now it can be said that the people are the beneficiaries of the work of the conference. And so I say to the men on both sides of the aisle and in both legislative chambers: Well done. I believe our country has cause to be grateful to you for the hours you devoted and the work you accomplished.

The results of the conference are plain to see. Ninety-five percent of the measure authored by my distinguished colleagues, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANDRUM] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GRIFFIN], was retained, as well it might, because the House bill provided a sound approach to labor-management reform.

In addition, the bill as agreed to in conference clarifies questions which have arisen as it affects the building and trades unions—protecting their rights in the event of farmed-out work and permitting prehire agreements requiring union membership after 7 days' employment.

Those who stand to gain most from the bill are working men and women themselves. For the bill outlines their equal rights, as union members, to the conduct of their union affairs. It guarantees freedom of speech and assembly. It specifies their protection against arbitrary increase of dues. It stresses their right to take court action to protect their rights. It safeguards their right against improper disciplinary action.

Free union elections—freely conducted—are guaranteed by this bill as is protection of union funds. Machinery is now at hand to enable union members to remove dishonest officials. Protection of economic strikers has been granted and regulation of trusteeships has been specified.

In addition, certainly title VII of the bill provides the best solution to the "no man's land" troubles which have been plaguing the labor movement—granting union members and employers a court remedy to enforce rights under the law and the opportunity to gain recourse through a State court or agency when the NLRB refuses to take jurisdiction.

Certainly the bill can be praised for its provisions which close all the secondary boycott loopholes. It deals effectively with blackmail picketing but does not prevent justifiable organizational picketing or protest picketing.

Because this bill accomplishes much for the labor movement, rank-and-file union members, and the cause of sound labor-management relations, I feel that it should be described to the Nation as just the bill it is: a labor-management relations bill which is in line with the free processes of our Republic, a bill of which all the people can be proud.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in the tributes being paid here today by commending the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN], by saying that he has shown great patience, understanding, and endurance. We have not agreed on details, but this is part of the legislative process and, indeed, the way in which our system has always worked.

Particular tribute is due the junior Senator from Massachusetts, JOHN F. KENNEDY, who was chairman of the joint conference. I have long admired Senator KENNEDY, and have realized what great talents he possesses. The high regard which I have for him was more than fully justified by his magnificent performance under the most difficult and exacting conditions of the conference. My estimation of his performance is, I am sure, shared by each and every member of the conference, for all expressed similar sentiments when our work was finished. The junior Senator from Massachusetts has proven beyond all doubt that he is a legislator of the highest quality. I am grateful to him for his leadership and courage, and I am sure that the American people are equally grateful to this truly great statesman.
